"West Side Story" (UA) has completed its 46th and last week on moveover at the Biarritz. The Italian "Boccaccio '70" is in the 19th week at the Ideal while "Hatari" (Par) has done nine weeks at the Metro. "A Touch of Mink" (U) still is socko on longrun at the Ambassador.

'West' Opens

Opening on April 26 at the Casino was "How West Was Won" (MGM). "Counterfeit Traitor" (Par) completed 13 weeks on first-run.

The most talked of picture running at present is Orson Welles' "The Trial," running day-date at the Ocean and Libertador. "40 Lbs of Trouble" (U) was also released recently.

Rubinstein Concert In Holland for Germans

Nijmegen, May 7.

Artur Rubinstein, 77-year-old pianist, gave an unusual concert here in Holland—for a German audience. And nearly all the seats were sold. Rubinstein vowed never again to set foot in Germany, but in response to many requests, arranged this concert in a Dutch village near the German border.

In the 1,400-seat hall, 600 tickets were sold in advance to Germans at $5 apiece, through a German concert agency. An additional 200 tickets were sold at the door to Dutch concert-goers.

Two nights later, he gave a concert in Amsterdam, with tickets going at half the price.

Donn's Culture Kick On TV Specials: Gielgud, 'Hollow Crown,' Royal Ballet

In the area of specials next season, CBS-TV's programming v.p. Mike Donn is making a concerted effort for individual outings which fall into the cultural category. Latest example of that thrust is "Hollow Crown," a legiter, negotiations for which are close to completion.

Donn's thinking is that it's nigh impossible to top a Danny Kaye, Judy Garland, and the other names of weekly web outings next season. There will be some specials geared for mass tastes such as "Calamity Jane," "Elizabeth Taylor's London," and the possibility of Bing Crosby specials.

At the same time, though, there will be cultural specials, each of which are falling in line, as the season draws closer. For Donn, the cultural kick represents a thrust in another direction, the only alternative for a star-studded schedule.

First to be lined up was the Royal Ballet telecast, followed by the Peter Ustinov, Anthony Quinn original drama, "Velvet Knife." Leftover for telecasting next season is Ibsen's "Hedda Gabbler," starring Ingrid Bergman.

Negotiations are close to contract on "Hollow Crown" (recently on Broadway) recounting the history of England as related by the kings and queens of the realm, as told by poets, playwrights and authors. The 90-minute outing would star Paul Scofield, making his American tv debut, and Dorothy Tutin. It would be produced by David Susskind and would represent another coproduction with British Home Television, the pay tv outfit of Britian also partnered on "Velvet Knife" and the Royal Ballet.

Donn also would like to do "Ages of Man," starring Sir John Gielgud, negotiations for which have opened. Returning for another season probably will be Leonard Bernstein's "Young People's Concerts." The Bernstein adult concerts, though, in all probability will not be back. (Last season the Bernstein-N.Y. Philharmonic concerts in the main were repeats).

CBS 'Easy Aces' For Goody, Cara

Goodman Ace (and wife Jane's) old radio series, "Easy Aces," may be reactivated as a tv series for CBS, designed for the '64-'65 schedule. New series, when and if, would be minus the services of Jane Ace, but instead is being projected as a half-hour weekly starring vehicle for Cara Williams, who is under contract to the network.

It's being envisioned as a Sheldon Leonard production, with Goody Ace scripting. Since it would originate on the Coast, it would necessitate Ace transplanting himself to Hollywood. (For the past few years he's been chief writer on the Perry Como show; for '63-'64 he'll be scripting the Sid Caesar series on ABC-TV.)

Gisele MacKenzie, actress-songstress, joins Caesar as a permanent member of the cast of his bi-weekly show next season. Greg Garrison was signed as producer-director.

Lou White's Coast Slot

Hollywood, May 7.

Lou White resigned from J. Walter Thompson after 12 years to join CBS-TV in Hollywood May 15 as program development director and assistant to veepee Hunt Stromberg.

Previously with 20th-Fox and Metro in story and publicity depts., he had charge of literary material and talent for Lux Theatre both radio-tv while at JWT. In later years was program development director.

NBC 'Classroom' Axed; Maybe CBS 'College of Air'

"Continental Classroom" ends this season and it's entirely possible that this week will also end in definite plans to cancel the rival educational strip on CBS-TV.

CBS-TV's early morning "College of the Air" will probably get axed, the way things look now. Network said that the strip's future depends on the course to be offered by the Learning Resources Institute, which is now hard pressed for the cash to complete a new series of productions for next season.

LRI, which in the past has been able to supply much of its programming content because of a grant from the Ford Foundation, is no longer getting that kind of aid. An LRI spokesman said that part of the problem is financing and part of it "is what CBS wants to do." Spokesman said a decision is due this week.

LRI has been associated with CBS the last two years and has produced credit courses in biology and American economy. It is held to be possible that repeats of one or the other will be okayed by CBS, enabling "College" to continue through '63-'64.

Before going to CBS, LRI did the NBC "Classroom" show, but shifted webs when NBC was unable to meet time requirements for distribution of the program set by the Institute. American Assn. of Colleges for Teacher Education inherited the "Continental" production mantle at NBC two years ago.

NBC said that the program was being cancelled after five years and gave two basic reasons: "the grave emergency (i.e. Russia's Sputnik launching) which existed in 1958 has been alleviated"; the number of educational tv stations in the country has increased, meaning, according to NBC, that there is now something of an overlap in educational services.

NBC was quick to note that despite the end of "Classroom" as the 6:30 weekday morning entry, the five tv stations, owned and operated by the company, are "exploring the possibility of doing some educational programming of their own," to replace "Continental Classroom." However, no echo decisions have been reached.

717 TROMBONES TUNE UP SALUTE

By GEORGE ROSEN

Not that he's expecting it, but if CBS-TV prexy Jim Aubrey walks into the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel tomorrow (Thurs.) for the opening of the affiliate convention and is greeted by the 717 delegates (anticipated record turnout) with a resounding "hip hip Aubrey" salvo, it would hardly come a surprise to anyone—least of all the affiliates themselves.

And if, in turn, the CBS-TV prexy's Nielsens happen to be showing (particularly the most recent First April report with its seven - nights - of - the - week clean sweep, 14 of the Top 20 nighttime, 10 out of 10 daytime, and 31 wins of the 50 prime time half-hours), this, too, would be understandable.

For translated in terms of what the affiliates know best—station ownership and management—the Aubrey momentum has given them an enviable prestige status in their respective communities. Perhaps even more important—for after the hurrahs and the soft talk are stripped away it's the coin that counts—to the CBS affiliate it represents a 200% profit differential over the rival affiliated stations in the town. With men who know Nielsen and Dow Jones best, it's "Operation Aubrey" they've come to salute.

Thus the two-day meet is keyed to CBS and Aubrey's "finest hour" of peak earnings and dazzling ratings—the year of the nearly $20,000,000 profit sheet and the certainty by Aubrey, the way things are shaping up, of even bigger profits for the year to come.

But Aubrey's unbridled enthusiasm stems chiefly from the fact that, so far as he's concerned, he's on top of the most alive, scintillating, profitable, exciting medium in the entertainment world. He's of the opinion that the CBS '63-'64 schedule represents tv and show biz at all-time peak performance and, as someone hardly given to self-effacement just as he recognizes that along with the cheers there are also the jeers and the smears ("let's stop kidding, I know too well what a lot of people say about me"), he'll willingly concede the major role he's played in bringing it about.

Tops Hollywood

"We're talking now," says Aubrey, "about a network whose profits for the year amounted to more than all the major Hollywood film studios combined." He alluded to the fact that 20th's "Cleopatra" ("they should have gotten out from under on this one while the getting out was good") cost the studio $40,000,000. "Yet you pick a Saturday or perhaps any night of the week on CBS, and over the season's span you're talking about a $40,000,000 billings schedule. Just one night, one network. That's how big tv has grown."

But what particularly excites Aubrey is the fact that, to his mind, tv came next fall will have at long last achieved a respectability and recognition it has long sought, when stars, no matter how attractive their marquee lure, are now willing and anxious to embrace the medium, when writers, producers, directors of top calibre want in. "When you can commit to weekly shows such personalities as Danny Kaye and Judy Garland, along with the Phil Silvers, the Jack Bennys, the Red Skeltons, the Danny Thomases, the Jackie Gleasons, et al; when you can sign as writers a Jerome Weidman and a William Inge (we'll be ready to announce this one, soon); when you've got such producers as a Sheldon Leonard, a Herb Leonard, a David Susskind, a John Housemen, a Herb Brodkin, a Bob Banner riding in your stable; when you can commit to specials such personalities as an Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, a Carol Burnett (she'll be ready to go weekly in '64-'65), a Peter Ustinov and

TV Blurbs a Major Source Of Income for Actors; $25,000,000 Annual Spread for SAG Members

Hollywood, May 7.

Television commercial field today provides a major source of actor income, according to information from the Screen Actors Guild which reveals members currently are earning in excess of $25,000,000 a year on commercials alone.

Guild notes more than 40% of its 14,000 paid members worked in commercials at one time, a large proportion toiling exclusively in the tele-ad medium due to the decreasing amount of dramatic work available. Figures are based on payments into the Guild's Health and Welfare and Pension Plan.

While $25,000,000 figure may appear unusual, it is significant to note total tv ad figures of the Television Bureau of Advertising which reported 1962 total national time billing gross of $1.52 billion. Spot tv gross time billings total was $721,211,000, an increase of 16.8% over the 1961 figure.

Accounts of the value of the commercial field to Hollywood performers were reported in VARIETY in a cross-section of actors, agents and casting directors chiefly involved in the field.

Patricia Harris, who only five years ago "pioneered" the exclusive commercial casting agent field, notes they have taken a "major jump both in use of actors as well as in status within the industry." Miss Harris, who just toured the country on behalf of Marlboro cigarets to interview hundreds of actors and off-the-street aspirants to select six new "Marlboro Men," asserts sponsors today are "turning to actors instead of models to represent their product." She stresses, as well, where "agents five years ago wouldn't consider handling commercials, now almost every agency has a special department or, if smaller operations, works in both dramatic and commercial area without question."

Commercial field offers several different areas for work from on-camera, off-camera, spot, use of only hands, eyes or other body areas, singers, voice-backgrounds, etc. Greatest opportunity to actors is the daily on-camera work at $95 a day scale plus re-use payments which can bring a performer as much as $5,000 for a particularly active commercial or $2,500 for an

A Summit Sunup

David Susskind's "Open End" has won a reprieve of sorts in N.Y.

On Thursday (16), before N.Y.'s advertising fraternity, Susskind is scheduled to host a "live only" session of his "Open End" format on the topic: "The State of Television Two Years After Minow's Wasteland Speech." The session, which will include as panelists the programming chiefs of the three networks, will follow the annual dinner of the Advertising, Publishing and Public Relations Division of the United Jewish Appeal at the Plaza Hotel.

Joining Susskind as panelists will be Mike Dann, CBS-TV; Mort Werner, NBC-TV, and Dan Melnick, ABC-TV.

Zanuck in Talks With Lee Rich On 20th TV Job

Lee Rich, tv-radio chief at Benton & Bowles, now looms as the No. 1 choice for that 20th-Fox tv job Darryl Zanuck seems to have trouble filling. It's known that Rich and the 20th prexy had conversations over the past week, and it's further understood that the job is his if he wants it.

Rich's only comment is "no comment," though admitting that some talks were held.

From other sources it was learned that Zanuck may now take his time about filling the post of 20th tv chieftain. A few weeks back it looked by Bill Dozier, of Screen Gems, had been locked up for the post, but subsequently Dozier let it be known that he was staying with the Columbia Pictures tv subsid.

Among other names tossed into the 20th tv hopper has been that of Hubbell Robinson, ex-CBS program topper, but latest reports are that Robinson is no longer in contention.

At Benton & Bowles, Rich now holds the job formerly occupied by Tom McDermott, the Four Star prexy, and in recent years he has been one of the more persuasive spokesmen for the Madison Ave ad fraternity.

No Julie Andrews, So TV 'Cinderella' May Go by Boards

It's fairly certain at this point that there won't be any "Cinderella" special on CBS-TV next season. The Rodgers-Hammerstein tv original, originally done by the network six years ago, was scheduled for re-creation this fall, for either an October or November two-hour showcasing.

General Mills has already pinked down some $600,000 time-&-program to sponsor the presentation (tied in with a mammoth merchandising scheme), but from the look of things GM will either have to abandon the project completely or put it off until the '64-'65 season.

Hitch likes in the inability to wrest Julie Andrews away from her Walt Disney feature assignment. CBS wants to tape the new "Cinderella" either in August or September, but the Disney studio has refused to put a stop clause on her work. Thus her availability for the special becomes too tenuous.

CBS says that without Miss Andrews they've got no show.

Jaffe Talks Up A 4th Network

Henry Jaffe is the latest television personage to become interested in establishing a fourth network. The producer next season of the Bell Telephone hours on NBC-TV, Jaffe says he is investigating the potential of setting up programming for a group of independent tv stations.

The producer said that if he gets enough interest from the indie operators, most of whom function in four-station and larger tv markets, he would underwrite the cost of all initial programming. One of his hopes is to do a drama, once a week, that would take up two to three hours of prime time. Besides being able to develop the story, it'll lend itself, he thinks, to promotion.

A Jaffe associate, Jim Loren, has spent a good deal of time recently, according to Jaffe, working out details of the proposed "network" setup.

He said that in addition to giving the member stations far more than the tradition one-third compensation, it'd give him, as a producer, a chance to a program "without being restricted by patterns, either commercial or creative."

TV's 'Profitability, Conformity To Mass Tastes' Assailed By Henry

Nashville, May 7.

Charging broadcasters with making an "insufficient effort" to find out what the public wants, FCC Commissioner E. William Henry said there would be a greater variety of prime time programming if FCC rules and policies were "fully met."

The 34-year-old Tennessean and possible successor to FCC chairman Newton Minow said no broadcasters have told the public of their station's "responsibility to serve the needs and interests of all segments of the viewing audience, not just those whose tastes happen to be in the majority." They have also left the public "almost wholly unaware" of the Government's role in broadcasting and its rules and policies "designed to foster the best possible broadcasting service," Henry said.

To overcome that he suggested a reevaluation of Commission policy on publservice programming. He also proposed FCC rules requiring all broadcasters to carry regular announcements of their legal responsibility to serve the public interest. The announcements would also call for public response, criticism and suggestions for improved programming.

Henry in a speech to the Radio and Television Council in Nashville, charged the networks with being "exceedingly vague" in proposing special programs. He suggested the vagueness "will prove to be the networks' intention to inject public service specials as sporadic substitutes for programs whose ratings turn out to be lower than their competition."

Henry asked if some people and their children deserve something better than an overdose of reruns of the same old categories—variety, dramatic series, audience participation, dramatic anthology and situation comedy.

Through a series of rhetorical questions he charged "profitability and conformity to mass taste have become almost the only criteria for network programming" and that creative, original talent among writers, producers and directors "is being stifled by network domination."

Henry leaned on quotations from tv personnel and experts to sling barbs at the industry. He quoted former CBS v.p. Hubbell Robinson who said tv can "enrich more lives than all the writers, painters and philosophers in the world have ever been able to reach."

"Does the 1962-63 schedule . . . meet Mr. Robinson's standard?" Henry asked. "These questions answer themselves," he said.

Larry White Gets His Veepee Stripe, So Agrees To Leave C-T for CBS

Appointment of Larry White as director of program development for CBS-TV leaves one major web programming post yet unfilled, that of v.p. of programming-N.Y.

White is rejoining CBS-TV from Goodson-Todman Productions where he had been director of program administration since October, 1962. Previously, White headed the CBS-TV's daytime programming operations from 1960 to 1962.

White fills the job once held at the web by Bob Weitman, now in charge of Metro's studios operation. Post of N.Y. programming v.p. was left vacant when Mike Dann was promoted from that post to his present one as v.p. in charge of web programming. The shifts were triggered by the exiting of Hubbell Robinson, who held the title of senior programming v.p. for the web.

White will report to v.p. of programming-N.Y. once that post is filled. Understood the web is looking outside its own company to fill the v.p. post.

A few weeks back CBS dickered with White. He wanted a veepee stripe, which they couldn't get. Network changed its mind and White agreed to move.

Bill Craig to B&B

Young & Rubicam's Coast tv veepee Bill Craig ankles to take over as head of Benton & Bowles Hollywood tv operation, succeeding Albert Ekaye, who has reached compulsory retirement age after more than a score of years with B&B's Coast office.

Craig, second in command to Y&R's tv chieftain Bud Barry, was with Procter & Gamble, Wm Morris agency and Grey agency before Young & Rubicam.

1st Week of NBC, Philco Hearings Strictly Low Key

Washington, May 7.

Two corporate giants are colliding head-on before the FCC over ownership of a big Philadelphia station, but somehow the sound effect is only a soft "plunk!"

NBC and Philco are both trying to win a license to operate WRCV-TV and AM. It is now an NBC o.&o.

NBC wants to retain WRCV so it can trade the station for RKO General's WNAC-AM-FM-TV in Boston and thus comply with a Justice Department consent decree ordering jettisoning of the Philly outlet.

Philco just wants the station. This phase of the hearing before FCC examiner James D. Cunningham has so far been all NBC which has paraded it corporate might in a slick defense of its general and particular image. The whole thing, in the hands of attorney Irving Segal, is extremely low key, even to the point of being a little patronizing.

Philco, personified by counsel Henry Weaver, thus encounters sort of spongy resistance that blunts most of its thrusts.

Herman Rush, who has been senior veepee in charge of the General Artists Corp. television dept has taken over the duties of president of the sector, a post held by Don Sharpe, according to an announcement by Herbert J. The Siegel announcement indicates that Sharpe is no longer functioning with the company, although the announcement made no mention of Sharpe's resignation. Sharpe and GAC have been negotiating former's termination with the company for the past few weeks, but nothing is apparently set. Late last week, GAC execs admitted that Sharpe was still on the company payroll, but would not go beyond that. It's probable

Israel: Special Without an Ending

Producer Don Kellerman, when he selected the subject of Israel, found that he had a running story.

CBS News producer, just two weeks prior to the CBS-TV telecast, had to return to the troubled Jewish State to update his story. The special, titled "Israel—It Is No Fable," is slated to be telecast tonight (Wed.).

Kellerman had first gone to Israel in the latter part of January, staying seven weeks, collecting footage and interviews. When he returned troubles along Israeli's border countries began to develop, along with the problem of German rocket experts working for Egypt. He had to return to intergrate the latest developments into the hourlong documentary, being telecast on the 15th anni of the birth of the Jewish State. Ben-Gurion, recognizing the impact of tv in the U.S., chose the documentary to request that the U.S. enter the a bilateral treaty with Israel.

Kellerman said she and the Prime Minister proved very cooperative. Good deal of the special is built around Ben-Gurion who was interviewed on camera by Kellerman. Douglas Edwards narrates.

Kellerman, who is one of the producers assigned to "Chronicle" next season, hopes to do a one-hour special on Edgar Allen Poe. It was Kellerman who did Dickens outing this season.

Fulbright: The New Minow?

Arkansas Senator's Caustic Observations Anent TV And Satellites

Washington, May 7.

The Senate may have been hiding a new Newton Minow.

One of its more learned members, J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), at any rate has come out in the open with caustic observations about television.

The Fulbright barbs came in the third of three lectures he gave before the Tufts University school of law and diplomacy in Medford, Mass. He was discussing "The American Agenda."

In constructing his thesis, Fulbright talked about the soggy state of U.S. milieus.

"At the same time we have fallen into a state of benign satisfaction with affluence at home," said Fulbright. "Prosperity appears to have benumbed the social conscience which brought us the benefits we now enjoy. In our absorption with the pleasures of shiny new cars, of a thousand gadgets of trivial utility, and of the inexhaustible inanities of television, we hardly notice that over 4,000,000 Americans are unemployed, that our public schools are deteriorating tragically, that crime and blight and corruption spread over our cities."

Warming to the task, the senator took on communications satellites:

"The Telstar communications satellite is of course a splendid scientific achievement," he noted, "and it will undoubtedly be a fine thing when television broadcasts can be viewed simultaneously in London, Paris and New York.

"But is this really a matter of urgency? Is it such an intolerable hardship for Europeans to have to wait 24 hours while video tapes of American quiz shows and horse operas are flown across the Atlantic in jet planes?"

Maschwitz to Brit. A-R

London, May 7.

Eric Maschwitz, head of BBC-TV's light entertainment, is to join commercial tv later in the month.

It was confirmed last week that he is in the final stages of negotiating a service contract with Associated-Rediffusion, the programming company which has the weekday concession in the London area.

All Signs Hopeful On Writers Guild, Network Dickers

Outlook for settlement of the contract talks with the Writers Guild of America is said to be promising.

Last week, the Guild negotiators took the latest network package offers to their council and came back to the management team with the word that they were willing to continue the talks. Because the

Art Nielsen & The Corporate Ego

By ART WOODSTONE

If, as he says, A. C. Nielsen has lost money on broadcasting research since he began it in the 1940s, then the question is why?

His son Arthur Nielsen Jr. lately told a Congressional hearing that his father's company over the years put $10,000,000 more into the business of radio-tv research than has been taken out. But the impression is he hardly meant that the A. C. Nielsen company is losing $10,000,000.

For one thing, the company says it is minutely ahead this year. It is making a profit of approximately 1% on radio and tv, but that, by any ordinary corporate investment standard, is hardly worth the effort.

Nielsen, for at least eight years, perhaps longer, has clearly made it a part of company policy to tell the trade that he is losing money on radio and tv. In 1956, a Nielsen press agent spent the two hours of luncheon explaining the extent of the loss to a trade reporter.

But in many ways A. C. Nielsen Sr. has, until lately when he demanded few bites from broadcasters, felt any losses incurred were quite worth while.

As one of his own men recently explained, radio and television research, while accounting for less than 20% of his total business, is still "the glamour aspect." Put another way, it could mean that radio and television have brought Nielsen much of his fame and much of the money he is earning from the more plebian food and drug indexes.

This task would make Nielsen's radio-tv division a "loss-leader," an item kept on inventory because it attracts customers to items that provide the profit. Nielsen readily admits that the corporation as a whole makes a healthy profit.

But the loss-leader aspect is not the entire story. If Nielsen is losing money in radio-tv over the long pull, he's stayed doggedly with it also because of what has come to be known as corporate ego. It seems Art Sr., as his fellow workers call him, recognizes the glamour aspect of broadcast research and knows that to defect now would not necessarily help the corporate image. This is not unlike the case of the radio networks, none of whom wanted to be the first to quit a losing business that had made them famous.

Besides, a Nielsen executive has pointed out that the broadcasting division of A. C. Nielsen Co. employs some 300 persons, many of whom have been with the company 20 years, and Art Sr. would "find it really hard to get rid of a division which has so many faithful employees."

The exec said some of the 300 worked in other divisions too. But he did not feel that the number of men, who worked for other divisions and yet were bookkeeped off as part of the radio-tv loss, was substantial enough to matter. (Often the internal bookkeeping of a company with several divisions does not reflect true profit or loss, since red ink can be attributed to a division that actually made money, and the profit, should it suit the company, put on the books of a losing division. The same with the budgeting of manpower.)

Nielsen company says the radio and tv division was not deliberately designed or maintained as a loss leader, and, consequently, Nielsen hopes to make a profit from his radio and tv research. That, says the company, is why he's demanding increases in fees.

There might be another reason, as someone pointed out last week: If the networks and ad agencies won't meet his demand for increases, it could provide the A. C. Nielsen Co.—loss leaders, egos and charity notwithstanding—a diplomatic way to get out of radio and tv: Art Sr. and Art Jr. could blame it, perhaps rightly, on the broadcasters.

1 Ball Game; 2 Umpires

Washington, May 7.

If the Federal Trade Commission gets its way and succeeds in whittling down the Nielsen tv-radio audience measurement business to half its size, the industry, it's feared, could be inviting its most chaotic era on the rating front.

The FTC, claiming a Nielsen monopoly, proposes that Nielsen divest itself of 20% of its broadcasting clients, giving up, among other things, one major network.

The assumption is that, since ABC Radio withdrew from Nielsen, the researcher would probably let ABC-TV go by the boards. But, the question is asked, what happens then, since inevitably ABC would throw in its lot with another research company? The likelihood of having two umpires behind the plate in a "whose-rating-do-you believe?" situation is seen compounding chaos on confusion.

THOMPSON TO 'NOVAK'

Hollywood, May 7.

Robert E. Thompson has been named associate producer on MGM-TV's new hourlong "Mr. Novak" series, bowing on NBC-TV next season, with James Franciscus and Dean Jagger starring.

William Froug is producer of the show.

Couple of Sensitive (& Topical) Items On CBS 'Nurses' Roster

Two topical medico dramas, one dealing with syphilis and the other with Thalidomide, will be telecast by CBS-TV's "Nurses" in two separate episodes Thursday (23) and May 30.

The drama dealing with syphilis was penned by Al Rubin. It deals with a woman who has had an extra-marital affair, contacted the disease, infected her husband, and is frightened to do anything about it, for fear of being exposed. Diane Baker, James Daly and Simon Oakland play the featured roles.

Script, according to the network, has won the approval of the American Assn. of Social Health, and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The Thalidomide story tells of a woman who used the unauthorized drug as a sleeping pill during her pregnancy. She gives birth to an armless child. Her final acceptance of the child caps the story, penned by Leonard Kantor and Leon Tokatyan, a story which has echoes in recent news stories throughout the world. Jena Engstrom, Scott Marlowe and Edward Binns have featured roles.

COMING: $50,000,000 'B BUYS'

Better a Promo Than a Rate Cut'

It looks as if the bargain basement selling tactics are now precluded by a new network approach to any minutes that remain unsold.

Web execs now figure that they would rather use the unsold minutes for heavier on-the-air promotions than give them away at prices that weaken the rate card structure. Not only are on-the-air promos the most effective way of plugging a web's schedule, but it's cheaper to do it that way than buy space in mags and newspapers.

One network sales topper said that short of a desperate emergency, he did not intend to sell primetime minutes for $50,000 this year since their promotional value far outweighed the advantages of a limited recovery on any specific show.

Sunshind's 'The Week That Was' As Truman Gets Into Belting Act

Last week was the week that really was for David Sunshind. Under a rabing fire from WNEW-TV, N.Y., which cancelled his "Open End" show and cuffed his personality, Sunshind was bolted only a couple of days later from an unexpected direction in Independence, Mo. More, former President Harry S. Truman, in announcing his tieup with Screen Gems for the production of the story of his administration, sharply rapped Sunshind, but without directly mentioning him. Sunshind originally had the deal to make the Truman series, but sold the rights and all material to Screen Gems for $156,000. Truman said that "at long last, I am about to resume work on the television series . . . Production on the series came to an abrupt halt because the people who undertook to produce them found themselves unable to carry out their agreement. As a matter of fact, only two episodes were actually completed in all that time of over 18 months . . . The delays, refusals and frustrations that I have encountered in my efforts to get cooperation for the production of the series seem incredible and for a long time were insurmountable . . . In our previous efforts in making these films we had some important differences in approach. But I am pleased that we do not anticipate such differences with the Screen Gems people as we seem to have reached a full agreement with them on the basic approach."

After producing the two one-hour shows and spending over $400,000 of his personal money in preparing these stanzas plus additional material and scripts, Sunshind gave up when he could not make a deal for network exposure. Truman, however, pressed for the completion of the full cycle of 13 one-hour shows planned by Sunshind whether or not a network sale was made. Truman also differed with Sunshind over how his story should be told.

'Stunned' By Bolt

Sunshind was reportedly stunned by Truman's blast. A spokesman for Sunshind said the latter "fervently hopes that the Truman series

Met Life Burying CBS Space Shoot

Metropolitan Life will sponsor CBS-TV's full coverage of the Project Mercury shot of Major Gordon Cooper, scheduled for mid-May.

Metropolitan inked as sponsor under its current agreement with the web to sponsor special spot news shows. Deal with the insurance company, expires in January.

CBS-TV's coverage of the event will fall along these lines: the blast off will be featured in a special from 8 to 9:30 a.m.; at 10:30 the first orbit will be covered for a 15-minute show; from 11:15 to 11:45 p.m., there will be further coverage; next morning there will be a half-hour program; and the next night a special half-hour show sometime after 9:30 p.m.

Plans call for Major Cooper to be in the air 34 hours, making some 22-plus trips around the earth before landing off Hawaii.

TV City Perks Again

Hollywood, May 7.

Come next fall and CBS' Television City will come alive again. In fact not since the mid-'50's has there been anything near the activity on tap for the fall, when both Judy Garland and Danny Kaye check in for their weekly hour marathons.

Aside from an occasional Jack Benny entry plus Red Skelton, Television City has been active mainly with daytime soaps and game shows. But the additional two hours of nighttime programming will give it a status it hasn't enjoyed since the days when "Studio One," "Climax" and "Playhouse 90" were filling the giant studios.

ABC-TV's sales have spurted sharply ahead within the last two weeks to bring another $15,000,000 into the till for the 1963-64 season. Of that total, almost $3,000,000 was for daytime while the web's sports shows and public affairs shows also stepped to the forefront.

In the public affairs department, Upjohn bought four one-hour shows which will comprise a package titled "Saga of Western Man." The pharmaceutical company also bought into Ron Cochran's early evening news wrapup. ABC-TV is also nearing deals with a couple of other major advertisers on additional shows which will come out of the web's special projects division.

In sports, sales have been paced by the American Football League games which are seven-eighths sold out. Some $8,125,000 is already committed for by Gillette, Lincoln-Mercury, Lorillard, Goodyear and American Gas Assn. Last year at this time, only about $5,000,000 worth of AFL time had been sold. The Winter Olympic Games are SRO and Quaker Oats has come into the "Wide World of Sports." Block Drugs has picked up

AWRT's New Slate

Philadelphia, May 7.

Nominating committee's slate of new officers and directors at large was voted in at the American Women in Radio & Television convention here last week with Margaret Mary Kearney, president-elect of last year, succeeding Martha Crane as head of the national group.

Named general convention chairman was Alice L. Mooney. Elected to post of directors at large for the new fiscal year were Elizabeth Bain (president-elect for '64-'65), Francis Williams Preston, Dene C. Batermann, Elizabeth Right Evans, Joan Osgood Rainey and Mary T. Walker.

SEEMS NOBODY'S REALLY WORRIED

For all the immediate concern over the inability to move on that final 20% or so on network time-program sales, which account for $80,000,000 in availabilities, there's still enough uncommitted B coin to be heard from that will more than make up for the existing lag.

Apparently what has triggered the current anxiety and thrown the whole thing out of perspective is that all the A budgets for '63-'64 were committed much earlier this year than in previous seasons. This, in turn, has created an extended "interim period" of two or three months until such time that the laggers and the wait-and-see boys start moving into the picture.

Take it from Don Durgin, the NBC-TV sales topper, who's going through approximately the same experience year after year (except, he says, when the '58 recession knocked out a lot of the stragglers and the B budgets "so we just waited around but nothing happened"), there are still 33 clients who will spread some $50,000,000 around the three networks for both the fourth quarter of '63 and the first quarter of '64.

These include the customary wait-and-seek sponsors — a Beech Nut, a Maiden Curtis, a Max Factor, a Pittsburgh Glass, among others. But aside from the traditional late guys, come June and July and some $20,000,000 will open up. These are the B budgets be the A companies—the additional funds that suddenly pop up around American Tobacco, Playtex, Seven Up, Pontiac, Mobil Oil, Minnesota Mining, Dow Chemical, Bristol-Myers, Chrysler, to name a few.

As an illustration, Durgin was considerably heartened last week by two new sales thrusts from major sponsors—Coca-Cola, with a $1,500,000 commitment, and the generating of additional Procter & Gamble coin (some $2,000,000 worth) even before the June-July "second windfall" on remaining availabilities. While the Coke commitment adds up to no great shakes, nonetheless it's symptomatic of how big company holdouts eventually get locked-in.

Before the new season begins, it should tote up to a $60,000,000 spread.

MONTREUX AWARD TO 'JULIE AND CAROL'

"Julie and Carol at Carnegie Hall" won the "Golden Rose" top award at the Montreux TV Festival, a competition for all Eurovision countries.

The British showing on Associated Rediffusion's network made the hourlong CBS-TV special eligible for entry in the Montreux competition at which each U. S. network was represented. Producer Bob Banner was lauded for the simplicity in which he staged the Julie Andrews and Carol Burnett starrer.

"Julie and Carol" has been nominated for an Emmy Award.

Optimism Rampant as the Ladies, God Bless 'em, Brush Oren Harris, Key Issues for Own 'Femme Agenda'

By BILL GREELEY

Philadelphia, May 7.

This much can be said for the American Women in Radio & Television: when it comes time for the annual mass meeting, they know how to ignore the big (or maybe little) issues of current harassment in broadcasting at large.

At the 12th annual convention of the national org with more than 600 delegates gathered here last week, Oren Harris didn't get a mention within earshot of this reporter. There was no film contingent split down the street at another hotel. The biggest hassle was a panel disagreement on whether the "secretarial route" was a sound way to get ahead in the business.

Optimism abounded. A main dinner speaker, wife of veepee Lyndon Johnson, saw no reason why a woman couldn't be vice president some day soon. If Harris' ratings rough riders were thoroughly forgotten, FCC chairman Newton Minow received a bigger hand than President John F. Kennedy when their letters of congrats were read. And more than one speaker patted the industry on the back, advising all to relax and enjoy it instead of suffering so chronically from outside criticism.

Among the champ supporters of tv was TV Guide publisher James T. Quirk, who told the convention, "I am not foolish enough to intimate that American radio and television are without flaw, and that the world of broadcasting is the best of all worlds. Nor do I suggest that you have managed to realize more than the most minute part of your creative potential. But what has been done has been done well. It has been done honestly. It has been done with a sense of dedication and purpose, and you do not owe more than that to any man."

What the industry owes, said Quirk, it owes itself—public recognition. "Such recognition is imperative. It is necessary not for the purpose of satisfying your vanity or inflating your ego. It is necessary because your critics have been vocal while you were silent. Your errors, your failures, your shortcomings—real and imaginary—have been repeated in the marketplace a thousand times by your detractors. All available evidence seems to indicate that the public is satisfied with your stewardship, but in the face of unrelenting attacks by your critics—and silence from you—it seems inevitable that there must come an erosion of public esteem."

One way to firmer leadership in broadcasting, Quirk declared, would be through a genuine editorial policy by stations throughout the country.

Banner's Gee-Whiz

Philadelphia, May 7.

Producer Bob Banner, a panelist at AWRT Philadelphia convention, waxed statistical to prove the drawing power of television.

As an example, said Banner, the Carol Burnett-Julie Andrews special of a year or so ago had an audience of between 26,000,000 and 40,000,000. Had the show played Carnegie Hall (capacity 2,500) at eight performances a week, it would have taken 35½ years to take care of the one-night video audience.

Same show, said Banner, later had a Eurovision airing with an aud of about 25,000,000. Add the second outing, and at the Carnegie Hall eight-a-week it would take a solid run of 30 years to play out.

Then there was the time, the producer said, that femme emcee Dinah Shore forgot a line in a song. She faked it through okay, but 17,000 viewers wrote in to fill Dinah in on the missing line.

Zerex-Wolper Tie On 'President' But Will Network Buy?

Zerex reportedly has bought David Wolper's 90-minute documentary production based on Ted White's bestseller "Making of the President, 1960." Now the question is will Wolper, who is an indie packager, again have to take his sponsor and go the syndicated route in order to get the stanza on the air?

The network news departments, all three of them, a couple of years ago rejected a Wolper-made stanza called "Race For Space." Wolper had Shulton to sponsor, but the webs, to state the case generally, had objections to putting on any documentary not made under the supervisions of the news departments themselves.

Since then, the situation has changed ever so slightly and the change at this time hints that Zerex-Wolper might break into a network airing. Zerex is a steady NBC News buyer and that might account for something. Furthermore, Wolper managed to get an extra half-hour series on NBC-TV next season, on the grounds that the documentary (which is about Hollywood) is an entertainment more than a news program. The chances, while not absolutely nil at NBC, are remote for "President" nevertheless.

ABC News is reportedly "vaguely amenable" to outside stuff too.

Sex Appeal Vs. Six Appeals

Philadelphia, May 7.

Sex appeal will get you nowhere in broadcasting, girls. Six appeals is what you need, John Box Jr., managing director of the Balaban stations, told delegates at the 12th annual convention of American Women in Radio & Television last week in Philadelphia.

"Women either don't use their natural gifts, these six appeals, or they use them wrong in business," said Box, member of a panel on responsibility among women in radio. "Radio women have six appeals . . . responsiveness, persuasiveness, loyalty, empathy, patience and femininity."

But women in broadcasting, he said, "get so bound up in trivia, tears and tirades that they take the edge off even the most brilliant business maneuver . . . Be feminine but not female."

Most important of the six appeals—and most misapplied—is femininity, said the director. "Whether you call it charm, as the fashion magazines do; or animal 'magnetism,' as radio's old friend 'Dolly's Tavern' did; whether you call it personality, as employment agencies do, it adds up to about the same thing—the appeal of a woman as a woman."

NBC's Block Drug $2,000,000 Deal

Block Drug planted just about $2,000,000 in net billings on NBC-TV for next season. Bulk of the buy—all of which is aimed for prime time — is in "Sing Along With Mitch."

The Mitch Miller hour, going next fall in a Monday-at-10 slotting on NBC-TV, will get about $1,500,000 of the loot from Block. That's the equivalent of a minute a week, firm, for 52 weeks. Rest of the coin is pretty evenly split between the Saturday night movies and Jack Paar's hourlong Friday show.

Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles acted as agency on the Block-NBC prime time deal.

Kluge Cautions Without Strong FCC the Govt. Becomes a Patsy'

Cleveland, May 7.

The FCC needs a strong leader and the broadcasting industry must never fail to recognize that the airwaves belong to the public, John W Kluge said here as Metromedia's WHK inaugurated its successful "Public Service Awards" program.

Kluge, president of Metromedia, said at his press conference that a strong FCC and an industry that recognizes its responsibilities can work together for the benefit of the nation "If the industry fails to recognize its responsibility, it creates a vacuum in its own interest If the FCC is not strong, then the government becomes a patsy A governmental body that is subject to political pressures can't do its job," he declared.

At the luncheon where Mark Evans, v.p. and director of public affairs was the speaker, WHK presented six major and eight minor awards Major winners were Junior Achievement, for commerce and industry; U.S. Air Force, armed services; Cleveland Area Church Federation, religion; Cleveland Academy of Medicine, health; United Appeal and Cleveland Safety Council, welfare; Cleveland Board of Education, education.

Other recipients of plaques for radio programs based on originality, creativity, local application, production, and execution and accomplishment were Cleveland Electric Illuminating, and Better Business Bureau; Coast Guard Auxiliary and Marine Corps; American Red Cross; Goodwill Industries and Notre Dame College for Women and Antioch College.

Kluge turned aside questions dealing with the David Susskind incident, but did say that stations have complete right to determine the type of programming best fitted for its needs Whereas WNEW emphasizes "good music," WHK caters to a type of rock-n-roll, which was the format felt would succeed in this area, and "Jack Thayer (general manager) both feels and understand the community."

Evans discussed the rewards of public service saying "reverence for life as expounded by Dr. Albert Schweitzer is, in essence, public service in our modern and busy world," and he paid tribute to Cleveland for being the first station in the network to introduce the Public Service Awards.

Judges for the WHK salute were Evan Williams, district governor, Kiwanis; Willard Brown, University Research Center; Harry Bloss, exec v.p. American Greeting Card; Gordon C Klauer, director radio-television, Advertising Council; Judge Blanche Krupansky of the municipal court.

Geetze Exits KOGO For Post in Frisco

William E Geetze has quit as veep and general manager over the Time-owned KOGO radio and tv operation in San Diego for a post in his home town that reportedly pays $100,000 plus ownership shares.

Geetze, who became a SD civic leader, will become proxy of A H Meyer Co., which distributes RCA consumer products in San Francisco, thereby being one of the largest outfits of its kind in the country.

Wes Pullen, Time radio-tv chief, so far has announced no replacement for Geetze. The Geetze shift happened rather quickly last week As head of KOGO, Geetze reported to Hugh Terry, head of the company's western activities and g.m. of the KLZ setup in Denver.

FCC's Midland, Tex., Nix

Washington, May 7.

An effort to get another VHF for the oil-rich Midland, Texas, market was rejected by FCC.

Midland Telecasting Co. (KDCD-TV) sought channel 10 in place of channel 13.

FCC turned it down because channel 9 operates not far away in the Monahans-Odessa market. KVKM-TV has channel 9.

Chick Kelly a Veepee

Storer Broadcasting has declared a quarterly dividend of 45 cents a share on common stock, payable June 7, to holders on May 24.

At the same time the broadcasting chain's board also announced a 12½-cent dividend on Class "B" stocks. (Company recently bought 430,700 shares of "B" stock held by chairman George B. Storer at $28.50 per share.)

Board named John (Chick) Kelly, head of advertising and promotion for Storer, a company vicepresident.

Four Star's Reiner Sets Rep in Tokyo

Tokyo, May 7.

Manny Reiner, v.p. of Four Star International, named Interlingual Television K.K. (George Shirakow, general manager) as the Japan sales agent for his company's telefilms. The pact is for one year. Reiner's decision ended spirited seeking of the representation by the local telefilm importers.

Four Star's product had been previously handled in this market through the distrib for William Morris.

During his week in Tokyo, Reiner also secured a renewal for "Rifleman" from TBS, which will send the oater into its fifth year on Japanese screens.

In addition, he concluded deals for "Target: the Corruptors," "Stagecoach West," the hourlong "Detectives," "McKeever and the Colonel" and "Ames Burke."

Reiner is on a three-and-a-half week swing of the Far East. In Hong Kong he will meet with managing director George Oldridge and program manager Leonard Thorre of Rediffusion. In Bangkok he will appoint Thomas A. Madar as Four Star rep and talk sales with officials of the Thai TV Co. and the Royal Thai Army TV station. And in Manila, Reiner will also name a sales agent and meet with station execs.

One of the pioneer Yank telefilm salesmen in this territory, Reiner was here for his eighth trip since 1956. In addition to the sales of completed shows, Reiner is interested in selling Four Star formats here—such as for panel programs—to be packaged for production by its local rep.

Reiner squashed reports that Four Star would film a pilot in Japan. He said the company might lens one or two episodes here of some established series, but no pilot.

Asked his reaction to the Finance Ministry's liberalization of the price ceilings on tv imports, which became effective April 1, Reiner said, "Obviously in relation to the set count here, the prices will still be low. But," he added, "there has been a large improvement."

Reiner thought the lifting of the price ceilings would probably have its greatest impact in the sales of reruns to the provincial stations. Before, no dollar allocation was marked for reruns.

MADISON WKOW-FM ONLY HALF-GUILTY

Washington, May 7.

FCC has cut in half a $1,000 forfeiture it had levied on WKOW-FM, Madison, Wisc.

The commission last October slapped the forfeiture on Paul A Stewart for failing to obtain FCC approval of his switch of ownership from one corporate entity to another. After Stewart claimed his failure was inadvertent rather than deliberate, the levy was halved.

FCC action came on a 3-2 vote, with Commissioners Robert E. Lee and E. William Henry dissenting. Frederick Ford abstained, Rossi Hyde didn't vote. Chairman Newton Minow, Kenneth Cox and Robert T. Bartley were in the majority.

TWO FACES EAST AND WEST

Collins: 'Shouting'll Get You Nowhere'

Washington, May 7.

Mell raising oratory is no way to get the Government off the backs of broadcasters, in the opinion of LeRoy Collins, NAB prexy.

"The most effective defense against the Government," he added, "is a good offense. We cannot shout our way to better treatment by the Government."

Broadcasters are on safe and sane grounds as long as they are clearly complying with the public interest, he said, because Uncle Sam has no lawful reason for requiring a radio or television station to do more than that.

"It is a popular exercise," Collins said in a later paragraph which may cause some eyes to pop, "in some quarters of the broadcasting fraternity . . . to go around asking rhetorically, 'What is the public interest?' and then retreat behind the fence with the assertion that it is impossible to define."

Definitions may be difficult in all the specifics, he added.

"What is important," he went on, "and what certainly can be defined, is the approach one takes toward the question. Not only can this attitude be defined, it cannot be hidden or disguised very well. As I view it, it is nothing more nor less than a genuine concern for man himself . . . It is the implementation of this concern for man, and the seeking of new and better ways for such implementation, which constitute service to the public interest."

Collins made the speech in Toronto before the Radio and Television Executives Club, with the text of the talk made available in Washington.

Wisc. 3-Week Festival of Kidvid To Study Juve Likes & Dislikes

Chicago, May 7.

In an effort to learn why kiddies respond more enthusiastically to "Three Stooges" and "Mister Magoo" than they do the more uplifting juve fare television has tried to offer, the Wisconsin Assn. of the American Council for Better Broadcasts is staging a three-weekend festival of vidshows on the campus of the U. of Wisconsin to study the reactions of youngsters to various kinds of programs. Sessions will be held on May 18 and 25 and June 1.

A total of about 200 children, varying in ages and from different areas in the locale of Madison, Wis., will see a number of filmed tv offerings and then discuss them in small groups. The films to be used in the experiment will include Mattell's "Funny Company," "The Red Balloon," "Quick Draw McGraw," "Le Morte," "Three Stooges," and some shows produced by KRON-TV, San Francisco. The kids participating will later be interviewed by educators, and then a group of adults will be put through the same mill.

What the Assn. chiefly hopes to distill from the firsthand observation, the discussions and the interviews are (1) what elements of first-rate fare the kids enjoy or do not enjoy, (2) what it is about low-brow offerings that makes them more appealing to the kiddies and (3) in what ways adults and youngsters differ in their responses.

McLendon WYNR Faces IBEW Rap

Chicago, May 7.

Fresh from three weeks of informal inquiry by the FCC into the veracity of the promises on its license application, radio station WYNR has been served with a complaint by National Labor Relations Board to answer charges by Local #1220, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Hearing has been set for June 26 here.

The station, owned by the McLendon Corp. since last August (it was previously WGES), is charged by IBEW with dismissing its steward, James Clark, because of his union activities. It's alleged that the new management showed prejudice against Clark, who had been with the station since 1957, for pointing out deviations from the union contract.

Consolidated with the IBEW complaint is a similar charge by an individual, Benjamin Jones, who alleges he was discharged as an announcer for union activity in AFTRA. IBEW withdrew, without prejudice from NLRB, an earlier charge that the radio station had bargained in bad faith.

From Wax to Cloth

Chicago, May 7.

Negro deejay Al Benson, reputed for a number of years to be top wage earner in his field, last week retired from radio after 18 years of spieling. He has indicated that he is going into the ministry, but he'll maintain a relationship with station WYON in a sales advisory capacity.

Although never confirmed, it was speculated in the trade that Benson some years earned as high as $250,000, chiefly from bartering air time when he was with WGES (now WYNR). He was as good a time salesman as he was a radio pitchman.

Mary Pickford: 'We Wuz Robbed' On Station Sale

Winston-Salem, May 7.

Mary Pickford went to court here to press a claim for more money which she says is owed to her for the sale of an interest in a North Carolina television station.

Miss Pickford and her husband Charles (Buddy) Rogers were awarded $133,344 in 1959 in litigation with the Piedmont Publishing Co. of Winston-Salem.

The publishing company had a partnership agreement with the movie couple in ownership of station WSJS-TV and Superior Court set the amount of the purchase price when Piedmont sought to buy out Miss Pickford and Rogers.

Attorneys for the couple said the value of the station's good will was not computed in the purchase price and appealed to the State Supreme Court which ordered a new trial.

Attorneys Roland K. Perry and Ronald L. Hartman, representing Miss Pickford and her husband, said the purchase price should be approximately $1,000,000. Piedmont's attorneys, Sherman Welpton and W. P. Sandridge said the figure was too high.

The new trial is expected to last about four weeks.

WOR's Chaplin Specials

WOR-TV, N.Y., has made a deal for telecasting of three special Charlie Chaplin programs with Commonwealth Film and TV, Inc.

The three programs, "Charlie Chaplin Festival," "Charlie Chaplin Cavalcade," and Charlie Chaplin Carnival" are feature length compilations of selected short subjects.

The Chaplin specials will be telecast in the fall by the station.

DUALITY PUTS CRIMP IN IMAGE

By MURRAY BOROWITZ

American tv exporters, with a $56,000,000 stake in foreign trade, now are faced with two organizations, each contending to speak for American tv exporters. Sometimes the Television Program Export Assn. and the tv wing of the Motion Picture Export Assn. speak in unison; sometimes in disharmony.

What has happened since the formation of TPEA under prexy John G. McCarthy is that the tv subsids of the motion picture companies have quit TPEA and have come under the wing of Bill Fineshriber's MPEA video operation.

Despite these defections, McCarthy contends TPEA still represents about 70% of the programming exported abroad. Another source says the percentage is closer to 50%.

It's not so much the percentage figure which troubles some execs in the foreign field, but the duality of the public relations image afforded in the foreign field. There is no open break between MPEA and TPEA, both contending that they enjoy cordial relations. However, if there is a major break won in a certain foreign market for American programs, each organization is quick to run in print claiming credit. While some execs feel that this might be dictated by healthy competition, others worry in private that this so-called competition eventually might lead to each organization trying to weaken the other, with American trade abroad the loser.

Metro TV, Screen Gems have left the TPEA orbit and the resignation of United Artists ty subsidiary is effective as of December. TPEA's unique strength lies in the membership of the syndication subsids of the three networks. Additionally, TPEA has as its members Desilu, Four Star, Danny Thomas and MCA. McCarthy reports the number of TPEA member companies at 16.

Critics of the two organization setup say each duplicates the efforts of the other. They raise the question of which organization really speaks for the industry?

Those more willing to live with the two organization establishment say that the MPEA, as a tv trade organization, is partially hobbled in its limited membership. Only those companies engaged in motion picture production-distribution can become members of MPEA's tv committee. It's further pointed out that in some markets, in some situations, tv and motion picture interests are in conflict. The question is raised validly if the motion picture interests outweigh the tv interests, the latter will go the brush. TPEA, as its presently formed, can have the sole interest of tv.

Publicly no foreign exec has criticized some of McCarthy's statements, but privately one foreign exec has wonndered whether the fighting stance assumed by McCarthy will serve the industry in the long run. In announcing a market by market survey of prices secured abroad, the public

Collins to Alabama B'casters: 'We Need You'

Washington, May 7.

Leroy Collins called on Alabama broadcasters to join NAB.

"We want and need your help," the NAB prexy told the Alabama Broadcasters Assn. in Florence. Collins said he needed their membership, not just for their dues but for their brains and added strength they would give NAB.

Collins said he wanted all broadcasters to make common cause by pooling their efforts in NAB. "Then our foes who would downgrade us or exploit us or restrict our freedom will carry a greater ring of righteousness, a greater assurance of beneficial results," he said.

CBS-TV Moves to Upgrade Status In Canada Market; Cooke at Helm

Appointment of a Canadian based CBS-TV sales representative in Toronto highlights the growing importance of the Canadian market to the web. Named as Canadian representative was William Cooke, who will headquarter in Toronto.

CBS-TV, unlike the other two webs, does not depend solely on its syndication subsid to find berths and sponsors on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. network. For the past two years, when it came to "live" CBS-TV shows, Bob Jamieson has acted as director of Canadian network sales Jamieson will continue to do so, headquartering in N.Y.

CBC currently is carrying the following CBS-TV shows, all sold via the Jamieson operation: Ed Sullivan, Garry Moore, "20th Century," the Saturday Baseball Game of the Week, National Football League schedule. In addition, most of the big CBS-TV specials of the past season have found outlets on CBC.

Jamieson, who also is manager of station sales and director of station clearances, about two years ago stepped into the Canadian picture, feeling that a market of about 10,000,000 tv homes is worth more intensive cultivation. Those CBS-TV programs, sponsors of which were not interested in the Canadian market for one reason or another, were sold off to Canadian sponsors. For example, "Garry Moore Show", is sponsored on the CBC by Kraft Foods of Canada, Ltd.

CBS-TV currently has offered a plan to the CBC to help the Canadian network in its efforts to win a wider daytime audience. Under the plan, CBS-TV would offer some of its daytime soaps, with CBC utilizing the soaps as building blocs for audiences and for its own programming. As far as CBS-TV is concerned at this point the deal would be in the nature of a service, with no profits immediately envisioned.

Cooke, the new CBS-TV sales Toronto man, formerly was associated with CBC as manager of station sales.

Peace, It's Wonderful

Chicago, May 7.

Radio station WLS, making its contribution to the Third National Conference On the Peaceful Uses of Space here, prepared a longplay record of a two-part interview it had aired recently with James E. Webb, administrator of National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The record was distributed to legislators, city officials and businessmen to urge attendance at the conference.

But gremlins at the company that pressed the records somehow managed to mix a few commercial releases into the shipment, and a few recipients must have been puzzled by the accompanying letter which in effect had said, Play this record and you will feel it your duty to register for the conference. The albums that got mixed in were rock 'n' roll wailings by Muddy Waters and an artist called Howling Wolf.

WNDT Says Next Season Lineup'l Duplicate Present

New York's educational Channel 13, WNDT, this morning (Wed.) holds a press conference to outline next season's schedule, and a station spokesman said yesterday the fall lineup would be much like this season with the same quota of entertainment, music and specials. In other words, any formerly proposed concessions to commercial donors is now allegedly out.

While there will be new shows in the nighttime slate, the spokesman said they would balance off against this season, the station's first. Such shows as "Art of Film" with Stanley Kaufman, specials like the Armory pickup of the early modern art exhibit and, the heralded interpretive news spread "World at 12" (even after the station's prexy Samuel Gould recently questioned the spread's underwriting by cig firm Philip Morris) will return Sept. 30.

This summer's slate will offer for the first time college courses for credit with some 30 institutions already lined up for the service. Courses in American history and math will be given in the morning with afternoon and nighttime repeats from July 1 through Aug. 23. Program subs the regular season in-school program of the Board of Education.

Jack Douglas as Own Distrib on Golf Spec

Jack Douglas will distribute his 26-minute golf spectacular, "The Golden Tee," with his own selling force at a cost of 17%. He offered the syndication rights to several major companies but none would accept his terms of 40% for distribution. Douglas organized his own crew of five "or more" after toting up the 52.7% cost of his previous subjects, mostly travel shows.

Neal D. Morris, former account exec for the NBC affiliate in Sacramento, will act as general sales manager. Golf special will be sold on an exclusive three-year unlimited run plan for local stations. Produced in color at a cost of $185,000 and featuring 10 of the top pros, the Douglas deviation from his travel shows, seven of them in syndication, offers more than 300 hints to golfers without presenting them in a tournament. Special was filmed at Rivera golf club here.

Barry & Enright Renewal Favored

Washington, May 7.

An FCC Hearing Examiner gave Jack Barry and Daniel Enright a clean bill of health as station owners and recommended license renewal for their WGMA-AM, Hollywood, Fla.

While Barry and Enright's action in the quiz show scandals was "censurable and not in any way to be condoned," Examiner Elizabeth Smith said their station deserves renewal for its "outstanding service."

The Initial Decision, subject to full Commission review, offered nothing but praise to the station.

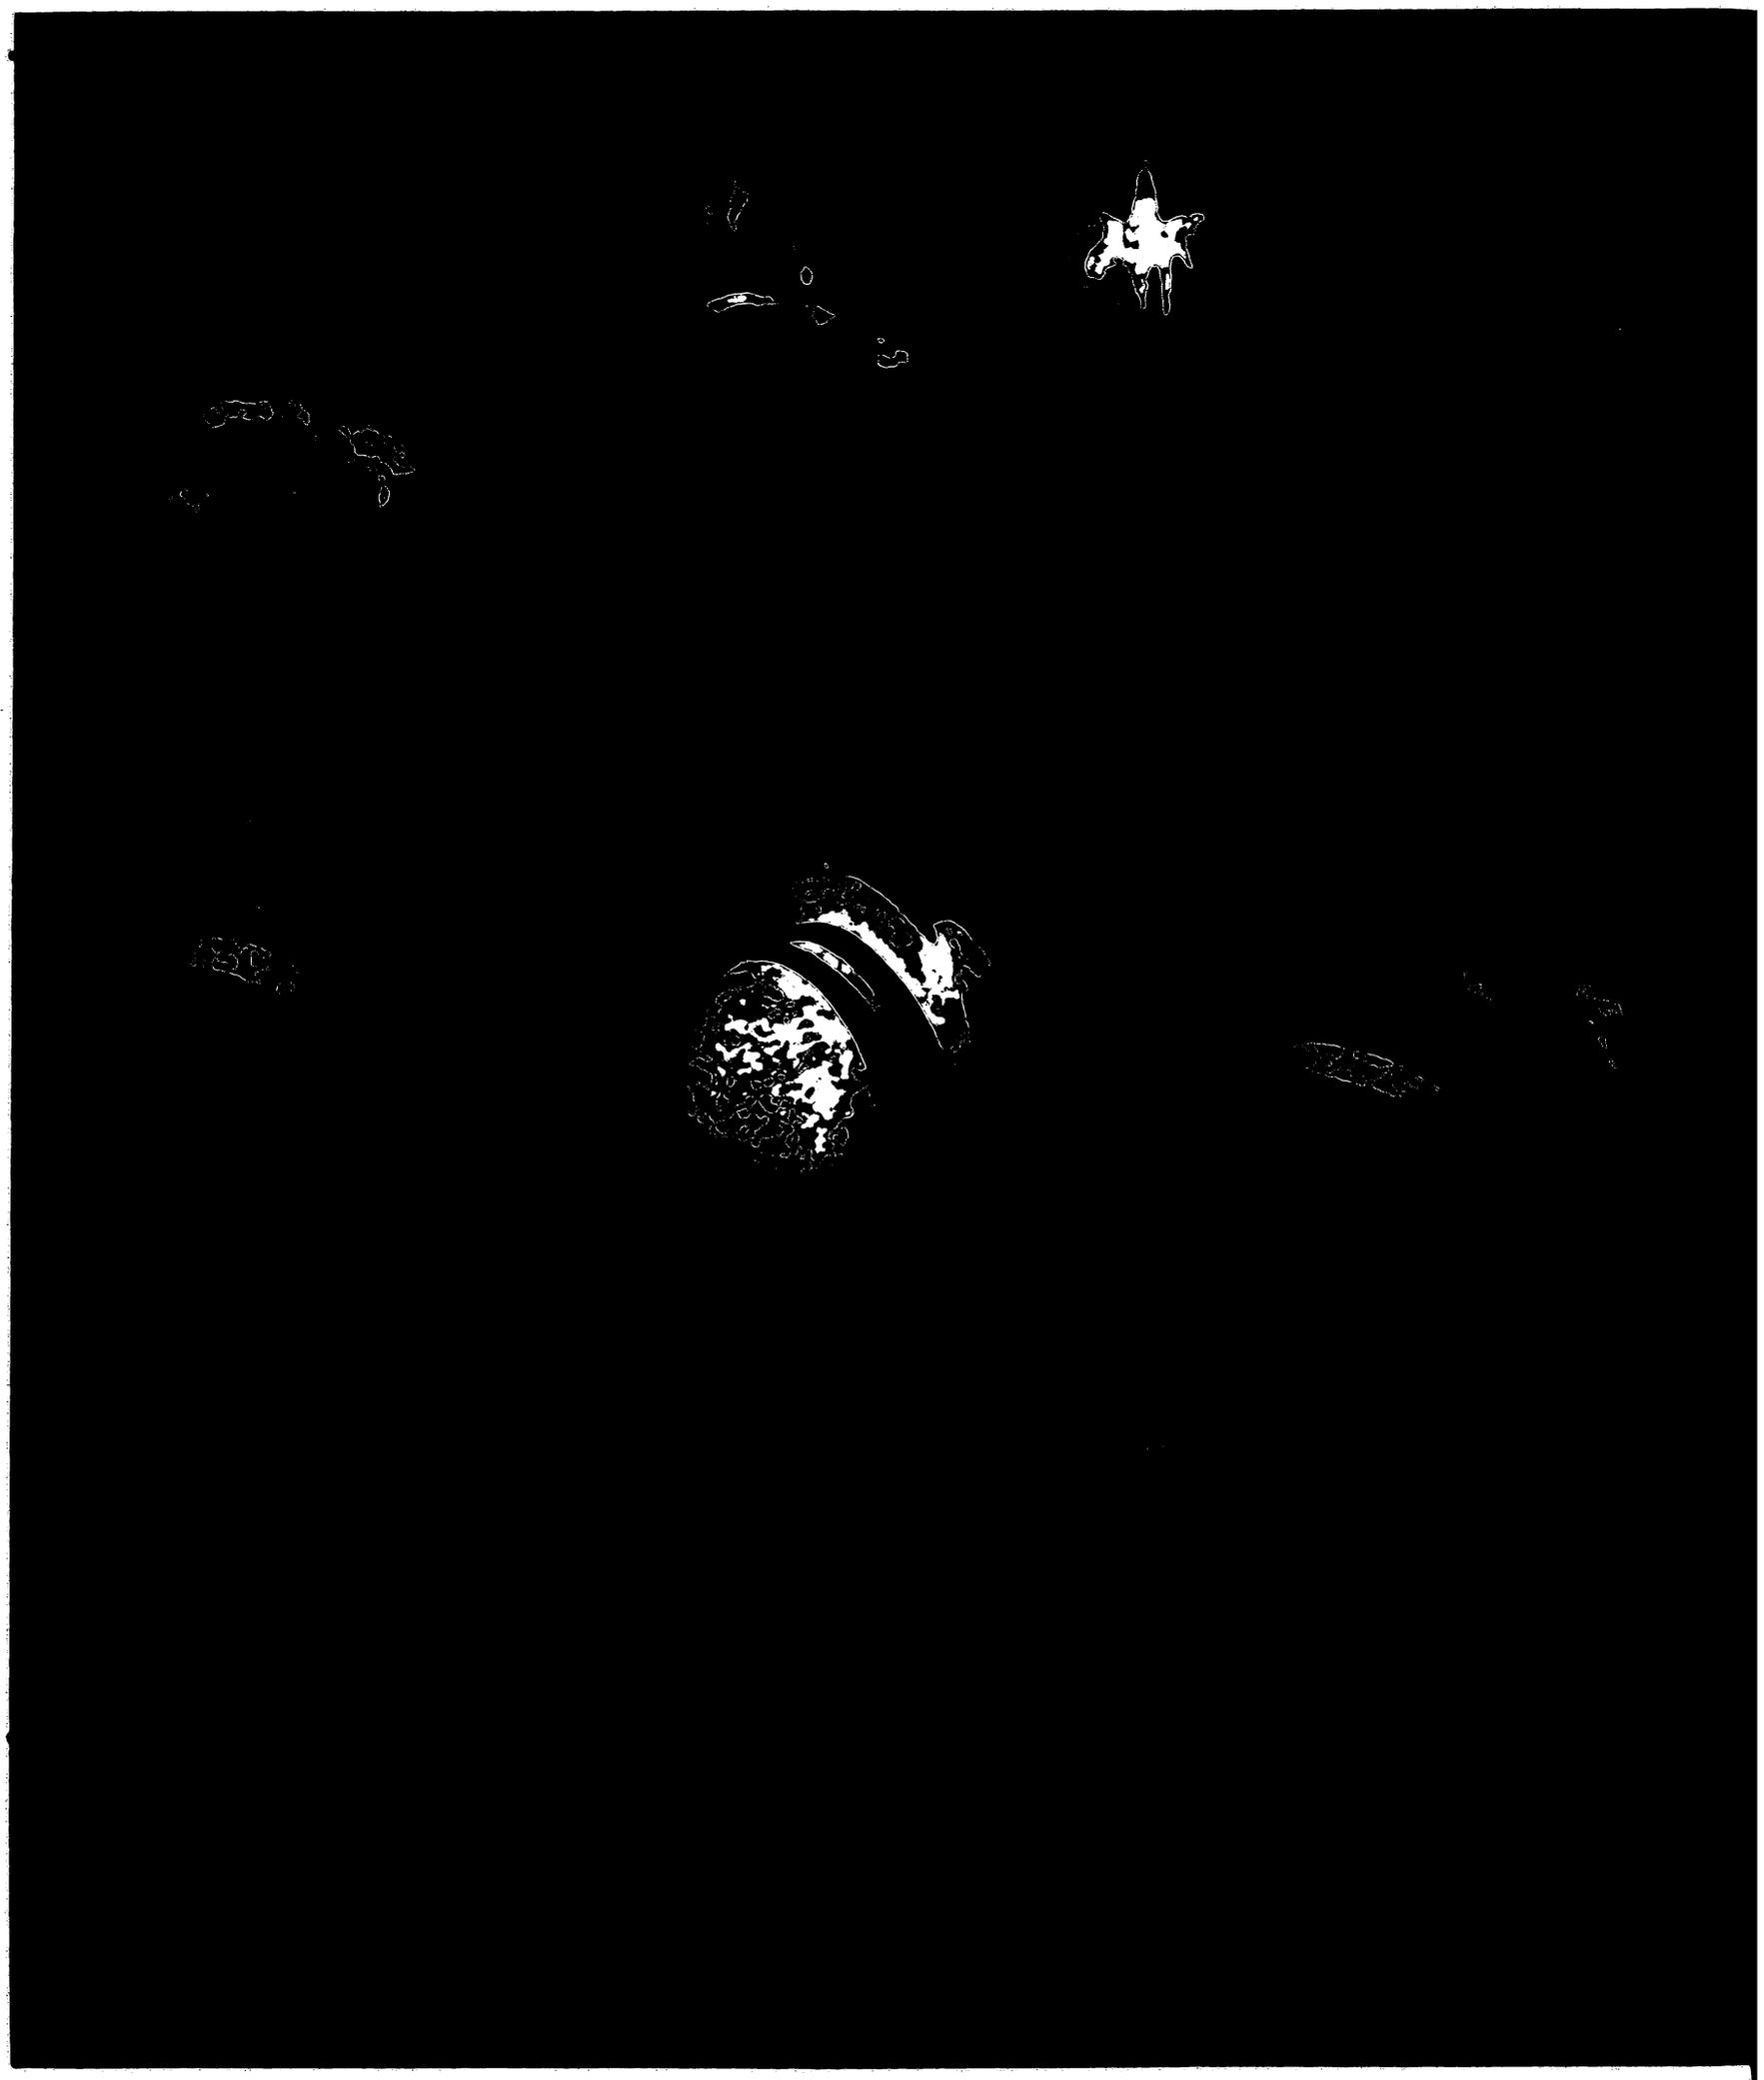
Smith emphasized no indictments or convictions were returned against Barry and Enright. She also said the rigged shows "21" and "Tic-Tac-Dough" were never aired on their station.

"Mistakes which were made in the past—and gross mistakes of judgment there were—have indelibly left their imprint on these men", (Barry and Enright), Smith said. "Steel which has been through the crucible of a fiery furnace is stronger than before," she opined.

The examiner said WGMA, a daytimer licensed by Melody Music, "renders a highly commendable service to the segment of the public which it is obligated to serve."

She praised Barry and Enright for performance beyond original promises made in the original 1957 request for license assignment.

Station was also kudosed for an "impressive" record of local live programming including religious, educational and publservice shows.



Have Girls, Will Travel

As an American night-club act playing the European circuit, Harry and his girls get into more scrapes than you can shake a visa at.

It's this busy, Continental background against which viewers will be seeing them this Fall, when "Harry's Girls"—based on the MGM film "Les Girls"—joins the other choice offerings on NBC-TV's new, glittering schedule.

A healthy fraction of the weekly comedy adventures will stem from star Larry Blyden's maneuvers to keep the act together whenever any of his three lovely charges shows signs of defecting.

Thus, he has to sabotage the plans of one for running off with a rajah who's "promised to marry me on our honeymoon;" and, on another occasion, he has to think even faster when he discovers all three girls posing as peasants in a small Vesuvian village in a bid for important parts in one of those honest-to-pizza Italian movies.

Mr. Blyden—a young comedy veteran whose many Broadway credits include "The Flower Drum Song" and "Oh, Men! Oh, Women!"—is a positively nifty choice as star of the new series.

As for his three beauteous companions, let it merely be said that Dawn Nickerson, Susan Silo and Diane Williams—all with well-rounded television and stage backgrounds—won out over 320 other actresses who applied for the coveted roles.

Shooting of the series has already been started in London by MGM-TV, producer of such successes as "Dr. Kildare" and "The Eleventh Hour."

We see we've neglected to mention that Harry's girls are a blonde, brunette and a redhead; but perhaps we didn't have to. After all, it's exactly the sort of variety which parallels—in a very small way—the dedication of NBC-TV's Fall programming to the broadest possible viewer-interest.

Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

THE HOOD OF THE SOUTH
Producer: Douglas Leiterman
Director: Leiterman, Daryl Fox
60 Mins., Wed., 9 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Toronto (film)

"It will be a long time before the South is ready for true integration—the integration of the heart." So producer-director Douglas Leiterman (formerly a newsman syndicated by the Southam chain of dailies) concluded his hour-long documentary, produced by Allan King Associates for CBC as the latter's third contribution to Intertel.

The show, filmed in Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina, was generally excellent, presenting both sides and some Negro self-criticism. About the only real flaw was a too-protracted dance sequence. Also, very few speakers were identified in any way. Don Ming's editing was standout.

After a discussion in which a Negro girl said, "Some Negro students think if they go out with a white girl they'll have prestige," Beryl Fox, who codirected, asked a Negro, "Will you take me on a date?" He said "Yes." Then they were seen being turned away from a movie. Striking in a Negro prayer meeting sequence, with strong-beat hymns and high-octane praying: were shots of fidgeting kids, all totally unimpressed, even by the rhythm, and one clearly skeptical of the whole thing.

A presumed Black Muslim speaker was followed by another Negro saying, "Get off the welfare! Build yourselves a place in society ... We hate laziness, drug addiction ... all the things the white man has taught us—because the white man knows we're more dangerous sober than drunk. He worries when we stop clowning and start thinking. We should keep him worried." Another: "The mistake we've made is leaving our women unprotected. Now we're teaching the white man to keep his hands and his eyes off our women."

United Klans of America Grand Dragon's talk of "...white Protestant ... upholding law and order ..." was followed by three flaming crosses on a lawn. The man who opened the show came back to say, "The Nigra wants to integrate the white woman. He'll never do it, anywhere! Those who would mongrelize the Anglo-Saxon race—that is your Jewish element ..." and "Hon." James P. Venable, Atlanta lawyer—"his family dates back to William of Normandy"—said, "The Jewish race is really the one behind mongrelization in the South ... The Nigras of the South are people of low education, illiterate. We will never place him on the level of the white man. Their only use is as good servants." Cut to the other man: "I've never known a Southerner who hated a Negro." Cut to Venable: "The Nigra is only 10 per cent of the population, yet he's responsible for over 50% of the crime, 82% of all illegitimacies and pregnancies of children under 17." Cut to a Negro: "Treat any group the way Negroes are treated and they'll react the same way—produce the largest body of crime."

A self-styled mulatto remarked, "Could my grandmother have taken advantage of a slave owner? ... I think it presumptuous of them to tell me where to go and not go because I'm a Negro—though if I can't make the grade as a person I'm happy to be excluded." Another Negro: "Teach the white people to suffer peacefully, turn the other cheek, love their enemies, if they want us to do so."

This documentary will prod a lot of people into thinking, wherever it is shown. Gard.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

The Jack Paar Show

Jack Paar is against blacklisting. After all he did help John Henry Faulk tell his story of suffering at the hands of Aware Inc., by solicitously interrupting the charming and professional Texan several times, and he did suggest that Goodson & Todman and other tv producers call and give John work. That would suggest that he, Jack Paar, and not C-T was the first to provide work to the long-suffering raconteur. Obviously, then, Paar is charitable as well as being against blacklisting.

But no man is perfect, not even Jack Paar, and, as he has pointed out (frequently) he can get angry. To put in another way he can be intolerant of lessers — including such as a VARIETY reviewer, one of whom recently used the adjective "cute" in a survey of a Paar Easter program. Speaking with heavily emphasized sincerity of that program, Paar said that he produced it "with love and reverence," that he had devoted to it "three months of hard work."

"I had Jesuits help me," he added. Then one of the VARIETY men dared to call the effort cute. So spoke Jack Paar, who, rising to the offense, once again threw down his massive challenge. "These newspaper people," he declaimed, "are getting out of line" and therefore he was ready to do battle stroak with these bad people. He's still Jack, the Giant killer. The modest lover of good, the hater of evil, and, above and beyond all else, the man who lets the world know how much he admires, indeed demands, accuracy and truth. None could conceivably deny that Jack Paar was more upset by the word "cute" (in reference to a segment done with children) than to the serious objections voiced by the critic against the unprofessionalism of some of the photographic and production techniques Paar developed, evidently in his three months of hard work.

When Faulk told a story on himself, about how the courts decided his reputation was worth $3,500,000, his host, without the flicker of humor, submitted by tone and manner as how his reputation might be worth even more. When confronted by this, he will be hurt, genuinely hurt, and indicate that he was villainously misunderstood yet another time.

His performance last Friday (3) on NBC-TV undershadowed the guest stands by a sparkling Phyllis Diller and witty Alexander King but was at least as impressive as the slightly mechanical performance of Gisele MacKenzie.

(The VARIETY quote of his Easter Sunday show, in its entirety, and not out context as Paar chose to interpret it: "Informing viewers that this would not be one of those 'heavy documentaries', Paar launched a tour that evoked more enthusiasm from him than the viewer. It had a couple of moments, however. There was an opening seg, with intro by the emcee's daughter, that featured quick takes of young kids in their versions of God. Cute. There was a helicopter swing over the Biblical land that often was so blurred and shaky that it might as well have been Vietnam. Gospel singer Mahalia Jackson, who can follow a helicopter anywhere anytime, brought the show up with a swinging religious number that had more jazz, blues and bounce than reverence ...")

Would appear that VARIETY appraisal of 'Cute' still goes. Art.

Howard K. Smith

An "unscientific" survey of foreign students by ABC-TV's Howard K. Smith now in this country helped answer the question of what the rest of the world thinks of the U.S. The reactions of youngsters from Greece, Italy, Africa and England added up to a portrait which should have unsettled the American people's flattering view of themselves. Almost unanimously, the foreign students faulted America's sense of values, its widespread racist attitudes and, most surprisingly, the clumsiness of its political system. Although Smith pointed out that most visiting students ultimately come around to a more sympathetic view of America, their initial reactions were undoubtedly symptomatic of a prevailing and pervading view of America.

Also on hand on the Smith stanza was Ed Murrow, USIA chief. Murrow, as usual, approached the problem of the American image shrewd with boldness and intelligence. He said that the USIA's "propaganda of the word" was negligible compared to the American's people's "propaganda by the deed." In this connection, Smith closed his show by pointing to the newspaper photo showing a police dog biting a Negro in Birmingham. Smith predicted that this photo would be given maximum circulation by the Communists, seriously impairing America's world influence.

Making his fifth appearance on CBS-TV over the last three years, Walter Lippmann is now fairly well-defined as a personality and thinker for tv audiences. It can now be safely predicted that Lippmann's view of the world will be characterized by a broad historical view and a sober appraisal of the global balance of power.

In conversation with correspondent Charles Collingwood, last Wednesday night (1) in the "CBS Reports" series, the veteran columnist, now in his 73d year, again made a comprehensive review of the state of the world. Under Collingwood's questioning, Lippman covered such problems as the Sino-Soviet split, the artistic revolt in Russia, the emergence of a new post-postwar Europe and the disappearance of the class struggle, and such political figures as Khrushchev, Adenauer, De Gaulle, Pres. Kennedy and Defense Secretary Robert McNamara. On the question of Governmental managing of news, Lippman gave a big plug to Jim Hagerty, press secretary for former Pres. Eisenhower and now ABC news chief, as "the biggest news manager of them all."

The sobriety and lucidity of Lippmann's analysis are a welcome supplement to television's regular news reportage and commentary. However, these semi-annual chats with Lippman are taking on the aura of pilgrimages to the High Llama of Political Wisdom. Collingwood poured forth of his questions as if Lippmann had the key to international affairs in his pocket. The latter answered in a more tentative vein than the questions, but nonetheless spoke like one who already stalked out the guide posts of the future. Perhaps more challenges from the interlocutor would help Lippmann to convey how speculative his answers to the enormously complex interplay of political problems really are.

Tonight

The spark of Bob Hope was insufficient to light up Thursday's (2) outing of Johnny Carson's "Tonight" NBC-TV show.

Hope, by the time he came on, had to fight an uphill battle to win eye-opening support. Carson opened on the zilly side speaking about a silly nose contest, which may be okay for some insomnia addicts who might take their own problems too seriously. However, nothing built from there until Hope came on.

Patrice Munsel opened with a nice vocal, and then sat it out with Carson trading chitchat. On the whole, their exchange was forced, and Miss Munsel seemed to be desperately trying to throw out leads, some of which could only be described as cute, even those bordering on the sexy side. It sounded too much like an adolescent conversation veering towards pseudo-sophistication.

William Saroyan came in and told a funny story about man versus the inhuman machine of banks. His bit though was minor. Hope took his position and for a half-hour there were sufficient emliners to keep viewer interest. Windup was a solo act by Unelli with miniature instruments. It was novel but overlong. More.

The Story Of ... Sammy Cahn

Sammy Cahn was the subject of an engrossing and fascinating brief-to biography on David Wolper's "The Story Of ..." on WNBC-TV, N.Y., last Thursday. Considering the fact that it was framed within the show's 30-minute limited format, it was remarkably penetrating, capturing not only the man (whom and in tandem with collaborator Jimmy Van Heusen) but severing the show his flower and atmosphere background ing his highly successful career.

Since Cahn himself is a man of distinctive style, personality and behaviour patterns, with some unique comedic strains, his running commentary (embellished by a slick scripting job by Al Ramrus and Mel Stuart) provided an added fillip to the pictorial documentation.

It was built around Cahn creating a ditty set for Juliette Prowse —from the inception of the idea to her Vegas opening. But in the telling, it recounted the life & times of Sammy Cahn with telling impact and high entertainment values — Cahn in "conference", Cahn at work, Cahn at Lindy's; Cahn revisiting the East Side to never never the hot latches of his boyhood, Cahn reading DAILY VARIETY and lamenting "they didn't use my name on any page"; Cahn enjoying the domesticity of his lush Brentwood surroundings, doing a "Cahn job" on Sinatra, Sammy Davis, Dean Martin, et al.

Du Pont Show of the Week

A minor mystery mellor that went through its uninspired paces was presented Sunday (5) on NBC-TV's "DuPont Show of the Week." Titled, "Something to Hide," it was billed as the first work to be presented in America by English author-actor Leslie Sands. It's nice to have hands across the sea flourishing and all that, but a dull play remains a dullie on this side of the Atlantic, too.

Colleen Dewhurst as the unloved woman publisher lent all that she could to the role of the enigmatic lady publisher. Dirk Kenimon, as her dependent, scheming writer husband who finally does himself in, wasn't too convincing. His role bordered on the play acting of an adolescent's dream, if that adolescent would write a mystery mellor, with a weak author as one of the pegs. Henry Jones as the native district attorney had the best time of it. He was convincing, engaging, and intelligent, in a native, winning sort of way.

Locale of the setting was never firmly established, although events were supposed to be a writer's retreat in Connecticut. The femme fatale was portrayed by Hilda Brawner in a brittle manner. None of the characters ever came alive. Best moments were when the checkerboard plot technique of the author held some interest and these moments were few.

statement of McCarthy began this way: "The stranglehold on trading conditions, with which world buyers of U. S. television programs have harassed producers and distributors since the inception of export sales, will be breached by 1964 ..."

That, according to one critic, is a hard-sell which might alienate customers rather than bring them around to a more realistic price. A key TPEA member, though, brushed aside such criticism. He said that he has heard no one in TPEA criticizing McCarthy for the boldness of his statements.

An oddity of the situation is that Fineshriber, who now heads the tv committee of MPEA, was the consultant who helped organize TPEA. Another oddity is that McCarthy years back was second in command at MPEA, when he split with Eric Johnston.

The way one foreign exec summed it up is that "we do have two organizations. They best learn to live well with one another. There' too much at stake for anything less."

THE ESTABLISHMENT
With John Bird, Eleanor Bron, John Fortune, Jeremy Geidt, Carole Simpson
Producer: Daryl Duke
30 Mins., Sun. 10:30 p.m.
CBC, from Toronto

Canada, which of course has seen "Beyond the Fringe," got its first glimpse of "The Establishment" via CBC's taping of the British group, now at the Strollers' Club, N.Y. Concluding sketch couldn't have been more timely — Carole Simpson in an almost savage caricature of Queen Elizabeth "former Empress of India," condoning independence on Quebec province—"and when that day comes (when we need you) remember us, for God's sake!"

Another controversial, brilliant sketch had a layman pompfootingly intimating to a doctor that he'd like to find a good abortionist for "two friends of mine" That was superbly done by John Bird and John Fortune. Bird also did a smoothie on Jomo Kenyatta, smilingly chatting about "streets swirling with a bit of white man's blood."

"The Lord Privy Seal," shown discussing Britain's negotiations to enter the European Economic Community, remarked that "De Gaulle himself won't available—he'd gone out for a walk across the lake." "We are considering employing the present Duke of Wellington, whose very name we feel will put the fear of God into them!"

Deadpan Eleanor Bron sang an endless, anti-melodic, far-out, presumed parody—an industrious attempt to fuse brain and Bron. But, overall, the stanza was sharp and stimulating, with scintillating performances and with good over-all production by Daryl Duke.

FUTURES INDEFINITE
With Ray Purcell
Producer: Robert C. Cochrane
Director: Art Ford
Writer: George Gipe
30 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
WMAR-TV, Baltimore (film)

High school dropouts have been the object of attention of late and "Futures Indefinite" was WMAR-TV's exploration of the problem and the word for it was effective.

The documentary, which was topped with an editorial delivered by Robert C. Cochrane as to the steps that might be taken to correct the situation, was a smooth and reasonably clear look at the problem.

With Ray Purcell, himself a highschool student, acting as a dropout, viewers were given a bleak picture of the dropout's future.

Purcell, as the student, was shown hiding his time in school, making the break, working at a series of occupations, learning what chances of future employment were and then finally ending up at night school where one young mother said she went back to school because she didn't want to appear unknowing to her children. She wanted to have some answers, she said, and school was the place to get them.

Camerawork was good, the script was coherent and conclusions were logical though it was never made clear what dropout's chances of returning to high school (daytime) were.

Despite this, however, message was obvious and it's likely that highschool students watching it, benefitted by it. Luce.

Anthony Quinn, you know you've got something big going for you."

He has praiseworthy words for his programming team, particularly Mike Dann and Oscar Katz, and likes the way they operate and fit into the Aubrey operational pattern.

Doing what has to be done, Aubrey concedes, doesn't come easy, for once the administrative chores are out of the way a whole new day (and evening) begins—endless hours devoted to the care and feeding and nursing of the performers, the writers, the directors, the producers, the agents, the would-be and the current impresarios, all of whom feel entitled to his time.

Yet, for a guy who, in Madison Ave. vernacular, operates 25 hours a day, eight days a week, Aubrey can bounce with the tv ball with considerable finesse.

THE CLIFF RICHARD SHOW
With Cliff Richard, The Shadows, Millicent Martin, Daly & Wayne, Bill James, Rita Williams Singers, Harry Rabinowitz orch
Producer: Neville Wortman
Writers: Allan Scott, John Law
45 Mins., Sun., 7:05 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

First in a series of spectaculars—BBC-TV's main vaude contribution to the summer—this was a slick and undemanding effort, sticking to a familiar formula, and allowing Cliff Richard to do what come naturally. As unassuming lad, Richard's voice has gained in ease and precision with experience, and he exercised it here to fetching effect. Items included his chart-topping "Bachelor Boy," a lilting "Walk Right In," the haunting theme from the "Black Orpheus" movie (to idiot lyric), and his latest waxing, "Lucky Lips." The display proved his pre-eminence amongst local squeal-raisers, and also showed off the immaculate backing of the Shadows, the guitar-and-drums quartet who have a disk reputation on their own as an instrumental group. A folk medley, taking in "Greensleeves" and "Molly Malone," allowed them to take off their jackets in a relaxed and charming interlude, with Richard forgoing his note-bending vocal gimmick.

Millicent Martin, the slick, shrill thrush of "TWTWTW," efficiently delivered "Just in Time" and "Newfangled Tango" without dimming memories of other performers. The metallic tinge to her voice is individual, but can be grating, and she erred in wearing the black dress she'd worn the previous evening, which either showed paucity or a small wardrobe. She joined Richard in the expected duet, which conveyed their mutual pleasure.

Daly & Wayne, a comic duo, purveyed impressions of Elvis, Mowlay, Vaughan, etc. with much zest. While one sang, the other went through the actions—which was, at least, unusual. With sharper things to say, they might make more impact.

Bill James, the crumpet-faced hero of another skein, also guested but, on this occasion, brought little except his wholesome personality. In fact, the show depended too much on delighted recognition of the familiar, and the cozy atmosphere, well maintained, was somewhat at odds with Lionel Bart's glossy arts, inspired by a supermarket. Neville Wortman produced smoothly, and some offbeat dancing was forgivably introduced and would have benefited from more conviction. Otte.

DETECTIVE STORY
With Hans Christian Bloch, Margit Saalfrank, Karl John, Ruth Brandt, Bruno Dietrich, Rudolf Wehr, Heinz Bennent, Konrad Wagner, others
Director: Theo Mezger
Writer: Sidney Kingsley
90 Mins.; Sun., 8:05 p.m.
West-German TV, from Stuttgart

Sidney Kingsley's "Detective Story", ably translated into German by Joachim Ruth, emerged as one of the most exciting and convincing features native tv has had to offer in quite some time. The German tv version was not as hard-hitting and rough as the well remembered William Wyler film a dozen of years ago, but concentrated more on the story's psychological ingredients and thereby fared extremely well.

Practically the entire action took place in a N.Y. police station. It was, in effect, merely an hour-by-hour report of incidents that occur at the station and was a story of personalities, even presenting the detectives as human beings, some kind, some not.

Hans Christian Bloch, one of Germany's foremost actors, at his very best portrayed McLeod in a magnificent piece of acting. There were excellent performances all down the line, especially Margit Saalfrank as Mrs. McLeod and Karl John as Lt. Monaghan. Hans.

ADVENTURE
(Quest under Capricorn)
With David Attenborough
Producer: Attenborough
Editor: Brian Branston
30 Mins., Fri., 7:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

The results of four months' travels in the Northern Territory of Australia by David Attenborough and his film unit are to be presented in six half-hours, and this initialler made an absorbing intro, guaranteed to tantalize for later segments. It concentrated upon the aboriginals of the southern desert, and, in particular, the nature of the gods they worship and their skill at survival in an environment fatal to white men.

Although attempts were made to corral them into white civilization with steady jobs, food, and clothing in settlements, many took off for the barren land of their forefathers. The program tracked a group of them, showing their expertise in extracting nourishment from unpromising roots, in finding the only sources of water in hundreds of miles, and in stalking kangaroos. They were shown making their primitive tools from flakes of rocks, with handles from resin.

Attenborough's commentary skillfully provided such detail as that the natives could even recognize the track of a relation they had not seen for 20 years. And the half-hour, tautly edited by Brian Branston, clearly described the ancient lineage of their religion, with the snake as its father-figure, and its meaning as expressed in art, songs and other symbols. Climax was a ritual in which an aboriginal acted out his faith for the instruction of younger members.

It made, in fact, one of the most telling travelogues of its kind since Attenborough's last stein, with nary a fault. Otte.

BEST OF FRIENDS
With Charles Hawtrey, Hylda Baker, Sheena Marsha, Freddie Mills, Arnold Diamond, Gerry Dixon, Gerry Colleano, Derek Royal, Eric Rean
Producer: Ernest Maxin
Writers: Reed Ashton, Bob Block, Gerry Mandy
30 Mins., Sun., 5:10 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Manchester

Slapstick, of the pie-in-the-eye variety, was enthusiastically dished out in this opener, which brought together Charles Hawtrey, spindle-limbed and unexpressive, and Hylda Baker, a blackbusting and beefy North-country comedienne with a flair for mispronouncing. The partnership did not quite jell, mainly because the plot kept them too far apart for most of the action, but prizefighting incidents were plentiful and, on its homely level, the show will find a welcome.

Idea was that Hawtrey, an insurance man, was mistaken as a prizefighter and signed for a championship bout. Miss Baker helped him win by putting iron in his opponent's gloves and going under the ring with a magnet. Other incidental capers included a hilarious moment with Miss Baker caught up in the interior of a dish-washing machine, and other gags were of similar caliber.

Guest support from ex-pugilists Freddie Mills and Eric Rean was okay, and Sheena Marsha registered as a curvaceous dumbbell. In the very minor parts, crudity prevailed, and producer Ernest Maxin ensured that there were few gaps between the knockabout gags, most of the troupe playing horizontally for much of the time. Sunday Night at the Palladium

In its hunt for topliners, who tend to be waxers, Associated Television's "Sunday Night at the Palladium" too often lacks balance. The fault was avoided in this well-judged segment, which was topped by chart-maker Frank Ifield and salted by a couple of guesting U.S. acts. Ifield, who must beware the unvarying tooth-flashing and the undulating gait, bowed in with the familiar "I Remember You" and followed with a charming "Daybreak," a jaunty "Nobody's Darling," and an up-tempo and foot-tapping version of the Australian "Waltzing Matilda" in honor of ma and pa. It made a sprightly offering, and Ifield's brand of Swiss-tinged country-and-western kept its individual flavor.

The Kingston Trio also clicked with a suave and immaculate routine of folk numbers with the rural edges rubbed off. They didn't indulge in any gimmicks, but let the music swing for itself, which it obediently did. Their closing "Ballad of the Reuben James," in

GIRL TALK
With Virginia Graham, others
Producer: Monty Morgan
Director: Robert Dahlquist
30 Mins., Mon.-Fri., 1:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WABC-TV, New York

This ABC Films daytime strip (now in about 20 markets) is just what the name implies—"Girl Talk," or gossip and chit-chat in video panel-show format.

Ringleader Virginia Graham, an ample, jolly femme with blonde hair teased into a mountain, seems to have a strong instinct for the gossip that will give the sunshine viewers their kicks, and, under the joviality, she firmly steers the conversation into areas of her choosing.

Show caught featured Miss Graham and guests Phyllis Battelle, a Hearst columnist; Actress Silvia Miles, from the recent Broadway show, "Riot Act;" and Joyce Davidson, former Canadian and U.S. tv personality (the defunct "Miss Fabian-Westinghouse nighttime strip); now a press agent.

Under Miss Graham's persistent hammering, the half hour was primarily devoted to gossip about the Liz-Dick-Eddie triangle. It must be admitted that much of it was humorworthy stuff. It was also pretty rough in some of the innuendo.

Miss Davidson introduced the subject into the conversation in the first place, telling about how she had recently met Sybil Burton in London. That Miss Graham is quick to psych a juicy morsel was indicated in her closing apology to Phyllis Battelle, when she told the columnist they'd get around to "IBM marriages" some other time. Apparently the machine couplings were to be a major topic of the talk.

In other words, this is a spread of femme gab of slight intellectual heft, but the tabloid aspects should appeal to the daytime femme viewers. Bill.

I AM WITH YOU
With Herman Rees, Donald Davis
Producers: Martin Reade, Richard J. Walsh
Director: Reade
Writer: Phillip Scharper
30 Mins., Sun. (6), 1:30 p.m.
NBC-TV (film)

NBC and the National Council of Catholic Men are co-producing a four-part history of the Catholic Church, which began inconspicuously Sunday (6). Its story was overly ambitious and its aim largely overexposed.

The initial half-hour, known as "The Beginnings," vainly attempted to cover the first several centuries of Christianity. Phillip Scharper's script tended to ramble and then leap, leaving a viewer who is untrained in Catholic history confused and numbed. The film, credited to photographer Joseph Vadala, should be categorized as uninspired traveling, which further suffered from having been shot in too much sunlight without proper filtering or through inexact laboratory treatment. Art.

Ills of the nation's railroads were highlighted in this telementary. While the half-hour show presented little that was new, it served to underline the importance of the iron horse to the nation's economic health. Film clips from the Association of American Railroads were edited with locally-filmed coverage. The views of the empty Union Station waiting room eloquently stated the alarming passenger travel situation.

Competition caused by cut-in of trucks, barge lines, pipe-lines and other carriers was given visual documentation. Commentary, written by Tom Dorsey and narrated by Ray Briscoe, pointed out that everyone has an economic stake in the survival of the railroads.

Emphasis on the ills of railroading left little time for an exploration of possible remedies in the way of use of scientific advances which may be used to keep the rails competitive. That could well be the subject for a future telementary. Fopo.

TAKE TWO
With Don McNeill, host
Producer: Jim McLaughlin
Director: Bob Julian
30 Mins., Sun., 4:30 p.m.
U.S. GYPSUM
ABC-TV, from Chicago
(Fulton, Morrissey Co.)

One of the rare network entries to originate nowadays from Chicago, "Take Two" is a moderately entertaining game show sparked by the genial hosting of Don McNeill, veteran topliner of ABC Radio's Chi-based "Breakfast Club." Since the calibre of any game show can be no higher than the intrinsic excitement of the game itself, "Take Two" has a fair potential that still needs considerable development.

The game is pegged to the recognition of similarities within groups of four pictures. Two teams compete with each other in matching the pictures in the shortest possible time. As an instance, with photos of Groucho Marx, Bertrand Russell, a pooch and Jimmy Durante, the contestants had to match up Groucho with Durante, both being comedians. It was not an exhausting challenge to the intellect.

On the preem, the game was initially played by two "celebrity teams." Julie Newmar and Joel Grey were pitted against Julie Wilson and her husband, Mike McAlaney. Then two just-plain-Joe teams played the game. By a scoring method that was the most complicated aspect of the show, the winning team won $750 and the losers were consoled with $270.

McNeill maintains an even temperament throughout, revealing a pleasing talent for projecting prepared jokes without pretending to be tv's greatest wit. Herm.

ADVERTISING—THE MIRACLE MOVEMENT
("Dateline: Chicago")
With Jim Conway, narrator; Sandra Gale, Everett Clarke, others
Producer-Director: Dave Barshiner
Writer: Paul Zara
30 Mins., Mon., 9:30 p.m.
HOME FEDERAL SAVINGS
WNBQ, Chicago (tape)
(Adv. Division)

About the worst that might be said for last Monday's "Dateline: Chicago" entry on WNBQ is that it wasn't at all objective, but in this case that doesn't rate a demerit. Unabashedly, it was a pictorial poem in praise of advertising, presented with such a light fantastic touch as to leave no room for philosophical debate. More diverting than it was informative, the 30 minute program scored on the basis of nostalgia, ingenuity and charm.

Through what was virtually a video montage of old and new radio commercials, print ads and tv blurbs, the program sketched the growth of advertising in the U.S., showing how it has become part of our culture and how it has improved our standard of living through making necessities of the luxuries. Remnants of old radio programs still fondly remembered, early tv commercials and print campaigns struck a humorous note for their lack of sophistication, pointing up implicitly how far we've come.

Producer-director Dave Barshiner wove the multitude of soil slogans together imaginatively and with wit, and Paul Zara fashioned a good script. Jim Conway was a plus as the amiable narrator, and Everett Clarke and Sondra Gair showed flair in voicing the copy of the print ads. A fine job all around, proving that good taste and a sense of humor often has a fancier payoff than scholarly research. Even the credits were delightful. Les.

WHITE HOUSE MILITARY RECEPTION
With Sander Vanocur, Ray Scherer, Nancy Hanschmann Dickerson Producer-Chet Hagan
Directors: Bob Priest, Charles Jones
60 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
NBC-TV from Washington (tape)

Everytime President Kennedy sneezes, the networks, it has been noted accusingly, jump in with three cameras and a bottle of Anahist. Taking the NBC News special of last Thursday (2) as an example, a charge of over-solicitousness and over-interest is not without justification.

Not everything Kennedy does is necessarily newsworthy enough to merit a full-hour of prime television time. But NBC News committed an hour, which was at least 45 minutes more than was needed, to the coverage of the White House fete for military leaders and Congressional Medal winners. Except to satisfy the vicarious needs of that segment of the audience which loves to see well-dressed visitors stroll around the White House lawn, drinks in hand, the program served no valid public purpose.

President Kennedy's welcoming message, which was hardly his most stirring or important, could have been covered in a few seconds on the late news. The rest of the program consisted of a dull parade, seen in black and white and from afar, and stilted interviews, with some Medal winners, which should have been determinedly edited. They weren't edited because, obviously, NBC was scratching to fill that 60-minute period.

Nancy Hanschmann Dickerson, lately of CBS News, made her first appearance on an NBC special and she was most unimpressive journalistically. She worked next to NBC regulars Sander Vanocur and Ray Scherer, who were forced by time requirements to ramble and who completely forgot or wilfully ignored developing, much less mentioning, one of the few valid news items connected with the reception. Many viewers must have been interested in White House reaction, or lack of it, to the absence of the former Marine Captain and Medal winner embroiled in the death of an alleged Cuban spy.

The special program was ragged, dull and quite superfluous. Art.

FOCAL POINT PHONE CONFERENCE
With Arch Macdonald, Bob Lape, moderators
Executive Producer: Ken Little Producers: Thomas Knott, Don Griffin
60 Mins.; Tues., 8:30 p.m.
WBZ-TV, Boston

Take four of Massachusetts' top legislators, drop them in front of a tv camera and a mike, stir them up with queries from viewers and listeners, and there are the ingredients for a tasty political potpourri.

Such was the dish served up by WBZ-TV (and radio) in a live simulcast which gave viewers and listeners a unique opportunity to fire away for an hour at two state Democratic leaders—Senate President John Powers and House Speaker John Thompson—and two Republican leaders—Senate Minority Leader Philip Graham and House Minority Leader Sidney Curtiss.

Fortunately for the audience, "Focal Point Phone Conference" generated a minimum of ineludio interparty debate. But outside of a few lapses into political lequacity, the legislators stuck to the business at hand, providing the public with some interesting and informative answers.

Questions were knowledgeable, ranging from legislative conflict of interest and pay raises, influence of lobbyists, constitutional conventions and legalized offtrack betting, to the abolition of the Governor's Council and capital punishment.

As part of the Westinghouse Hub outlet's ambitious and distinguished yearlong series of monthly pubaffairs programs dealing with Mass. government, "Phone Conference" rendered a singular service to its viewers and listeners. Guy.

SENNETT'S WKBW POST
Buffalo, May 7

David Sennett is the new program director of WKBW, shifting over from WPRO, in Providence.

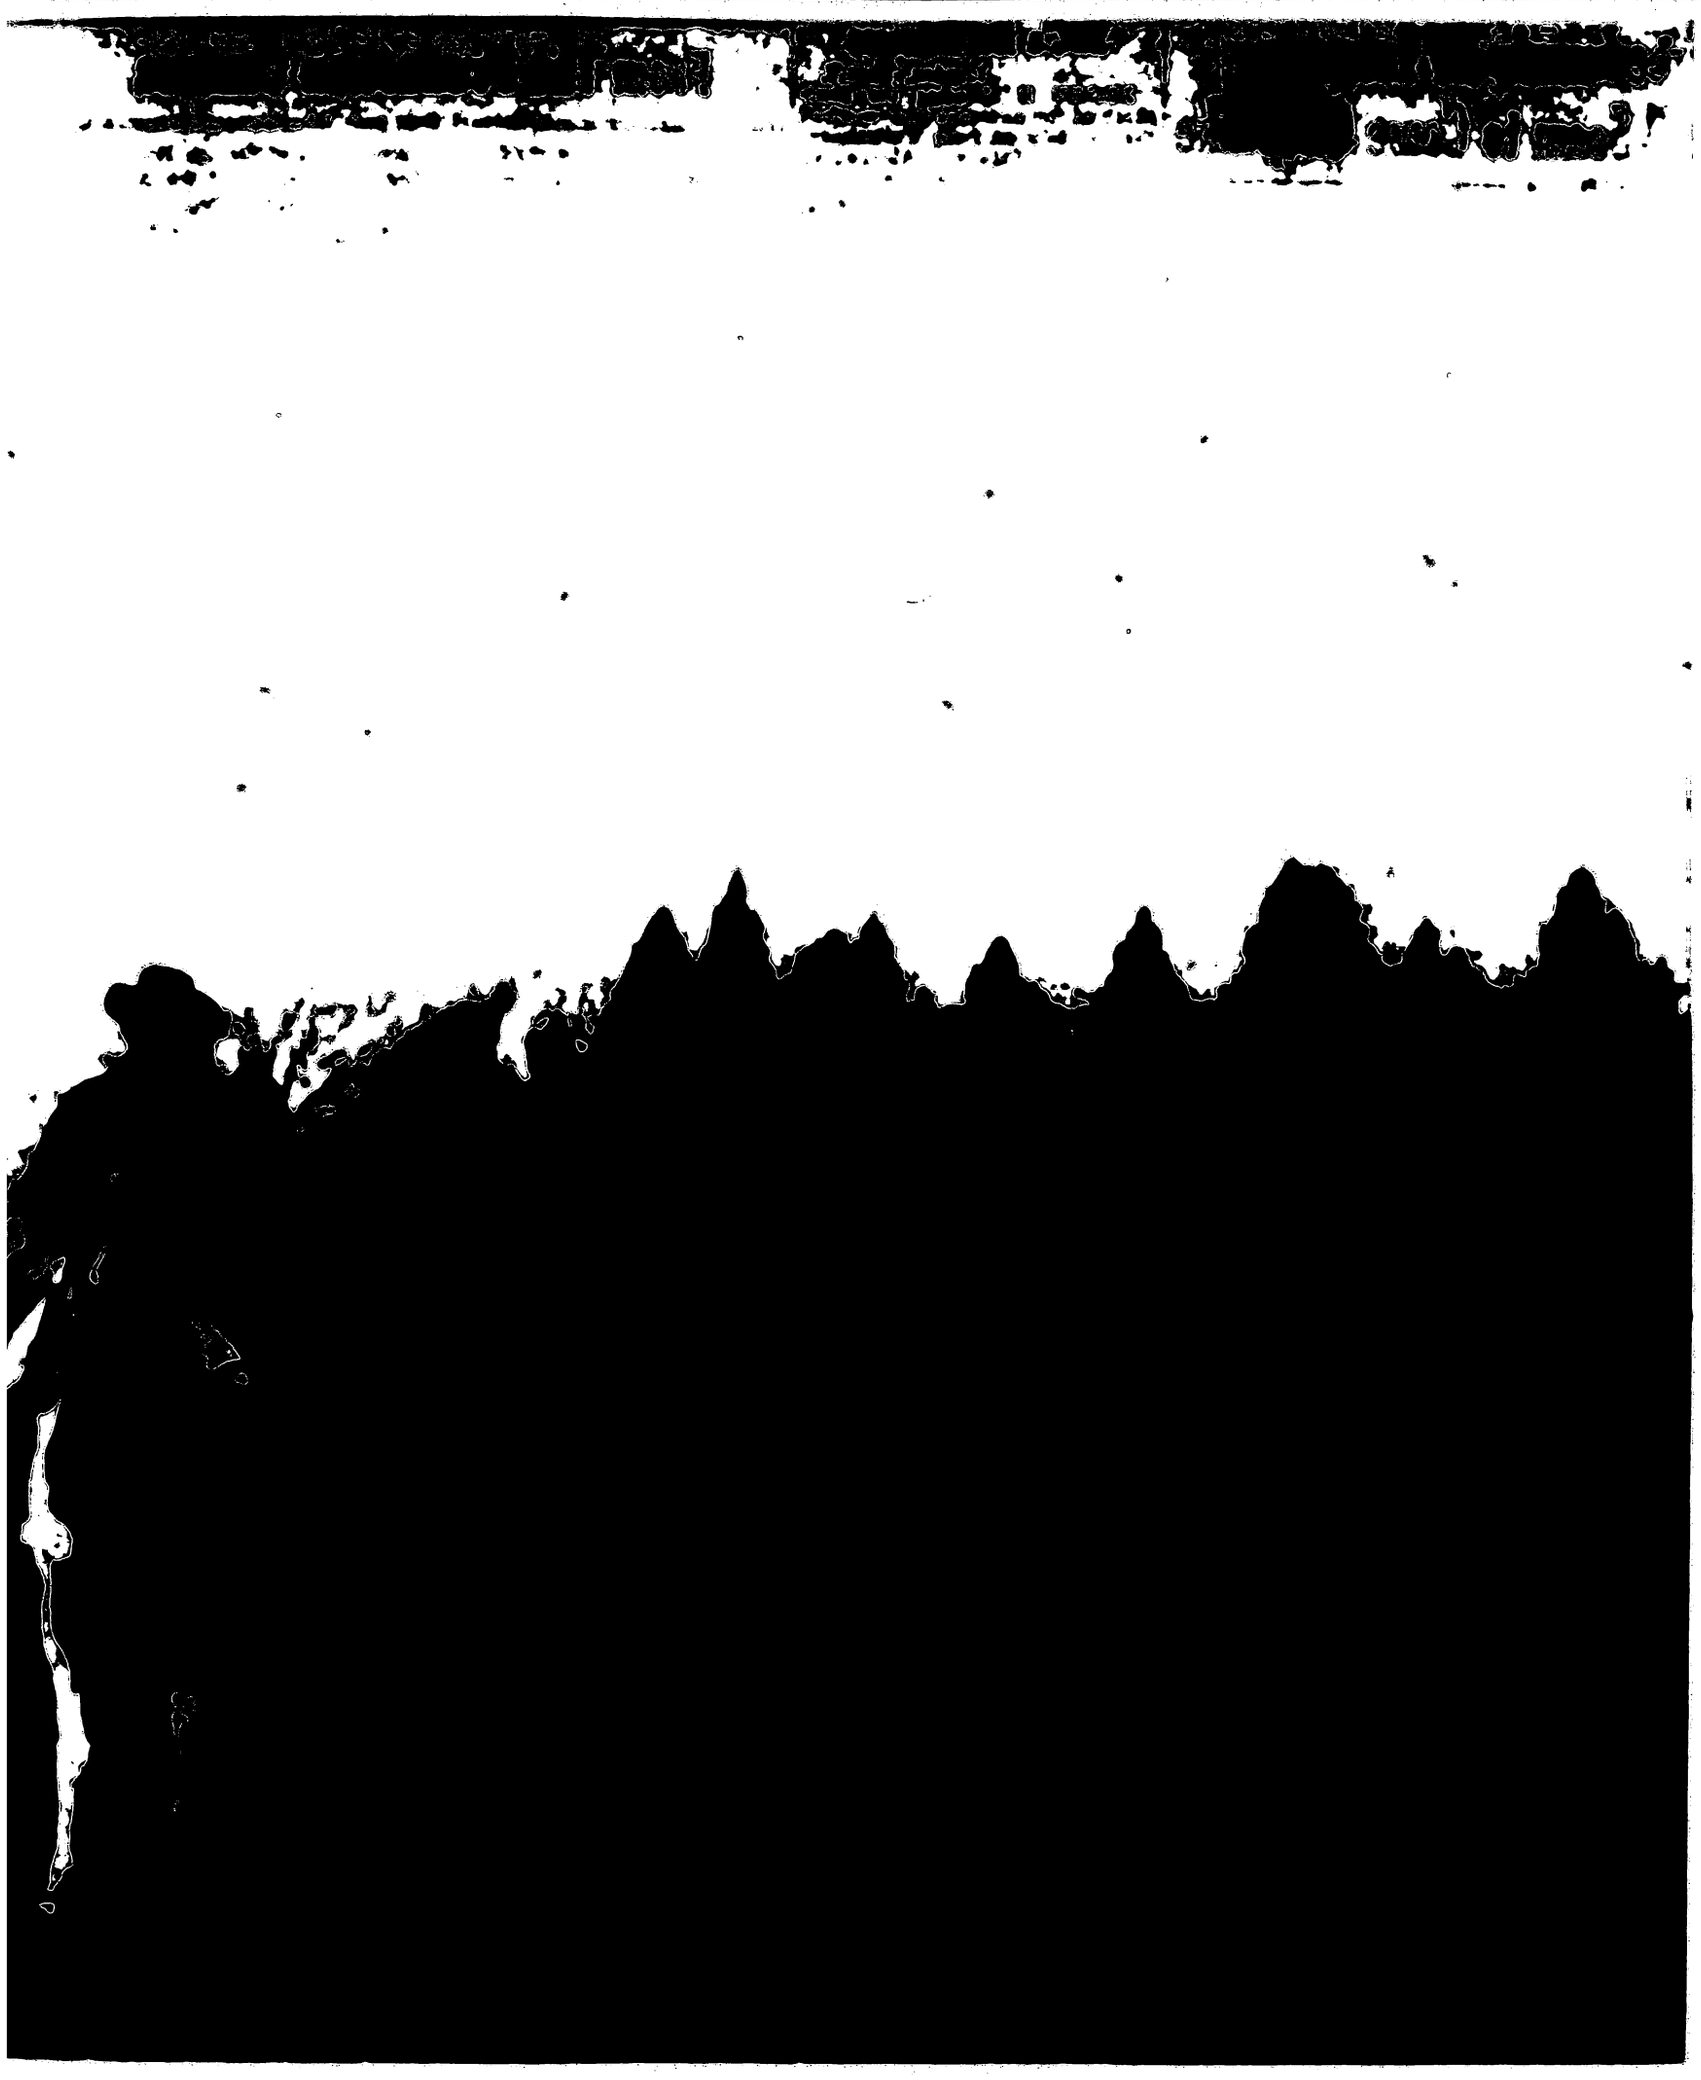
Bigger than the Scenery

A thousand square miles is a lot of back yard for any family to own. That the Cartwrights handle it so well is easily explained: "Bonanza" is an adventure-drama where the people are even bigger than the scenery.

When this tremendously popular series begins its fifth year this Fall—as a major attraction in NBC's variegated, new schedule—we'll still be putting the Cartwrights before the horse.

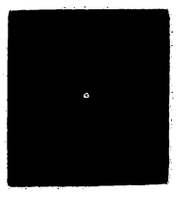
And how could it be otherwise? No family in television is more interesting than this quartet from the Ponderosa: Ben, the young-in-heart patriarch...Adam, the handsome and brooding number-one son...Hoss, a slow-to-anger colossus of a man...and Little Joe, the clan's carefree rebel—four roles enacted, by the way, with evident joy as well as craftsmanship by Lorne Greene, Pernell Roberts, Dan Blocker and Michael Landon.



Not that we're shrugging off "Bonanza's" setting. The vast, fictional spread includes such heady locales as Lake Tahoe and the California Sierras, and we think enough of it to go there in person, complete with color cameras and calamine lotion. It may be a costly way to get a backdrop, but just look at the sublime results any Sunday night.

Of course, on NBC-TV, "Bonanza" has no exclusive on this sort of creative attention. Witness such next-season newcomers as "The Lieutenant," filmed at the Camp Pendleton Marine Corps base; "Espionage," most of which will be shot in England; and "Harry's Girls," which will be touring the capitals of the Continent.

This no-shortcut style of producing a series—established or new—applies to our entire, diversified lineup. It's a schedule which—beginning this Fall—will be bringing NBC-TV viewers the most rewarding programs in the medium's history.



Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

Producer Freedman's TV Lament: They All Seem to Come Out Alike

By HERM SCHOENFELD

In an era of homogenized television product where the personnel of all dramatic shows are virtually interchangeable, who needs creative producers? This question, which many tv producers may find both provocative and provoking, has been raised from inside the clan by Lewis Freedman, a producer with varied credits on the network scene.

Freedman no longer finds it interesting to be a producer. So uninteresting, in fact, that he turned down the producer assignment on next season's Du Pont show because he did not want to be saddled with a regular series. "It is impossible," Freedman said, "to tell the difference between the work of one producer from another on television these days. Several years ago, it was possible for a producer to find an exciting piece of work and help build it into a finished work. Now, the producer operates within a firmly established series format."

As a result, Freedman himself is turning more to producing-directing and, on the horizon, to the making of theatrical films. He bows as a producer-director on tv with "The Last Comedian," a fantasy about a society in which laughter is verboten. Art Carney will star in the June 2 "Du Pont Show" on NBC-TV.

Freedman has refused to go to Hollywood to work on the studio-made tv series. "Many producers and directors went to Hollywood hoping to break into theatrical films through their tv work," Freedman said. "But since there are no B pictures being made and very few major films, there is no place to go in Hollywood but television." Only a few outstanding talents, like John Frankenheimer and Bob Mulligan, have been able to crash into major features, Freedman pointed out.

Freedman's own plans involve film treatments of several themes executed or proposed on the Du Pont series, for which he has been the producer for the past two years. "In television," he said, "it's tough to do a brilliant show under any circumstances. In films, it is possible for a director to do a brilliant show even with a mediocre script."

for Metromedia. "There are those of us who are cognizant of our leadership, but are symbolized by the cartoon of the wide-eyed sheep-tail screaming to his scrambling platoon, 'Wait for me, I'm your leader.' Our leadership will be null and void if we continue to lie down and roll over playing dead every time the printed page chooses to clobber us."

Evans was one of the few to get into the "rating scandals"—"Recent rating hearings are enough to have us all hang our heads in shame. Surely an industry of our size and talents could have discovered a way of audience measurement acceptable to all—one that would be like Caesar's wife or Nixon's hound's tooth. There was no doubt in any responsible broadcaster's mind that current measurement devices were often hit or miss. Are we now going to wait until Uncle crowns our broadcast heads with more punitive legislation—or are we realistic enough to band together and tax ourselves for the creation of a scientific, reliable, and acceptable audience measuring device—establishing minimum standards of excellence in such areas as interviewing, sampling, and properly evaluating total audience?"

Another reference — softer — to the rating mess came from another panelist, N. W. Ayer's veepee and manager of tv-radio programming Tom Calhoun—"The first challenge that I might mention is one that has occupied us very much of late. That is the challenge to the validity of measurement services, the ratings. I am not going to advance a personal point of view on the recent Washington hearings. In fact, that, in my opinion, is what we should be doing less of. The rush of hasty, and consequently inconsistent, opinions that have emanated from all quarters of our business has compounded whatever confusion may have come out of the hearings themselves. I do not believe this reflects an accurate picture at all. I believe that most of us are carefully studying the facts, and that reasoned and tempered judgments are being made. What I am suggesting, under the circumstances, is the kind of thoughtful restraint that usually characterizes good leadership."

While the male execs mulled the ratings and the image, there was plenty of be-our-guest activity for the femmes. TV Guide tossed an elegant fish-and-soup dinner in the posh surroundings of the Philadelphia Museum. Coke and General Foods pitched in with "nightcap" soirees (with the soft drink folks running a lottery on a stack of mod bonnets); and Freedom Foundation, Curtis Publishing and McCall's also entertained lavishly. The Foundation tossed a lunch and tour of Valley Forge. Curtis picked up the tab for a luncheon also, and McCall's was in for dinner and the annual Gold Mike awards.

Longest junketers to the 13th annual convention of AWRT here were Suh Young-Hee of Seoul; Randi Solveig Lie of Oslo, Norway, and Maro Theodosiades of Nicosia, Cyprus.

All are active in their own country's broadcasting. Before the Philly meeting, the trio was briefed and honored by the State Dept. with a reception in Washington and also have already toured New York tv and radio facilities.

Here for 100 days, the girls will now make a swing around the country, visiting a score of AWRT chapter cities as guests of the local branches.

'Doctors' Renewed For Another Colgate Cycle

Colgate-Palmolive has firmed up "The Doctors" until at least next October. Acting a few days before option time, the sponsor told NBC-TV that the new daytime strip was good for another cycle.

Ted Bates, the Colgate agency, saw "some life" in the latest multi-market Nielsens for the six-week old show, which is aired at 2:30 p.m. daily on NBC-TV. It's Colgate's own package, and the bankroller has decided to stick with the format of a different medically-oriented soap every day of the week, as opposed to a running story.

Femme B'casters Get Kalb Primer On Propaganda

Philadelphia, May 7.

Russia learned the power of tv as a propaganda medium from Khrushchev's visit to the United States in 1959, CBS diplomatic correspondent Marvin Kalb told the American Women in Radio & Television here during the national org's 13th annual convention.

Soviet video's coverage of the visit, Kalb said, was a most effective introduction to the importance of tv as a means of projecting the image of a "thriving, dynamic people, happily devoted to a brilliant future."

As a result, he said, a state department of radio and tv achieved ministry status in the Soviet, and a link has been established between Iron Curtain countries as an answer to Eurovision.

Pointing out that Telstar's first international telecast was not taken by either Moscow tv or Intervision (the Iron Curtain troup), the CBS newsman, who spent several years in Russia, said that one Soviet official bluntly explained that the image of America shown on the program conflicted with the image of the U. S. which Russia presents to the Russian people.

In a q. and a. session following his talk, Kalb had a quick criticism of U. S. broadcast propaganda efforts overseas. Asked if Voice of America and USIA was reaching the Russians, he said, "They (the Russians) say the Voice of America is straight propaganda. The BBC is far more objective."

Asked if identity as a broadcaster in Russia changes a traveller's status, Kalb said, "No, it's all politics. We are in a moment of constriction over there. There is an important meeting scheduled to set cultural lines. If those lines are not close to the vest, you might find yourself in difficulty."

About Communist newsmen and their press freedom, Kalb said, "The Communist sees reality differently. The correspondent has complete freedom to operate within the framework laid down by the party with clearly set definitions. Their sense of horizon is different. The horizon is defined for them. For example, they are having difficulty with the poet who wants to set his own horizons and wanted to write about love. He is not permitted to write about love, but could write about love of a woman and a tractor."

NAB Wants More Time On Horse Race Crackdown

National Assn. of Broadcasters has asked FCC to delay past time for comments on its proposed crackdown on horse race broadcasts.

In asking for an extension of the comment filing deadline from May 13 to July 1, NAB said more time is needed to evaluate the complex problem.

FCC rule making proposal would prohibit turfcasting unless the purse is over $25,000.

NAB said it supports the "basic objectives of the proposal" to close the information pipelines of illegal gambling.

All-Channel Clinic At Carnegie Hall

An "FCC sponsored clinic" will be held at Carnegie Hall N. Y., Tuesday (14) night, in effort, to encourage all-channel tv reception. WNYC-TV, on Channel 31 (UHF) is involved, to the degree that the city-owned and operated outlet was able to arrange the hall, now owned by N. Y. C.

Comrs. Robert E. Lee and E. William Henry will be on hand, Lee to speak and Henry to award a plaque to the retailer who has sold the most all-channel sets in '63. L. M. Sandwick, chairman of the Committee on Consumer Information (jointly inspired by the manufacturers and the FCC) is on top the clinic. Seymour Siegel, WNYC boss is also involved, and will moderate.

They've invited distributors, dealers, service technicians, et al., to come and ask questions of the panel—Bob Weston of the FCC staff, Jack Wargaw, head of service at Knickerbocker Distributing; Ed Cicchetti, prexy of CSR Electronics; Jack Beever, veep of Jerrold Electronics and Harris O. Wood, a Philco veep.

Channel 31 is operating on a special UHF experimental basis for both the city and the FCC, which proposed the idea to WNYC in the first place.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week six different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. memory of an American wartime naval host, made a potent memento.

Well-timed comedy was provided by Jackie Mason, who purveyed a nice line in self-deprecating conceit. He insulted himself with one joke, and boasted himself with the next. This proved a spicy personality mixture, and would have jelled even more tightly if Mason's accent had not sometimes been difficult for local consumers whose idea of the American language stopped with Ben Lyon.

The show was agreeably launched by the San Remo Trio, who had a brisk juggling routine with hats which might have been more impactful if they had not unfortunately dropped some of said chapeaus. Albert Locke produced without straying from the tried format, and Norman Vaughan emceed with aplomb. "Beat the Clock" was rather more pedestrian than usual for sensitive souls, as some of the tricks required no skill and merely allowed a couple to make exhibitions of themselves for the sake of an electrical gadget. Otis.

The Sunday Play

The idea behind the BBC's new season of Sunday night drama was that it would house preferably new plays about people in contemporary situations. Robin Chapman's piece, "A Deathly Hush," filled the brief admirably and actors and producer served his play impeccably.

Breakfast time in a house anywhere in London's commuter belt with wifey sighing because she can get nothing out of her hubby whose nose is buried in his paper, and only the clock hands reaching ground is time for departure for the office give her the excuse to talk to him. So it all starts.

But when husband Bob (Robert Stephens) gets up to go there is an eerie chilliness despite the brilliant sun which seems to bathe everything.

All around are the mangled remains left by a nuclear explosion. Bobby's office is in fact a dusty corner of his own ramshackle garage with a tailor's dummy standing in for secretary. Meanwhile Milly (Wendy Craig) has no water in the taps, electricity under the mushroom of death dust in the pantry. In their deep shelter they have been the lucky ones . . . they have survived a nuclear war.

Chapman's pair played out a frightening charade of normalcy in a suburb without children's sounds, not even birds. No friends being the milkman and the gas company fitter just as his wife might experience something like the monotony breaks of the suburban life they knew before the big bang. It was a brutal, withering essay on the futility of stiff-upper-lips played sotto voce.

Gradually they were reduced to gentle, imperceptible insanity by their own motivating creed: "We've got to face it out . . . we must keep going . . . We were the lucky ones . . . there are fresh worlds to conquer . . . there will be life again . . . won't there?"

It is as the element of doubt creeps into their minds that Chapman wound his play to its bitter, numbing finale. The phone that has been silent for so long because there were no wires anyway, suddenly and inexplicably shrills into life. Molly screams and they both run out into a hail of machine gun fire from a squad of decontaminators cleansing the ruined area.

"She was quite young", says one. "Yes, but she was contaminated", comes the reply.

Perfect for the medium by virtue of its length (60 minutes) and its intimacy (just the two characters) both John Jacobs' production and the acting were faultless. Indeed it was one of the best things Miss Craig has done for some time.

Lower & Funnier

Elmer Lower, a vice-president of NBC News, says he was mistaken for an armed bank-robber by Miami Beach detectives last week.

He was in the sunshine city to size up for NBC-TV the possible Democratic convention site for the '64 nominations. As he was driving his rented convertible down a parking ramp, an unmarked car screeched up and blocked his exit. Two men jumped out, he said, brandishing guns, in the best tv fashion.

The rent-a-car, it developed, was being sought by the police as the one used sometime before in an armed robbery. The putative bankrobber, who had only rented the car the day before from a large and reputable agency, said he had to produce his White House press pass, bearing a color picture of himself, before the policemen relented.

When he was intercepted, Lower whom his friends say looks no more like a bank-robber than any other television vicepresident, had been on his way to join his host from the Miami Beach visitors bureau.

gets maximum television exposure because the story deserves to be told. This project is too important to be cloud or sidetrack with irrelevant recriminations."

In producing the Truman story, Screen Gems is planning to give the series maximum world distribution. Bob Seidelman, Screen Gems general sales chief, pointed out that the series has potentialities for the educational market, 16m and television.

SG plans to produce the series as 26 half-hours. It's figured that a half-hour format will facilitate tv sales of a public affairs series. Seidelman said SG will give a maximum effort to distribute this show because of its historical importance. It is the only story of a President's regime to be told from the viewpoint of the chief participant and to be narrated by him personally. SG is now in the process of setting up a production staff to work with Truman. It's expected that most of the production work will be done in New York although Truman's narration will be taped in his hometown of Independence.

Although Sneakind delivered two completed hour shows, a Truman biography and the story of the Korean crisis, Screen Gems is not expected to utilize them in their present form. "Our production plans are completely different," Seidelman stated. He indicated that enormous quantities of footage on Truman were available through the major governmental agencies, the Library of Congress, the newsreels and Truman's personal archives.

Philco Hearings

Sarnoff, somewhat on the reluctant side, led off the parade by testifying contradictorily that the web keeps a tight reign on s.&b.'s, looking closely at any program preemptions, but that s.&b.'s are independent with free choice of net programs.

He also disclaimed any specific knowledge of this worked when applied to WRCV-TV, and, confronted with an old ghost hauled out by Weaver, said he didn't know quiz shows were rigged until 1950 grand jury burst the bubble.

NBC proxy Robert Kintner followed Sarnoff to the stand with an elaborate defense of the web. He too, however, professed ignorance of anything rotten in quizdom until the smell was documented.

Otherwise, Kintner told in detail how proud he is of NBC's s&b's and of the web's awards, its news budget and its documentary specials.

Dragged back again and again to the quiz scandals by Weaver, Kintner said he also believed in the honesty of Charles Van Doren and Jack Barry and Dan Enright before their clay feet were exposed. He said now NBC closely scrutinizes its quiz shows.

The hearing got around to WRCV when Raymond Welpott, station manager who is also executive vice president of s&b's, took the stand. Segal led him through a long recitation on the excellence of the stations local programming and its community service objectives.

Weaver began his cross examination torpedoing by eliciting from Welpott the admission NBC neglected to go into detail as to program type percentages and program tables in its license reapplication. Weaver claimed the information that there would be no substantial program changes was unresponsive to FCC questions.

This was nipped in the bud by Ernest Nash of the FCC's Broadcast Bureau who successfully objected to Weaver's tack on the grounds the commission had accepted the reapplication and was apparently satisfied with its responsiveness.

It was learned later that NBC probably didn't go into detail, knowing it was going to trade off the station, and FCC understood this.

Weaver then began a minute hammering at the WRCV image. He drew from Welpott admissions that many of the station's local live public interest shows were screened after 1 a.m.

His cross-examination harped on these shows, questioning whether their timing was in the public interest.

Philco's case is to be unveiled this week.

Steve Manning's 'First Patriots'

Manning Organization, production outfit headed by Steven Manning, is rolling with a new historical series, "The First Patriots," which will dramatize the period in U. S. history encompassing the fight for independence. Each half-hour stanza will devote itself to exploring the documented story of a little known person who contributed to the struggle. Among the stories to be told in the series will be those of Haym Salomon, Baron Von Steuben, William Dawes, Molly Pitcher and Joseph Warren.

The series will be shot in 35m color film. A name personality is being lined up to narrate. Manning, exec producer, is pitching the series to the networks and advertisers.

average "good" running blurb. Field is wide open for unknown actors, some of whom have become identified with the product. For instance, actress Majel Barrett, who frequently does dramatic work on stage or television, has averaged $10,000 a year on the Ajax teleblurb.

On the other hand, there are the "name spokesman" blurbs that identify talent used. For instance, the Kingston Trio was paid $250,000 for 11 Seven-up commercials, Jane Withers got $25,000 for a one-spot Comet blurb, John Daly a $75,000-a-year deal for his identification with Camels cigarets and June Lockhart, who did the recent Cincerest Crest commercial, was offered a $100,000 pact to continue with this product.

Even Danny Thomas

Other similar deals have been made for spokesmen like Suzy Parker for Mertz, Wally Cox, Salvo, and Marshal Bernardi, the voice of "Charlie the Tuna." Specialty deals, too, are made with such stars as Danny Thomas, who does spot Maxwell House Coffee commercials, company which sponsors his tv show.

Miss Morris asserts times have changed when actors feared identification. Field has, in some instances, "replaced summer stock as place where talent agents seek new faces for tv and movies." She points to persons now working in series or features, many of whom she first cast in tv commercials. List includes Anne Francis and Eva Marie Saint, once the "Scotch Tape Girls"; Robert Conrad, Myrna Fahey, Ingrid Goude, Donna Douglas and Jack Ging. Even Marilyn Monroe, in early part of her career, did a Union Oil ad for $25 and no residuals—of course, before SAG, in 1960, negotiated separate commercial contract.

SAG currently has committees prepping negotiations for new pact after Nov. 15 expiration of initial three-year deal. New contract is based on exposure of actor and system of use (residual) payments, geographical and population coverage. Payments are different for population areas, although nationwide run of a blurb involves same payment every time it is shown. This is true both for $25 on-camera and $70 off-camera roles.

Commercials have become a big field for agents; three major reps are Bob Longnecker, Jack Wermer and Miles Auer, as well as Jay Joseph.

Longnecker, who points out he has "unknown" clients who make "as much as $120,000 a year on commercials alone," says "name talent in demand on a commercial basis may not be useable at all in theatrical field." He asserts the "name or star status based on movie and magazine polls plays little, if any, role in selling such talent." Agency-sponsor contact is main sales feature, he feels, stressing, too, job turnover of commercial talent is limited because of restrictions, i.e., one soap, one cigaret, one automobile, etc. Such restriction is for 13 months, most involved being beer and cigarets, two major sponsors. Longnecker, who publishes an annual Talent Digest of all his clients, says he gets involved with some 150 ad agencies for commercials, as opposed to only a few studios for dramatic talent. Agent, in this case, also has to develop a superior bookkeeping system, covering such things as live or tape and films, two unions, different fee structures, market categories of one to five cities, Class B spot, or B program, A-AA-AAA markets spot and program, city keys and units, the 13-week cycles, the 17-1/2% cut off points, uses after 21 at $15 and $10 for "tags and promos," billboards and cross plugs, alternate sponsors, dealer spots, transfer from tape to film and radio and myriad other details.

While Longnecker specializes in commercials, he also handles regular dramatic talent. Many actors, however, have two separate agents for each field.

For instance, Joseph agency handles a large number of people for commercials who have other agents for dramatic jobs. Agency expects a $1,000,000 gross this year. Wermer, as with Auer, is more involved in off-camera and voice area. Wermer estimates annual commercial gross in $1,200,000 area. He handles voice work for such performers as Jim Backus, Jesse White, Mel Blanc and Alan Reed. Field, he notes, is "highly specialized" and "increased as the film biz started to decline." Off-camera, according to Auer, is easier because there is "no sponsor conflict because clients are multiple-voice people and have no product identification."

Sponsors still use models and "pretty faces," majority of these coming from the Plaire and Mary Webb Davis agencies and not involving actors.

WTTW's Chi Shuffle

Chicago, May 7.

In a major personnel shuffle at WTTW, the Chi educational tv outlet, Bill Manochet becomes exec producer and the station's major liaison with National Educational Television Network. Manochet, who was previously operations director, succeeds Bud Ellingwood who exited last week.

Station has also hired away Al Binford of the Milwaukee ETV-er, WMVS, as performer and producer of children's shows. Binford replaces longtime WTTW kiddie personality Arkie the Woodchopper and brings with him the NET series, "What's New?," which now will emanate from the Chi station.

The Real Thing

"Salute to the Warsaw Ghetto Heroes," benefit concert, will be presented by the Warsaw Ghetto Resistance Organization at N.Y.'s Carnegie Hall Sunday (12) evening.

Broadway stars participating in readings are Carroll Baker, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Sam Levene, Zero Mostel, Geraldine Page and Peter Ustinov. Featured music will be Handel's "Judas Maccabaeus" Oratorio, under Siegfried Landau's baton, played by members of the Symphony of the Air orch and sung by Schola Cantorum of which Hugh Ross is musical director.

Staging the event will be Joseph S. Kutruba, a stage manager of CBS-TV, himself a survivor of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising.

Fest-Within-a-Fest Gives TV Its Innings at Cannes May 13-19

Cannes, May 7.

The Sixth Eurovision TV Festival, also called the International TV Film Fest, will unspool within the cadre of the Cannes Film Festival from May 13-19. Even if it is bound to get a little lost in the big fest activities, the organizers consider it the right time and place since the object is to promote better relations between tv and filmmakers.

As part of that, only films that have been especially made for tv, and preferably through regular film producers, are eligible for entry. Jacques Flaud, head of foreign relations for the governmental video organization, Radiodiffusion - Television Francaise, which underwrites the fest, says its aim is to help bring on greater and more fertile collaboration between the film industry and television.

TV Fest is also timely since one of the film producer tenets during the recent crisis was to get a greater share of production or coproduction of vidpix from the RTF who have been more or less hogging it up to now. Robert Bordaz, RTF chief, has promised more work to producers for the coming '64 second web but the latter are not satisfied yet.

Three Eurovision prizes will be handed out by a nine-man jury via The Grand Prix Eurovision for the best fiction pic, a Grand Prix for the best documentary and a Special Jury Prize for the most original work of any kind. Winners will be shown in the Film Palace after the regular awards on the last night of the fest, May 3.

RTF will also tape and film a special variety program of international stars and acts May 16 for a Eurovision hookup May 18. Among guests and entertainers already signed are Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Gardner McKay, Amalia Rodriguez, Caterina Valente, Heidi Bruhl, Sven Asmussen & Ulrik Neumann, Nicolaiev, a clown from the Moscow Circus, Alme Barelli, Four Brothers, Andy Williams, Melina Mercouri, Jeanne Moreau, Sophia Loren, Gregory Peck, Fernandel and more.

U. S. entry is a USIA vidpic "Death in the Family" based on the James Agee book. Cuba is in with two via "Hemingway" and "Story of a Ballet" with Britain also sending a ballet pic in "Les Sylphides."

NBC Overruled, No Tintcast On Next Moonshot

The White House reportedly wanted to know why the next moonshot wasn't going to be in color and was told by NASA that it was a problem among the three television networks and the space agency didn't want to interfere.

There definitely won't be color for the Mercury-Atlas 9 manshot scheduled for May 14, although NBC News will keep plugging away to make color a factor in the shoot after that, whenever it is.

NBC News proposed color in the first place. ABC News, which will handle the pool cameras on May 14, and CBS News rejected the proposal. NASA was asked to serve as an arbitrator, but, it is known, CBS and ABC refused to take it to an arbitrator, and NASA withdrew.

NBC expressed willingness to pay all the extra freight incurred in color transmission. NBC, tied as it is to set-manufacturing RCA, has long been the only constant exponent of color video.

Latest colorizing attempt was geared, according to NBC sources, to the fact that the other two webs are now doing a bit of color and that many of their affiliates are geared to receive color.

One feeling is that CBS and ABC rejected the color scheme for the manshoot on strictly competitive grounds. Both have long opposed color and only lately have begun to relent.

When asked by Variety why color was rejected, CBS refused to comment, but a spokesman for ABC said: "ABC and we believe, CBS were concerned with the loss of quality in converting color from black and white. Also, ABC felt, it being our turn to head up the pool, that the addition of color would mean our technicians would play a very secondary part."

ABC News indicated further that color cameras require "lots of light," and therefore planning that might be taken when the astronaut first appears 7:30 in the morning would be troublesome.

NBC executives insisted later that the technical problems of shooting in color could easily be handled.

Hopefully the sessions will produce some insight into juve needs and desires in programs and some guidelines for producers of quality shows.

A festival of showy viddims for children was sponsored by the Assn. last year, and immediately was interrupted by the fact that some 5,000 youngsters in attendance seemed to enjoy them. It was observed about them, however, that in their own homes the kids switched to "Popeye," "Ringo" or one of the audience cartoon shows when tv offered a choice between these and something more uplifting or educational. Members of the Assn. testified that their children truly enjoyed "Exploring," "Discovery '63" and "Reading Room," when their viewing was parentally supervised, but left to choose for themselves a week or an hour they invariably went back to "Popeye."

that details of the separation are still being ironed out.

There have been considerable differences between Sharpe and the GAC hierarchy for sometime. It was significant that Sharpe was on the Coast during the latter part of the tv selling season in the East, and it's an open secret that a tornished deal was in negotiations.

Rush will supervise all television activities of the agency, which will include program development, sales and talent, and will coordinate tv with the other GAC departments. He joined the company shortly after Siegel bought out the firm about two years ago. He worked with Siegel at Oriental Films, where Sharpe worked also at about the same time. Rush is a nephew of the late Bloda Rosin, who at the time of his death was a veepee at NBC, and prior to that had been with CBS, Columbia Records and RCA.

Siegel's announcement shirks any mention of Sharpe and it's likely that Rush's elevation will spark further developments in the Sharpe situation.

Rolling Expansion

Rolling Co., the national sales rep outfit, is undertaking an expansion, including personnel and station acquisitions.

Jack Mulholland, 13-year vet of NBC Spot Sales, joins the Rolling tv division, with John McGuire named manager of the company's Denver office. Rebecca Kennedy has joined the company as traffic director.

Station additions to the Rolling lineup include WVNJ, Newark-New York, and WAVL Dayton.

Minneapolis — Richard V. Fairbanks has become national sales manager of KSTP-TV here. He was with WFBT, Palm Beach.

council did not demand a breakoff, it was assumed a settlement is in view, and there, now national meetings were called for today (Wed.).

After the council meeting, WGA teams went immediately into dickers with CBS exec's in Philly, Chicago and Los Angeles and with ABC and NBC exec's in Washington, D. C. While these exec's sign separate agreements, WGA signs all network contracts at once, thereby making all parts interdependent.

NBC News and the Guild seemed to be in stalemate before the council meeting, held on May 1, when the latest package offer was presented. Nobody said that the Guild's council accepted it but nobody said it was rejected either, which is automatically a peaceful sign by labor.

Package was a base of $224, up from $214. But the network also asked and will probably receive the right to hire relatively unlimited newcomers at a base of $100 with escalators over 18 or 24 months to the top of $224. NBC News will still not provide overtime.

ABC and CBS news shops also will provide a base increase of $10 a week over what will probably be the term of a new three-year contract. That means upping the base to $224, but then these two webs will pay overtime.

Another item proposed will give NBC News the right to reward extra time with either money or time off. Under the old contract, which expired over a month ago, NBC News was obligated to make up extra time with compensatory time off.

Other parts of the network contract will deal with freelance writers for live or taped tv and freelance writers working on filmed documentaries. There has been no word on these dickers.

SHELL IMPACTS GOLF

Shell has again bought "The Wonderful World of Golf" for the NBC-TV Sunday afternoon sked. It's an 11-week deal on the one-hour sports film.

U.S. Pattern On Residuals For 'Harry's Girls'

London, May 7.

An alliance, forged between the Screen Actors Guild and British Actors Equity at a Toronto meet at the beginning of the year, is being put to its first practical test in connection with the upcoming Metro-NBC vidpic series, "Harry's Girls," which is due to start filming at MGM's British studios towards the end of the month.

In line with the pledge made at Toronto, British Actors Equity is demanding American standard residuals for all actors employed on the series. As at present constituted, Equity does not regard the series as anything vaguely resembling a British production. It is American initiated, presold to an American sponsor, with four American leads all linked to the Metro outfit in the States.

Gerald Croasdell, the Equity general secretary, said that if Metro reshaped the deal to make it appear to be a British production it would then have something to say about the casting of American actors in all four leading parts.

Croasdell warned that if Metro got the idea of taking the series off to some place on the Continent, the International Federation of Actors would step in. That body has been informed of the situation by the British union.

Apparently, Metro had hoped to employ British artists on the currently operating British standard or rerun pay—one day's salary in lieu of all rerun rights. SAG asked Equity, and Equity agreed, to insist that all performers in the production, whatever their nationality, should receive SAG standard rerun fees.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

A call for a single, fully accepted, rig-proof rating system for measuring radio audiences was issued by Mutual prexy Robert F. Hurleigh, in an editorial, in MBS' monthly newsletter.

Hurleigh, who complained of "rigged ratings" more than three years ago, proposed that tv and radio each have its one rating system. In his editorial, Hurleigh warned that "in the months ahead" there will be "a lot of back-passing and the game of musical chairs will hit a new high in popularity" because of the Harris subcommittee hearings. "The rumble has already begun," he continued. "Fingers are being pointed at broadcasters; agencies are on the carpet with advertisers and cries of 'foul' are being heard round the land.

He described the Harris probe as "perhaps inevitable" and noted "in the long run, it may prove to be just the breath of fresh air needed."

It's a four-way parlay for NBC-TV's Hallmark Hall of Fame production of "Invincible Mr. Disraeli" on the Emmy nominations. Trevor Howard was nominated for best male lead for his titular role; Hurd Hatfield for best supporting male actor in his role of Baron Rothschild; Kate Reid for best supporting actress in her role of Queen Victoria and George Schaefer for his directorial assignment.

Frank Gaither, general manager of WSB Radio, Atlanta, oldest station in the South, has donated to the archives of the Little White House at Warm Springs, Ga., a historical tape recording.

Gaither made the recording in 1945 at the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt's funeral procession. It was broadcast nationally by CBS.

Tape records incidents as the body of the President was carried from the cottage, where he died, to the funeral train that took him to Washington, D.C. The date was April 13, 1945.

This year marked the 18th anniversary of the death of President, who was vacationing at his "second home" in Georgia, at the time he was fatally stricken.

"Repertoire Workshop," weekly half-hour series produced by five CBS-TV o&o stations to encourage new talent, has been donated to the Eastern Educational Network. Sixteen "Repertoire Workshop" programs will be selected for showing on seven stations in the northeast and will start in early May: Stations are WETA, Washington; WGBH, Boston; WMHT, Schenectady; WNED, Buffalo; WQED, Pittsburgh; WENH, Durham, N. H.; and WCBB, Augusta, Me.

Fourth annual CBS-TV regional promotion meetings will be held in eight cities during June 4-13 period. Two network "teams" will brief station promotion and publicity managers on web's program and promotional plans for the coming season. During two-weeks period teams will make stops at affils in Boston, Chicago, Kansas City, San Francisco, Washington, Atlanta, Houston, and Denver.

F. W. Woolworth chain is joining 100 tv stations in promoting sales of "Ripcord" character merchandise. "Ripcord" costar Ken Curtis kicks off campaign formally on Saturday (11) in Los Angeles when he tours L.A. Woolworth stores. There are 2,300 Woolworth stores across the country participating. Life mag's recent feature on "Ripcord" also is expected to give the merchandising a lift.

Washington will be the third site for the triangle of tv libraries to be established by the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences Foundation. New York and Hollywood will house the other repositories. Lillian Brown, director of the George Washington University Radio and Television Dept. was selected to head the Washington branch committee.

MUSIC SPECTACULAR
With William B. Williams, Ted Heath Orch
30 Mins., Fri., 7:30 p.m.
WNEW, N.Y.

If broadcasters can lay as public service the numberless documentaries on slums, juve delinquency, sailor's applause and what not, same should apply double-time to a musical effort like WNEW's taped production on the big London band of Ted Heath.

Deejay William B. Williams winged to London to cut the show, which registers here as something of an extra effort toward presentation of good pop music in special format—relative, anyhow, to the overwhelming over-the-transom disk programming in the medium.

Show was taped in a London theatre with live aud for extra effect, and, while Williams and band-leader Heath didn't have a lot that was salient to segue with, it still added up to a diverting half hour of solid (and unique for New York listeners) pop music. Heath did rate the London popularity of U.S. big bands for Williams—Count Basie, Duke Ellington and Stan Kenton in order.

More s'seas investigations of the pop music scene would be welcomed. And airings of an hour, or hour and a half, wouldn't be out of order. Bill.

Govt. Wins Round 1 In Bid To Exact $40,000,000 British TV Levy

London, May 7.

The Government has won the first round in its bid to impose a levy on commercial tv advertising, which will yield an estimated $40,000,000—plus annually. The proposal, considered by the House of Commons Standing Committee, was adopted without a revision, though notice has been given of several amendments for subsequent consideration.

The levy proposals, contained in a new Clause Seven to the Television Bill, will be calculated on gross advertising revenue. The first $3,360,000 will be tax free, and up to the next $22,400,000 the levy will be at the rate of 22½%. Over and above $25,900,000, the levy soars to 40%.

In the Committee debate, Postmaster General Reginald Bevins rebutted suggestions that this would result in a lowering of program standards, and that staff would suffer hardship. The notion that the companies would say that because of the levy they will have to cut down, or eliminate, all expensive productions and concentrate on cheap television would not stand up to serious examination for a moment. It was still true that the better the independent programs, the more, in the long run, the companies would in the future, would be to offer for the companies, either now or earn. The only real road to ruin to the public a diet of cheap and worthless programs.

The PMG said the Government and Parliament could vary the scale of levy at any time, and would not hesitate to do so if it was thought right. If, in the early part of 1964, it seemed that the levy scale was too high, the Government would propose some modification.

In general, the Labor opposition did not challenge the principle of the levy, though one Labor MP spotlighted the problems of the medium sized companies, citing as an example Anglia Television, which would suffer a great deal from the starting point selected for the tax. An estimate showed that it would reduce Anglia's profits down to just over $120,000 (against $936,000 for 1962-3). That would be the borderline, and could force them, possibly, to cut down on their more ambitious activities which were networked.

Another Labor member, Roy Mason, said MPs had been swamped with material from various organizations, which, in the main, had been sparked off by the protestations of the "Big Four" companies. The "Big Four," he complained, were "like a fat pig about to be maimed and squealing loudly, hoping that the blow would be softened."

The first amendment to the new Clause Seven came from a Conservative member, David James, who favored taking a slice out of profits instead of imposing a levy on revenue. His proposals involve a payment of 62½% to the Exchequer on the first $1,400,000 percentage would rise to 70; and profit; on the second $1,400,000 the above $2,800,000 would go up to 75%.

NAB'S HULBERT IN SWIPE AT NLRB

Washington, May 7

An official of the NAB has accused members of the National Relations Board of rewriting labor-management laws to favor unions.

James H. Hulbert, manager of NAB's management department, said NLRB members appointed by President Kennedy "have undertaken to substantially rewrite the law in favor of unions . . . in a way which I believe Congress did not intend."

His remarks were in a speech delivered to the Illinois Broadcasters Assn. at Springfield which was released here.

He told the broadcasters to speak out and when necessary take to court any decisions unfair to broadcasting.

Light's 'Places', Amanda Ambrose, Steve & Eydie's 'Movies' Top LPs

ENOCH LIGHT ORCH: "FAR AWAY PLACES" (Command). This is Enoch Light's second musical excursion and it's a sound winner. Through the use of colorful arrangements to spotlight the mood of "Istanbul," "Isle Of Capri," "Moon Of Manakoora," "Under Paris Skies" and "White Cliffs Of Dover," among other spots on the globe, Light and his rich-sounding orch (with a choral assist) bring the flavor of the "far away places" right to the turntable. It's a natural for big spinning action on all levels.

"AMANDA AMBROSE" (RCA Victor). A nitery performer in the midwest, Amanda Ambrose breaks into the disk market with powerful impact. Accompanying herself with some solid pianistics, she is primarily a song belter with a dynamic attack infected with jazz and gospel beats. This songstress turns each number into a completely different, and sometimes surprising performance. She's standout on such numbers as "Become Mine," "Tennessee Waltz," "Besame Mucho," "Come Rain or Shine" and "This Little Light of Mine."

STEVE LAWRENCE & EYDIE GORME: "AT THE MOVIES" (Columbia). After a brief special material number, "To The Movies We Go," to introduce the package, Steve Lawrence and frau Eydie Gorme take off on an enjoyable wrap-up of pic tunes. They sing four duets and four solo apiece and each is a delight. On solo, Lawrence sends off songs like "Gigi" and "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing" with warm ballad impact. Miss Gorme's "Secret Love" and "Days Of Wine And Roses" show off her piping equipment to advantage. Marion Evans' arranging-conducting brought all hands right into the groove.

SHELLEY BERMAN: "NEW SIDES" (Verve). One of the click entries on wax during the height of the comedy cycle, Shelley Berman continues as a consistent laugh-maker who continually refurbishes his routine with new material. In this set, recorded during a stand at the Crescendo in Hollywood, Berman comes up with some fine new bits which give the album solid impact. "Complete Neurosis," a monolog via telephone, is an interesting psychoanalytic routine very effectively delivered. "Loan Company" is another solid comedy effort amidst a flock of other pieces of uneven calibre.

MARION MONTGOMERY: "SWINGS FOR WINNERS AND LOSERS" (Capitol). A new jazz songstress, Marion Montgomery makes a promising bow on disks with this LP. Miss Montgomery, who works in a recognizable tradition, has enough distinctiveness of attack to build a reputation and a following. She handles uptempo tunes like "Confessin' The Blues," "Hell 'Em Pete," and "Deed I Do" with bounce and precision. She also does well on such ballads as "Can't Help It" and "Good Morning Heartache," among others. She gets standout support from a combo under Dick Hyman's baton.

THE ROOFTOP SINGERS: "WALK RIGHT IN" (Vanguard). A folksinging trio headed by Erik Darling, formerly with The Weavers, The Rooftop Singers shape up as a highly attractive combo with a consistently pleasing sound and a nifty repertory on this kickoff collection. It's a wide-ranging group of songs, including the click title plus some fresh material like "Hey, Boys," "Tom Cat," "Somebody Came Home," "Ham and Eggs" and some standards like "Stagolee," "Brandy," "Leave Me Alone," and "Ha Ha Thisaway."

EVA LE GALLIENNE: "CAMILLE" (Caedmon). The character of Marguerite Gautier, the "Lady of the Camellias," has attracted many a leading lady, not the least of which is Eva Le Gallienne who produced a version of Alexander Dumas' play in the 1930s and toured as Marguerite at that time too. For this disk she has adapted the script and again stars in the part. The LP registers strongly for its dramatic effect and evolution of the Dumas story. Also in the cast are Alexander Scourby, Richard Waring, Betty Garde, Frederick Rolf, Marian Evensen, [illegible] Gilchrist, Susan Douglas and Edmund Jerome, all of whom perform strongly. The result is a fine wax presentation, right for educational purposes as well as home entertainment.

AL CAIOLA: "GREASE KID STUFF" (UA). The rockin' guitar of Al Caiola, backed by his orchestra, gives the teeners a toe-tapping item which should score effectively at the turntables. Included are various current or recent pop numbers, mostly in an uptempo groove but with a ballad treatment or two thrown in as well. The winning Caiola guitar touch lends a big emotional lift to the tunes, providing them with a style and feeling that should register big in the teen market, as have many of his past efforts. Included are "He's So Fine," "Surfin' USA," "Walk Right In," "Pipe Line," "Alley Cat," "Our Day Will Come" and others.

DIAN & THE GREENBRIAR BOYS (Elektra). The stress in this teaming of Dian (James) and The Greenbriar Boys, latter on loan from Vanguard Records, is on the authentic country-folk sound. The Greenbriars have the bluegrass feel down pat and the young thrush has the purity of approach that is a refreshing entry in current overload of folk purveyors. The repertoire includes love songs, blues, inspirationals and hoedowns. All hit a note of musical honesty which the folk crowd seems to want more of these days.

"LOVE IS A BALL" (Philips). Michel Legrand's score to "Love Is a Ball," currently in release via United Artists Pictures, has been nicely set to wax via this Philips outing. Tunes have been separated into their own entities so there is some listening continuity and individuality in the pieces, all of which have a bright, sophisticated feel. Although many are just variations on the "Love Is a Ball" tune itself or the main title, there are others with a quality all their own, several with a marked jazz flavor. It all adds up to an often-interesting, always-listenable soundtrack waxing.

BERNIE BERNS: "BERNIE GOES TO WASHINGTON" (Jubilee). This LP is directed strictly at the Jewish audience. It has President Kennedy speaking with Yiddishisms along with his Boston accent. Although there are some funny moments, the platter remains too limited for across-the-board sales. For its own audience, there is strength. Bernie Berns is the Kennedy interpreter here and he does an okay job in that capacity. His Yiddish joking is well-timed for solid laugh getting in this area, and much of the material is funny in a broader vein. Various New Frontier members and politicos get a ribbing here, too. Berns does all the voices turning in a solid performance over all.

WALT DICKERSON QUARTET: "JAZZ IMPRESSIONS OF LAWRENCE OF ARABIA" (Dauntless). Exactly what the title implies, this set features a group of jazz arrangements by Walt Dickerson giving a hipster motif to Maurice Jarre's Oscar-winning score for "Lawrence of Arabia." Played by Dickerson's quartet, featuring the leader on vibes, Austin Crowe on piano, Henry Grimes on bass and Andrew Cyrille on drums, the session registers both as simply a jazz LP and also as an evocative rendering of the original score. Dickerson has maintained the mood of some of the pieces, especially the more somber ones, and others he has let swing handily. His group performs with finesse in both ensemble and solo work.

"OLIVER" (Golden). A pleasant kidisk has been fashioned here, using the Lionel Bart score from Broadway's "Oliver" and some special story line narration and dialog. Ten songs from the legit score are included, arranged and conducted by Jim Timmens. James Kenney heads a cast which includes Myra de Groot, Janet Eden, Gene Lowell and Gene Stock. The disk has a nice dramatic feel, and the music has been well integrated to create a smooth and entertaining package. Narration is particularly well written and spoken by Kenney, all of which should make a solid addition to any kidisk library.

(ABC-Paramount) . . . . Can't Go On Without You
Fats Domino's "There Goes (My Heart Again)" (Anatole†) goes full-blast with a Nashville zip and his built-in free-wheeling style to make this first for ABC-Paramount after switching from Imperial a surefire spinning winner. "Can't Go On Without You" (Anatole-Tune-Felt) has an infectious rocking blues beat that can grab a good share, too.

RICK NELSON . . . . STRING ALONG
(Decca) . . . . Gypsy Woman
Rick Nelson's "String Along" (Blue Grass†) blends the catchy guitar plunk and amiable vocalizing that's trademarked so many of his disks into another hitter that will please the teen trade for payoff results. "Gypsy Woman" (Hilliard-Duvall) stirs up an exciting sound that could attract action around the coin machines.

CHUBBY CHECKER . . . . BIRDLAND
(Parkway) . . . . Black Cloud
Chubby Checker's "Birdland" (Woodcrest-Acet) is another new terp try that's bound to become a fad because of the singer's persistently rhythmic instructions. "Black Cloud" (Mess-Rosert) is a sharp hand-clapper that will stir up the pop peoplers.

STEVE LAWRENCE . . . . POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL
(Columbia) . . . . More
Steve Lawrence's "Poor Little Rich Girl" (Aldent) is rich in the lyric angle and light upbeat lounge that wins over the youngsters and they'll surely take to this one in a big way. "More" (E. B. Marks†) is still another nifty balladeering job on this top-flight entry from the "Mondo Cane" pic and it, too, will get a spinning spotlight.

DANNY WILLIAMS . . . . MORE
(United Artists) . . . . Rhapsody
Danny Williams' "More" (E. B. Marks†) is the strong ballad theme developed from the "Mondo Cane" pic score and this slice, imported from England, has what it takes to crack the pop market here. "Rhapsody" (West Side†) has a big schmaltzy sound that could win over some programming romanticists.

EDDIE HEYWOOD . . . . CANADIAN SUNSET
(Liberty) . . . . The Good Life
Eddie Heywood's "Canadian Sunset (Bossa Nova)" (Vogue†) works out extremely well via the deft pianistics and swinging orch backing and its programming possibilities are unlimited. "The Good Life" (Paris) is given a fine keyboard reading to further establish its position as a class ballad entry on the current pop scene.*

JACKIE WILSON & LINDA HOPKINS . . . . SHAKE A HAND
(Brunswick) . . . . Say I Do
Jackie Wilson & Linda Hopkins' "Shake A Hand" (Merrimac†) puts two powerhouse vocalists on a gospel standard that gives it a new excitement and a high spinning potential. "Say I Do" (Merrimac†) is still another sampling of their high spirited dueting that will whip up spinning interest.

DUANE EDDY . . . . LONELY BOY, LONELY GUITAR
(RCA Victor) . . . . Joshin'
Duane Eddy's "Lonely Boy, Lonely Guitar" (Linduane†) spells out the "lonely" mood in the lyric and the longing guitar sound in a way that will win plenty of spinning friends. "Joshin'" (Linduane†) shows off some interesting guitar work in an instrumental that's consistently interesting.

GEORGE HAMILTON IV . . . . ABILENE
(RCA Victor) . . . . Oh So Many Years
George Hamilton IV's "Abilene" (Acuff-Rose†) is a fine entry out of the country & western school and its strong vocal handling gives it a spread that will move in into pop playing time. "Oh So Many Years" (Acuff-Rose†) beats out an okay country ballad sound that some pop spinners will take to.

LOU MONTE . . . . LIMBO ITALIANO
(Reprise) . . . . Bossa Nova Italiano
Lou Monte's "Limbo Italiano" (Romance/Salt) puts a pizza flavor into a Latino beat and it emerges as a lively item with enough spinning appeal to give it a good run. "Bossa Nova Italiano" (Romance/Salt) gets the paisanos to sway the Brazilian way and it, too, adds up to some spinning fun.

TERI THORNTON . . . . SOMEWHERE IN THE NIGHT
(Dauntless) . . . . You Got To Have Heart
Teri Thornton's "Somewhere In The Night" (Gowert†) is a moody blues ballad developed from the "Naked City" tv theme and it rates a strong spinning push because of the intriguing vocal handling. "You Got To Have Heart" (Frank) will probably get this Ross & Adler tune from "Damn Yankees" additional spinning beats.*

PATTI PAGE . . . . SAY WONDERFUL THINGS
(Columbia) . . . . I Knew I Would See Him Again
Patti Page's "Say Wonderful Things" (Hill & Range†) has the willowy waltzing style that the singer handles so well and its overall lilting mood will lead to a spinning payoff. "I Knew I Would See Him Again" (Amadeo†) will fit neatly into programming schedules that call for tasty ballad material.

KEARNEY WILLIAMS . . . . TRAVELIN' MAN
(Hickory) . . . . Two Worlds, One Heart
Kearney Williams' "Travelin' Man" (Big D†) moves along country blues lines but the solid sound could stir up latent pop action, too. "Two Worlds, One Heart" (Acuff-Rose†) is a slow country ballad that won't make the pop world. Gros.

Adams Urges Jukebox Royalties

Pittsburgh, May 7.

ASCAP prexy Stanley Adams made an impressive pitch here last week during the National Federation of Music Clubs convention for extension of the 1909 Copyright Law to jukeboxes.

Adams said that the State Department got interested in the matter when "Volare" and "Arrivederci Roma" were introduced to this country and Italian officials wanted to know why royalties were not paid on jukebox sales.

He said, "The Italians couldn't understand why their composers could not collect a royalty on jukebox performances. In Europe, the composers can collect when their songs are played on the jukebox."

Adams asserted that a basic morality is involved in collecting for jukebox performances. "The composer should get every commercial consideration for his product," he said: "When a producer buys the book rights for a play, he must pay royalty. Those who play a record on a jukebox in a hotel or restaurant are using the composition for profit and should pay a royalty."

Adams accepted a citation for ASCAP, which was honored for 50 years of service to American music and musicians.

U.S. Music Biz Can't Afford to Ignore 'Neighboring Rights' Legalistics

The Neighboring Rights Convention for the international protection of performing artists, record manufacturers and broadcasters is expected to be in effect by the end of this year. That's the opinion of S. M. Stewart, director general of the International Federation of Phonographic Industry, who spoke at a luncheon meeting of the International Record & Music Men's Club at New York's Hotel Taft last week.

According to Stewart, three countries already have ratified the international convention and it goes into force automatically as soon as three more countries join.

"The American record industry will be affected by the Neighboring Rights Convention regardless of whether the U. S. joins or not," said Stewart who is in the U. S. on a three-week visit from his London base. "If this country stays out of the Convention," he explained, "American recordings would be unprotected in member-countries and dubbing U. S. records would be legal there unless some local law of copyright or unfair competition could be stretched to cover the situation."

Stewart also pointed out that payments made in numerous countries for the use of phonograph records on jukeboxes, in dancehalls and other public places, and also for radio broadcasting. "If the U. S. refused to ratify the Convention," Stewart stated, "users in member countries would have the right to refuse to pay for performing American recordings."

Stewart thought that the outlook for ratification of a Convention by the U. S. had greatly improved in the last few years. He said it was quite clear at Rome that the rest of the world wanted the U. S. in.

Martstone, Ex-London V.P., Forms Cleve-Disc Dist. With Brother George

Lee Martstone, former veepee at London Records, has expanded his disk distribution activities. Martstone and his brother, George, have formed Cleve-Disc Distributing Inc., with Godfrey Dickey as veepee-general manager.

Although the Martstones believe in the necessity of local distribution for the independent manufacturer, they feel that "local" distribution might well become "national" distribution.

Even though they are prepared to restrict service to the Cleveland territory, they will also be ready to handle any of the Pittsburgh-Cincinnati-Indianapolis territories for those manufacturers desiring broader coverage. Local promotion men and resident salesmen will be headquartered in each of these cities.

According to the Martstones, Cleve-Disc will not operate as a branch of any present distributing operation but will have full authority and act, independently for its markets.

Merc Spins Into Pub Biz; Sets Up Westbound Music

Chicago, May 7.

Mercury Records, which to date has only had a weak clearinghouse type operation for publishing and licensing music, has set up Westbound Music Inc. as an independent publishing company within the corporate structure. First Westbound sale is "When Autumn Calls" to Liberty Records, which Nick Noble will record.

The Mercury venture and recent big-dollar buyup of several major music publishing firms indicate a re-awakened financial interest in copyright equity.

Other record companies have set up their own publishing firms with varying degrees of success in selling to other labels. Capitol (Ardmore, Beechwood), Decca (Northern), Imperial (Travis, Commodore) and other record outfits in the publishing biz will find competition heightened by the Mercury venture, particularly in the international area where it is expected that Mercury's parent Philips corporate structure will be a major asset.

Eddie Mascari, Mercury's publishing division g.m., will head up Westbound. Mascari has hired composer-arranger Irwin Wenzlaff and is looking for a national sales promotion man.

Victor Nabs 'Cardinal,' Its 3d Prom Soundtrack

RCA Victor's romance with Otto Preminger pic productions is continuing with "The Cardinal."

The record company has latched on to the soundtrack album rights to the film which is scheduled for a world premiere in Boston on Dec. 11 and a New York here the following day. The score for the pic was written by Jerome Moross.

Victor's other soundtrack sets of Preminger pix have been "Exodus" and "Advise and Consent."

BARS 10% TRAVEL BITE & 1½% LEVY

By MIKE GROSS

In a far-reaching decision handed down in the U.S. Court of Appeals in New York last week, it was ruled that the American Federation of Musicians' 10% traveling surcharge and Local 802's 1½% tax payments violate the Taft-Hartley Act. This affirmed the decision of the N.Y. District Court that the AFM and Local 802 are permanently enjoined from demanding or accepting the surcharge and the tax levy from orchestra leader Ben Cutler.

Cutler, upon agreement of both parties, was severed from the rest of the many orch leader plaintiffs in the main action, in order to bring the case to the Court of Appeals as quickly as possible. The orchestra leaders and the Court approved of this step because the AFM wanted to know once and for all if the taxes imposed on orchestra leaders-employers were legal or not.

The Court of Appeals agreed that the single engagement field is an industry affecting interstate commerce. The decision also agreed with the findings of the lower court that Cutler, an orchestra leader in the single engagement field, is an employer within the meaning of the statute and that as such he may not be required to pay over to the unions the taxes and surcharges involved. The decision concurred with Section 302 of the Labor-Management Relations Act which prohibits unions from demanding or employers from making payments to unions representing their employees.

Court's Opinion

The Court further found that "the designation in the Form B contract to be a self-serving subterfuge which is not entitled to any weight." (The Form B contract, in use since 1941, designates the purchaser of the performance as the employer of the musicians.)

For years the union has contended that the purchaser, including the father of the bride, is the employer of the musicians and the leader for his session. The Court of Appeals passed that off with:

BBC Telecasts Music Biz 'Bests'

London, May 7.

The annual Ivor Novello awards for standout contribution to British pop music last year were televised by the BBC on Saturday (4), in a show introduced by Catharine Boyle.

For the "A" side of the biggest selling record of 1962 "Telstar" earned an award for tunesmith Joe Meek, with awards also going to Decca and Ivy Music Co.

The outstanding light orchestral piece was written by Steve Race (Mills Music).

"My Love And Devotion" was tagged the outstanding song and the award was shared by writers Howard Barnes, Joe Rencoreni, Harold Fields and John Fields Music.

"Outbreak of Murder," by Gordon Franks, received the nod for the outstanding jazz composition (Chappell); Ron Grainer's theme music for the BBC-TV series, "Steptoe & Son" (Essex) won the section for the Outstanding Theme of Radio, Film or TV. The outstanding film score was published by Elstree Music. It was for the Cliff Richard film, "Summer Holiday" and 10 scribes chipped in to provide the score. Acker Bilk's "Stranger on the Shore" (Selwyn Music) was the most performed composition and veteran publisher Lawrence Wright, who composes as Horatio Nicholls, was the recipient of the year's Special Award for Outstanding Service to British Music.

Proposed $5 Jukebox License Fee Wins Lukewarm Backing at House Copyright Subcommittee Hearings

By MIKE MOSETTIG

Washington, May 7.

If politics is the fine art of compromise, the hearings before the House Copyright Subcommittee on eliminating the jukebox copyright exemption looked like crayon scribbling.

Under discussion was a proposal for a $5 license fee on jukeboxes with the money to be collected and distributed to copyright owners by the Register of Copyrights acting as a Performing Rights Administrator.

The measure was praised reluctantly by its purported friends, attacked as an administrative impossibility by its foes and received only one genuine endorsement from the subcommittee.

The bill was supported wholeheartedly only by its sponsor, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D.-N.Y.), subcommittee chairman Rep. Edwin Willis (D.-La.) and U.S. Register of Copyrights Abraham Kaminstein.

Faces Block Future

Willis called the measure a "reasonable accommodation" and an "honest effort to reach middle ground."

Willis' support of the license fee is the only reason it has a chance of getting out of his subcommittee. But even with his backing, the bill's Congressional future is bleak.

Kaminstein called the legislation a "reasonable and judicious way to approach this problem, but like any compromise it can't be wholly satisfactory to everyone."

Celler, noting the virtual impossibility of repealing the juke exemption, said the $5 fee bill is "based on practical, pragmatic grounds." He told the subcommittee that safeguards for collection and distribution of license proceeds should be provided but at no cost to the Government.

Willis said he would make "a serious effort to be reasonable and have legislation of some kind" to solve the long standing juke copyright exemption imbroglio. He said outright repeal of the exemption might be ruinous to jukebox operators.

The reluctant decision to back the $5 fee bill instead of outright repeal was made in a midnight conference by ASCAP general counsel Herman Finkelstein and Sidney Kaye, his BMI equivalent.

'Temporary Measure'

Agreeing to go along with the bill as the only measure with a chance of passing Congress, Kaye and Finkelstein told the subcommittee they only support it as a temporary measure. They both said

Sim Myers to Victor As Puffer for Red Seal Wing

Sim Myers has joined RCA Victor as an administrator of press and information. He'll work primarily with the Red Seal roster of artists and records.

For the past three years, Myers was a member of MGM Pictures' ad-pub staff in New York, Hollywood and Europe. Before that, he had been music editor and critic of the New Orleans Times-Picayune and a music and drama critic of the Chicago Tribune.

'Tovarich' Aides Still Searching For LP 'Comrade'

Although the musical "Tovarich" is in its eighth week on Broadway, it still hasn't found a record company comrade. It's the first tuner, with more than 21 performances to its credit, to draw a disk blank since the record company rush for original casters began.

Friends of "Tovarich" haven't given up on latching on to a disk deal, however. Still working towards that goal are the clicking team (Anne Croswell & Lee Pockriss) and associates of Abel Farkman (who coproduced with Sylvia Marris). They're now pointing to the Tony Award copped by the musical's star Vivien Leigh and the $60,000-plus weekly b.o. take it's been averaging the past weeks as lures to attract new record company interest. However, last week's take dipped to $50,200.

The pushers for an original cast album deal are still meeting record company resistance despite the attraction of the star and the boxoffice gross. Many tradesters feel that Farkman outsmarted himself in his original dealings with the record companies when he asked for an estimated $50,000 advance and a 20%-plus royalty share. Even though he's now eliminated entirely his demands for an advance and dropped his royalty request to 10%, the record companies are still not buying.

"Tovarich" opened in New York to generally bad notices and the record people aren't sure how long Miss Leigh's and costar Jean-Pierre Aumont's marquee lure can keep it going or how much value it would have on records. The recording and production costs would cost the diskery upwards of $25,-000.

The score is published by E. B. Marks' ASCAP firm, Piedmont Music. It's understood that Marks shelled out $15,000 to acquire the publishing rights.

Gene Austin Grooming Moppet Prodigy for TV

Hollywood, May 7.

Songsmith Gene Austin is sponsoring a 4½-year-old prodigy, Angela ("Angie") Paul with an eye to television bookings.

The little girl hails from Sulphur, La., and her repertoire—sans any formal musical schooling—ranges from the classics to boogiewoogie and jazz. Austin taught her to sing and play "My Blue Heaven," his smash disk seller of yesterday.

Child pianist's ambition is to be a "cowgirl." After coaching his new find, Austin had ABC-TV here tape the tiny 36-pound prodigy demonstrating finger exercises and playing Beethoven, Strauss and the "12th St. Rag."

Kenin Urges Performers' Rights for Musicians In Pitch Before D.C. Panel

Herman Kenin, president of the American Federation of Musicians, is now campaigning for performers' rights for musicians to enable them to share in revenues accruing from their recordings. The plea was made before a panel convened in Washington recently by the U.S. Register of Copyrights to consider revisions in the Copyright Law of 1909.

The presentation was made on Kenin's behalf by AFM general counsel Henry Kaiser and New York counsel Jerome H. Adler.

In the plea for copyright protection for tootlers who interpret and perform copyrighted works of composers, Kenin's statement noted that "we voice the common aspirations of all performers, be they actors, singers or musicians." He deplored fears by author-composer groups that recognition of performer rights might somehow challenge their long-established positions under the old law.

Kenin emphasized that recognition for the musician is a "moral issue, and good morals are the basis for good laws."

CHI TOOTERS, RAVINIA FEST INK 3-YR. PACT

Chicago, May 7.

Chicago Federation of Musicians and Ravinia Festival, the outdoor summer edition of the Chicago Symphony, signed a three-year contract last weekend only a few days after a negotiation crisis that nearly caused cancellation of the season.

Agreement was reached after Local 10 backed down on earlier demands that players be given consecutive days off and that all but first desk musicians from the Chi Symphony be rotated through the Ravinia season. Ravinia officials said this was an intervention in artistic matters, but did agree to do both "when possible."

Decca's 64 Pix & Legit Packages in Special Re-Run Sales Pitch

Decca Records has launched a re-run program for its Broadway and Hollywood catalog. Under the theme of "Playing At Your House Tonight," Decca has put 64 of its Broadway and Hollywood LPs on the block with a special dealer incentive plan for its May promotion.

Included in the original Broadway cast album product are the Rodgers & Hammerstein tuners, "Oklahoma," "Carousel" and "The King And I." In addition there are Irving Berlin's "Annie Get Your Gun," Frank Loesser's "Guys And Dolls," George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" and Robert Wright & George Forrest's "Song Of Norway."

To keep pace with the legituner product, the label has included, among others, such award-winning motion picture soundtrack sets as "Around The World In 80 Days," "The Eddy Duchin Story," "Picnic" and "Flower Drum Song."

Besides the 64 Broadway-Hollywood packages, Decca is adding a new set to this promotion by Sammy Davis Jr. entitled "Forget-Me-Nots For First Nighters." Included in the package are songs from shows and pix written by Rodgers & Hart, Cole Porter, Johnny Mercer, Gordon Jenkins and Frank Loesser, among others.

AFM Taxes

"We need not be concerned with those occasions when the father of the bride, at the height of his exhilaration, proceeds to lead the orchestra."

(One orchestra leader who followed the union's directive and used the Form B contract never made deductions from the wages of his sidemen-employees as an employer. He had his books examined by the Internal Revenue Service and was told that he must pay $60,000 in penalties and back payments on Social Security and Unemployment Insurance. He complained to the IRS that he was not the employer because he used the Form B contract, but the IRS stated, as did the Court of Appeals, that the orchestra leader is the employer.)

The key part of the decision is that the Court of Appeals found that the 10% AFM tax is an exaction from the leader's share and that he has been paying this money to the union out of his own share.

The decision is expected to spark a drastic revision in the AFM constitution to redefine collection procedures. The money collected via these taxes represents some $3,000,000 to the Federation and $720,000 per annum to 802. Without these sums, both claim they could no longer operate.

The orchestra leaders are now prepping for a trial against the AFM in the Sherman antitrust suit which has been pending since 1959. Pre-trial conference is scheduled for May 22.

Inside Stuff—Music

The U. of Kansas, through Dean Thomas Gorton of the School of Fine Arts, honored the Recording Industries (Music Performance) Trust Funds at its May, 1963 Festival of Contemporary Music at Lawrence, Kansas, by conferring a citation on the Trustee of the Funds, Samuel R. Rosenbaum, "for services rendered to the cause of music in America through the Trust Funds, as the sole and independent Trustee of the Funds appointed by the Industries, with the cooperation and approval of the American Federation of Musicians and its Locals."

From contributions given by record manufacturers geared to the volume of their sales, the independent Trustee pays musicians at regular scales for performances all over the U.S. and Canada open free to the public. Since 1948 over $30,000,000 has been so expended by the Trustee. His budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1963, calls for expenditures of about $6,000,000.

Paul Siegel, artists & repertoire producer for Teldec (Telefunken-Decca) in Germany, locked up distribution deals with Dot and London during his recent month-long visit to the U.S. Siegel's Teldec productions featuring the Oesterland Orchestra & Choir will continue to be released here by Dot, while London will issue the disks by British orch conductor-arranger Paul Chesterton featuring German pianist Gunther Schemmler. Siegel also set a deal with Shapiro, Bernstein for German publishing rights to several of the firm's tunes including "Our Winter Love" and "The Folk Singer." In addition, he acquired the German publishing rights from Sesac for the music of Richard Maltby beginning with his piece for piano and orch title "Concerto For New York." Siegel also wrapped up film rights to the Lawrence Welk tv show over German tv.

Adam Keefe, nitery comedian-impressionist, is getting a crack at the disk field via the Cub label's rock 'n' roll novelty number, "The Ghoul In School." Keefe, who does a "Frankenstein bit" in his nitery routine, plays the part of "The Ghoul" on the record. The tune is the theme of the Metro pic, "Werewolf In A Girl's Dormitory."

Raker, Homes To Europe to Push Colpix Product

Jerry Raker, Colpix Records general manager and Herb Homes, label's international director, take off for Europe on Sunday (12) for huddles with several of the company's foreign distributors.

During their London visit they will wrap up plans with Louis Benjamin, general manager of Pye Records, for Colpix records to be issued on the Colpix label throughout the United Kinkdom. Pye currently releases Colpix product under the Pye imprint.

When the arrangements with Pye are completed Colpix will have world-wide representation under its own identification banner. Details are expected to be settled May 23 and commemorated with a cocktailery in London.

The main purpose of Homes' trip will be to tighten coordination of promotional activities between Colpix foreign distributors and Columbia Pictures personnel and to set up plans for the release of several new singles and albums. Chief among the albums to be considered for cross-promotional work are the soundtrack of "Lawrence of Arabia" and two packages of music from "Diamond Head."

Durante Disks Again Via WB Label; Reprise Gets Prophet, Other Deals

Jimmy Durante will return to the disk field via the Warner Bros. label. Durante, who's not been associated with any record company for some years now, is currently rehearsing for his debut WB album. He'll work on the LP with label's artists & repertoire director, Jimmy Hilliard.

Also added to the WB roster last week was The Kirby Stone Four. Group had previously recorded for Columbia Records. Hilliard is also in charge of the album project for the Stone combo.

Negotiations for both artists were handled by Hilliard and Mike Maitland, WB president, and Jackie Barnett, representing Durante; and George Grief and Sid Garris, representing Stone.

Music Record?

Regensburg, May 7.

Five young German musicians, including a Hammond organist on leave from the German army, have claimed a new world record in dance music—after playing a non-stop 30-hour dance music marathon.

Performing in the American Diamond Club here, the five musicians of the Charlie Brown band topped the previous record of 26 hours and 33 minutes, as they played for 30 hours before an American military audience at the Non-Commissioned Officers Club here.

Members of the group include trumpeter Willi Pioesel, soldier Hans Otto Berg on the organ, saxophonist Guenther Brandl, bass Peppi Krauss and leader Charlie Brown.

NARAS Expands Scholarship Pgm.

Hollywood, May 7.

National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences has budgeted $600 from its treasury to expand its music scholarship program to the Coast.

Paul Weston, NARAS veepee, revealed that series of eight half scholarships have been set up for this fall at UCLA Extension as the "Dorothy Kirsten Scholarships." Program is first for the Coast, although it has been running successfully for two years at New York.

Weston said the scholarship program is designed to "develop high scholastic achievement in the field of music" and will be available to "high ability music students," selected by a UCLA Music Dept. board. John Scott Trotter is chairman of the NARAS scholarship program.

NARAS on May 13 holds its fifth annual "Grammy" awards with simultaneous dinner sessions in Hollywood, New York and Chicago, where chapters are now based. Organization is also setting up a Nashville chapter, according to Weston. Les Brown band will play for local affair, with Count Basie and Mel Torme set for N. Y. T.me schedule, under which awards must be announced simultaneously, makes presentations for 10:30 in N. Y. and 7:30 here.

Organization finances much of its activity from release of a "premium record" of Grammy winners, which in past has averaged in excess of $75,000 income. Some 38 categories are up for awards this year, voted by 2,000 membership.

Midwest Band Bookers Grieve as Fires Raze Four Major Ballrooms

Chicago, May 7.

Midwest band bookers are mourning the loss of four major ballrooms by fire within the past six weeks. Three had been regular stops on the name band circuit until they were burned out, and the fourth had converted to a radio station over a year ago after 36 years as a terppalace.

First conflagration occurred at Frank Lockage's Fruit Port Pavilion in Muskegon, Mich., in late January, followed a month later by razing of the 35-year-old Crystal Palace Ballroom at Paw Paw, Mich., owned by Frank Dlouhy. These two were the only major remaining ballrooms in western Michigan.

Two weeks ago, the Dutch Mill in Lake Delavan, Wisc., went up in flames. It was owned by Tony Rinella. A few days later Tom Archer's original Tro-Mar Ballroom in Des Moines joined the ash heap. It had been a terp landmark for 30 years. It was purchased by a radio station several years ago, and Archer opened a new Tro-Mar in the same city.

Renata Tebaldi Cancels Edinburgh Festival Role

Edinburgh, May 7.

Renata Tebaldi has withdrawn from her engagement at the upcoming Edinburgh International Festival, where she was to sing Adriana Lecouvreur with the San Carlo Opera. On medical advice all her engagements for this season have been cancelled, since she is suffering from overstrain. Her part will be taken by Magda Olivero.

Edinburgh Festival Society also revealed that Hans Werner Henze's new work, the Royal Winter Music, commissioned for the Society, for the composer to conduct at a London Symphony Orchestra concert on Aug. 23 cannot be performed on that date. The work is of such a length and importance, they state, that a whole evening would be required for its presentation and more time for its composition.

It is hoped the new work will be staged at the 1964 Edinburgh Festival.

Pre-'First Family' Pact Will Cost Meader $750 to Play $1,250 SF Date

Hollywood, May 7.

It has been six months since Vaughn Meader's "First Family" LP vaulted the young comic into national prominence. Since then disk has topped the 5,500,000 sales mark and Meader has gone on to network tv guestspots and a string of lucrative nitery stands, the last of which was at the Sahara in Las Vegas for which his act commanded $22,500 per week. Last week, however, he opened in San Francisco's hungry i for a mere $1,250 a week—bound by a contract inked long before record's click.

Caught prior to his departure north, Meader who was in town to headline the L.A. Press Club's salute to Gov. Brown, laughed and said that with his weekly break-even nut of $2,000, the $750 weekly loss he will suffer on the two-week stand, "might be good for income tax purposes." He added, however, that he really feels no animosity towards club, averring that his engagements there have been "instrumental" in his career's upward arc.

Efforts to break hungry i pact were not his idea, he maintains, rather his lawyers, who, he said, "misunderstood" the "pay or play" clause in the AGVA contract. They believed that if a club could cancel an artist by paying him coin equal to date pacted for, the performer could pay same coin to free himself from deal.

"It didn't work out that way, however," he says. Comic has a similar situation with a date at the Edgewater Beach in Chicago though coin there is heftier—$3,000 per week.

Meader said that he will continue to deemphasize the "Kennedy" impersonations in his act, noting that his Las Vegas turn comprised only about a third Kennedy material.

His Own Disk Label

He insists that latest "First Family" platter which he was contractually required to do by record's producers Karl Doud and Bob Booker will be the last he will cut on subject matter. Future albums he has on his mind will be themed along "historical, futuristic and political" lines he avers, and will be etched for his own label.

After dates at the Blue Angel in N. Y., Chi's Edgewater Beach and the Steel Pier in Atlantic City, Meader plans a six-week European vacation, after which he will return to break in a new act currently being penned by Gary Belkin for a fall college concert tour.

Comedian disclosed that he has received numerous offers to plug various products with the Kennedy voice, adding that he has categorically refused them.

PAR'S DOT DIPS BUT PUB FIRMS UPPED IN 1962

Paramount Pictures' music companies, Famous and Paramount, hit an all-time high in their overall activities for 1962. According to the picture company's annual report, their profits rose 14% over 1961 and sheet music sales climbed 140% over the '61 figure.

Prime factor in the publishing firms' upbeat was the sales of the Academy Award winning song "Moon River," by Johnny Mercer & Henry Mancini, from the Par pic, "Breakfast At Tiffany's." It was also reported that the music companies had more clicks in '62 than in any other single postwar year.

Among the Famous-Paramount hits during last year were "I Remember You," "Baby Elephant Walk," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," "Make It Easy On Yourself," "Most People Get Married" and "The Theme From 'My Geisha.'"

Eddie Wolpin is general professional manager of the Famous-Paramount combine.

On the other hand, however, it was reported that Dot Records, the picture firm's recording company subsid, had lower earnings than the previous year.

Weavers' 2d Concert Reunion in Carnegie Hall Racks Tuneful $19,700

The two-concert reunion of The Weavers at New York's Carnegie Hall last Thursday-Friday (2-3) to mark their 15th anni racked up a $19,710 take. At a $4.50 top the house went clean for the second performance Friday but had about 175 seats open the evening before.

The kickoff concert, brought in with about two-weeks rehearsal, was a choppy affair but the spirit and the sentiment of the occasion gave the audience the boost it wanted. Perhaps what slowed it up mostly was the overload of Weavers on stage.

In addition to the foursome (Ronnie Gilbert, Lee Hays, Fred Hellerman, Frank Hamilton who make up current group, there were ex-Weavers, Pete Seeger and Erik Darling, and Weaver-to-be, Bernie Krause (replacing Frank Hamilton next month) filling in solo and in unison. In giving each member a crack at individual folk wares, the show missed the free-wheeling pace attendant to Weavers' shows when only four are in charge.

However, when the group got into such familiars as 'Kisses Sweeter Than Wine,' 'Wimoweh,' 'Rock Island Line' and 'El Cabalito Blanco' the spirits rose accordingly on both sides of the stage.

There was an occasional sing-along during the opening concert and producer Harold Leventhal did some quick program reshuffling for the second performance to capitalize on the audience join-in which always makes every folknik happy.

Liberty Gimmick Cuts Kay Stevens Album In Simulated Studio Nitery

Hollywood, May 7.

Recording albums in niteries has become old hat, so Liberty pulled a switch and has etched chirp-comedienne Kay Stevens in Radio Recorders studio here—and in so doing tried to simulate working conditions in a nitery.

Right down to booze and loud talk.

Around 100 head were rounded up and, starting at 8 p.m.—after numerous corks had been popped for the throng seated at tables in semi-circle—Miss Stevens, garbed in one of the gowns she uses in her nitery routine, started caroling.

After an hour and 10 minutes, she took a breath—and more bottles were broken open. Upon her return she did a complete "second show." The best of the tape will comprise the album, which bears one of the longest titles in lacquer annals—"Kay Stevens Sings Great Songs—Inspired By Great Films—Which Never Were Made."

It is all original material, lyrics by Paul Francis Webster, melodies by Hal Borne. Liberty will release under its own label—not Old Crow, Cutty Sark nor Smirnoff.

the $5 fee was too low, but were willing to forego royalties to their societies' members until a satisfactory rate could be set.

When Finkelstein said he would go along with the fee bill as a start, Rep. Roland Libonati (D-Ill.) said he could see a little pig developing, adding more fat and bacon with age.

Kaye said the present juke exemption created "economic deprivation and was clearly in disharmony with the law." He added that the $5 fee shouldn't be considered reasonable since it wouldn't even cover costs for infringement suits.

The measure, Kaye continued, "postpones solution. It is a step towards solution, but not solution." He urged a "simpler course" than the $5 fee handled by the Copyright office.

Rep. John Lindsay (R-N.Y.) reported that both ASCAP and BMI had "damned it (the $5 fee) with faint praise."

John Kosbel of SESAC opposed the measure saying it wasn't a compromise but "one step removed from surrender."

While supposedly tailored to clear Congress, the license bill drew potshots rather than plaudits from subcommittee members.

Sees New Monster

Rep. Lindsay, the Broadway Republican generally sympathetic to showfolk, said the legislation "creates a monster worse than the one we've already got." He asserted the proposal would give the Copyright Office "all the trappings of a regulatory agency."

Lindsay suggested instead, a one or two year removal of the juke exemption. He said a rate ceiling should ease the juke operator's fears of being forced to pay exorbitant fees to performing rights societies.

Reps of the jukebox manufacturers and operators played down their past economic opposition to exemption repeal and instead took a bead on the administrative set up involved in the license operation.

Perry Patterson, repping Wurlitzer Co., Seeburg Corp., Rock-Ola Manufacturing Co., AMI Inc. and United Manufacturing Inc. said the entire license receipts would be devoured by the Copyright Office and the ASCAP, SESAC and BMI "bureaucracies."

He said the Performing Rights Societies would eventually ask for larger license fees driving juke operators out of business.

The measure would result, Patterson went on, in American taxpayers "funding a significant portion of the license monies which are to be distributed to an exceedingly limited group of publishers and composers."

Bill 'Too Complex'

George Miller and Merrill Armour, prexy and counsel for Music Operators of America, said the bill would make the Government an agent for collecting royalties. They charged that the bill was too complex and would never result in fair distribution to authors and composers.

Patterson, Miller and Armour all favored an increase in the mechanical license royalty fee on disks.

Rep. George P. Miller (D-Calif.) also appeared as a witness against the fee bill. He said the fight over ending the juke exemption has become a "comic opera." He favored the present exemption.

Barney Young, president of an [illegible] performing rights society, said he was against the bill since it would only benefit the "two giant monopolies, ASCAP and BMI." He called ASCAP a "front for the motion picture industry," and said BMI was a private organization "masquerading as a performing rights society."

Young said the fee bill would create a "giant lottery."

Rep. Willis told Young if ASCAP and BMI are violating antitrust laws he should go to the Justice Dept. If the present laws aren't sufficient to prevent a monopoly, Young should draft a bill and get a hearing, Willis suggested.

LOU BLOOMER SHOOTS RECALCITRANT PATRON

Pittsburgh, May 7.

Lou Bloomer, one of the top drummers in the Pitt area and the operator of a nabe tavern, shot and killed a customer in a brawl that started when Bloomer refused to serve the victim.

When Bloomer said "no," the customer threw a chair over the bar, whereupon he ordered the man out. Bloomer reached for his gun under the bar and fired a warning shot but the customer got a table this time and threw it across the bar as the tavernkeeper fired again, hitting his attacker with a bullet that eventually caused his death.

Police have withheld filing charges pending investigation.

Bloomer, 35, has his own band now and was at the old Copa Club for years with the Allan Shine Orchestra.

Homo and 'Lewd' Charges Suspend A.C.'s Entertainers & Paddock Cafes

Atlantic City, May 7.

Following investigations made last August and November, the State Division of Alcoholic Beverage Control lowered the boom on two resort night spots last week, shuttering the Entertainers' Club, at 160 S. Westminster Ave., for 240 days, and the Paddock International, Illinois and Atlantic Aves., both in mid-city, for 150 days. Penalties are the most severe inflicted by the ABC here in many years, and the agency added that when the clubs reopened another similar violation might mean outright revocation of their licenses.

In its complaint the ABC said that when its agents twice visited the Entertainers eatery, managed by Louise G. Mack, 60 and 90 persons were present and on each occasion approximately 95% were apparent male homosexuals. In addition the bartender also appeared to be a homosexual.

The complaint further states that the place was conducted in such a manner as to become a nuisance in that persons, apparently homosexuals, were permitted on the premises, and that the business was conducted in a manner offensive to common decency and public morals. It cited several instances where the club's license was suspended for similar violations. Place was ordered closed from May 8 until expiration of its license, June 30th; and if new license is granted, terms will be until Jan. 3, 1964.

In the matter of the Paddock International, which has had dozens of brushes with municipal and state authorities in the past two decades, ABC ordered the place shuttered for 150 days upon entry of a plea of non vult to three charges made by agents on Nov. 10 and 11 of last year.

The agents charged that female persons performed in a lewd, indecent and immoral manner, that they accepted beverages at the expense of or as a gift from customers, and that management employed persons not residents of the state.

They further charged that present during the performance was Edward Kravis, manager of the business, who stated to agents that "this violation will probably mean the end of my license" although he was not listed in the license application as a stockholder or having any proprietary interest in the licensed business.

The agents pointed out although the licensee (Kravis) had no previous record, the license of its predecessor in interest, Paddock International (A Corp.), of which Kravis was then an officer, had been suspended on several occasions for offenses of various natures.

Effective date of closing of the Paddock was fixed as from May 7 until June 30, midnight, of this year when the spots liquor license expires. The renewal license if granted was ordered suspended until Oct. 4 of this year.

Revocation of licenses, which could be appealed, means that both spots lose the lush spring, summer and fall business.

Wakely Going Steady With N.M. State Fair

Albuquerque, May 7.

Jimmy Wakely will again emcee the 11-day New Mexico State Fair, his fourth time in the post in the six seasons that the show has booked name talent.

Only other talent signed so far for September show is Don Ameche's International Showtime Circus, who will headline last two days of 1963 fair.

Charles' SRO 28G In Two Hub Shows

Boston, May 7.

Ray Charles became the first performer to sell out two shows in a one-nighter at Donnelly Memorial Theatre Saturday (4) with a sock $28,000 gross for the two shows at a $5 top. So dense were the crowds that the second show shedded for 10:30 could not get going until a half hour later.

Hal Zeiger, who has promoted 22 dates for Charles around the country, flew in from Baltimore, where Charles had racked up a big $21,500 the preceding night (3). The singer's swing, which includes dates at Carnegie Hall, Syracuse, the south and the west, ended Sunday (5) afternoon in Montreal. He leaves for dates in Europe, then goes into a nightclub tour with a date at Blinstrub's in Boston for a week opening June 18.

Zeiger is returning to his Los Angeles headquarters, where he will produce two Yiddish American revues, "Midsummer Mishagas," with George Jessel, to play the Coast this summer, and "Hannukah in Santa Monica," which he will tour.

BELAFONTE CO. STILL BICKERING RUSS TOUR

The deal for a Harry Belafonte & Co. tour of the USSR is still being bickered. According to Phil Stein, producer associate in Belafonte Enterprises, there has not yet been a definite turndown by the Soviet's Gosskoncert office because of a price hassle.

Stein, who began talks for the tour in Moscow in February and continued them here in March, said that the tour has not been stymied by Washington as reported in last week's VARIETY. "Washington," he said, "is only involved through the State Dept. giving us approval and sponsorship but the financial details are being worked out by us alone."

Stein says he's only asking the Soviets to foot the bill for costs of the tour (travel and rehearsal expenses and salaries for the company of about 30) but the Russians are still haggling over his proposed budget. Belafonte, himself, would take nothing for the tour.

If an agreement is reached, the trip will be set for the end of this year or early next year. It's figured that the capacity gross for the eight-week trek would come to $550,000.

Belafonte's Summer Tour

Harry Belafonte will do a longer theatre tour than usual this summer. Although three stands have been booked thus far, other dates are still being negotiated by the Agency of the Performing Arts.

Belafonte will begin the jaunt at the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, for three days, starting June 6, as a break-in for a three-weeker at the O'Keefe Center, Toronto, opening June 10. Other date booked up to now is a four-weeker at the Greek Theatre, Los Angeles, beginning Aug. 12.

Turn is based on the characters in the "Bullwinkle" television show. It will be a three-people act, one of whom will be a midget.

Geo. White's B'way Encore, Producing Int'l Theatre Show

George White, who produced several editions of the "Scandals" in the 1920s and '30s, will make a return to Broadway as producer of a show going into the International Theatre Restaurant starting Oct. 9 for eight weeks and options.

White last produced a N.Y. cafe show for the now defunct Versailles about 10 years ago. He also had his own cafe on the Stem for a brief period when he operated "George White's Scandals" on the site now occupied by the Latin Quarter.

This is the second time that the International has gone in for an outside producer. Boots McKenna is regularly occupied with that chore. It began its season last fall with a show by Harold Minsky which gave the cafe one of its healthiest b.o. periods.

The show may cost the International around $16,000 weekly, which is under the $15,000 obtained by Minsky. Most of the material is expected to be new scripting, although some comedy is expected to come from the producer's files of his former productions. Number of linegirls and showgirls will be left to White.

Hollywood, April 30.

Entry of the telecasting industry into the ownership of ice shows is expected to put the blade presentations on an entirely different basis than they now operate. Metromedia, owner of television and radio stations, is dickering to buy "Ice Capades" from former Pittsburgh exhibitor John Harris Jr. and a group of stockholders who own various arenas throughout the country. Agreement to sell was reached recently, but details are still being ironed out.

Whether Metromedia will telecast "Ice Capades" on its own stations or sell it to networks remains to be seen. "Ice Follies," for example, turned down an offer of $1,000,000 from one of the webs for four specs annually to be based on that show. Plan was to have elements of each half of the show telecast twice under commercial auspices. "Ice Follies" rejected the bid as being harmful to its touring biz.

But the Metromedia takeover of "Ice Capades" indicates the possibility that the major source of revenue for "Capades" may be derived from television. Whether this will have any affect on the boxoffice potential of the other two major ices, "Ice Follies" and "Holiday on Ice," remains to be seen.

The sale of "Ice Capades" is an involved deal. One of its major assets is said to be a $2,500,000 reserve tied up in ready cash. This reserve is said to be necessary to sustain the show during a losing streak, and to pay off costume bills, talent, sets, arrangements and other items during the rehearsal period.

The reserve has considerably increased since "Ice Capades" put two shows in the field. If touring "Ice Capades International," virtually the same show which went out the year before. Metromedia's purchase price will have to include the amount held in the reserve fund.

It's believed that Harris will stay as producer for some time with the new owners, but plans after he leaves aren't known as yet.

Claim D.C. Cafe Op Drops His Dors' Suit Vs. AGVA

Lee Zeiger, operator of the Casino Royal, Washington, has withdrawn his $5,000 suit against American Guild of Variety Artists. He recently filed the action to force the union to collect $5,000 owed him on a default of contract by Diana Dors, according to Harry Steinman, personal manager of Miss Dors.

Suit stemmed from the alleged failure of Miss Dors to play a date at the Casino Royal July 6, 1961. Zeiger complained to AGVA, where an award was made in his favor. Steinman, however, says that the suit has been withdrawn and the matter closed.

Strong (Man) To Hypo Pitt Arena

Pittsburgh, May 7.

Charles W. Strong, former exhibition director of the New York Coliseum, has been named to head Pitt's Civic Arena as replacement for Ed Fraher, who resigned to take over as redevelopment head for Alcoa.

Chris Witting, Auditorium Authority chief and v.p. with Westinghouse, in making the announcement said, ". . . The Arena should operate at a profit. Strong's wide experience in public attendance attractions, as well as industrial expositions and trade conventions, is especially suited to tapping the multiple use potential of our Civic Arena facility."

The board is also taking a hard look at all of the policies of the past which restricted attractions and hit promoters with heavy rentals plus staffing, and a 15% percentage choice. The Arena now wants all types of rentals and will do everything to tailor the building to fit the promoter's needs in the most economic and useful fashion.

Top attractions have brought in fantastic grosses at the Arena and during the first year promoters didn't mind the high rent and staffing costs. But last year when the novelty of the building wore off, attractions had to stand on their own and the building did little to help except make annoying demands which might have been forgotten had any profits been shown.

AIR HIJINKS MAY COST COMIC TONY FARRAR 1G

Comedian Tony Farrar, whose square handle is Ferdinand Fleischman, is the central figure in a precedential case whereby U.S. Attorney Robert M. Morganthau is seeking $1,000 from the comic for violation of a Federal Aviation Authority regulation forbidding drinking on a commercial airline unless the liquor is served by the line.

It's charged that Farrar brought his own on a flight during which he created a disturbance and was regarded as a serious threat to the safety of other passengers. The pilot radioed permission for an emergency landing at El Paso, where Farrar was seized by Federal authorities.

'Farmer' Larry Funk Back to Agency Biz

Larry Funk, who resigned from the MCA cocktail dept. two years ago to retire to his farm in Bloomington, Ill., has returned to show biz. He has joined UTM Artists Ltd., where he'll work in the personal appearance section.

Funk, a former bandleader, entered the agency business with the old Frederick Bros. Agency, from which he segued to MCA. He'll most likely start a small band sector at UTM.

At the same time, Mel Baker has resigned from the Chicago UTM office. Baker was originally on the Coast before transferring to Chi.

Beckman New CPME Prez

Conference of Personal Managers East has elected Jack Beckman as its president at a meeting held last week at the Friars Club, N.Y. Named veepee was Leonard Ditson. Bob Coe was named secretary and Mel Shayne treasurer. Nannie Greenfield is the outgoing president.

Greenfield, Chuck Taylor and Walter Gould were named to the board of directors. All officers will be installed formerly in June.

Army Eases Irksome Free 'Auditions' For Acts Playing European Theatre

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, May 7.

The highly unpopular unpaid "audition" before Special Services personnel and a chaplain, which every entertainer and every act hoping to play clubs throughout the U. S. Army's European command had to submit, is being softpedalled now.

While the audition is still required, less emphasis is given to it, and the audition okayed in one command is now accepted without question in every other European club area. Under the former U. S. Army in Europe commander, Gen. Bruce C. Clarke, stringent regulations for American entertainers who expected to do club dates were carried out to the letter.

But the new commander, Gen. Paul Freeman, who replaced Gen. Clarke last year, has put considerably less accent on the auditions. American performers, even those with the biggest names, were forced to do the free audition to make sure that their material was "clean enough" not to offend any of the American troops or their families stationed over here.

Oddly, only the U. S. Army required this bluenose investigation, and acts booked before the U. S. Air Force clubs in Europe were exempt from the free tryout. One interesting aspect of the "proofing" of the act was that the entertainers, warned in advance of the Army censorship, did material that was sure not to offend, eliminating any cracks about sex, President Kennedy or top Government officials, or Army brass.

But once the performers were booked and played to the troops in their own military clubs, part of the offbeat material came back into the act, some of the entertainers alleged. And that, they noted, was at the request of the club officer booking the show, who pointed out that his soldiers were men and not boys, and wanted the show played just as wildly as possible.

The auditions were often performed formerly as free shows for the military patients at 97th General Hospital in Frankfurt, with all the club officers in the Frankfurt area invited to attend. One of the main gripes from the entertainers was that only a couple of club officers would show up, so still wouldn't know what the show officials was about.

Now, under the improved system, an act can get paid for its audition by making its initial appearance on Tuesday night, when soldier business is generally slow at the Non-Commissioned Officers Club—the Topper Club—in Frankfurt.

If the act is approved it can

Question of $3,500 Expenses 'Off The Top' Kayos Sam Cooke's Pitt Show

Pittsburgh, May 7.

Deejay Porky Chedwick and promoter Tim Tormey, whose promotion at the Civic Arena last year drew over $50,000, were forced to cancel their show at Syria Mosque on Friday (3) when Henry Wynn, owner of Supersonic Productions and producer of the Sam Cooke show, refused to let the show go on. The contract called for Tormey to get his expenses of $3,500 off the top and when Wynn said that there was only $2,000 going in, there appeared to be no chance at all for him to recover any part of his estimated $6,000 show cost.

Wynn explained to the Pitt VARIETY rep that there were many things that were not explained to him by Universal Attractions which booked the date. He said he would have never let the show come to Pittsburgh if he knew that Tormey was only going to promote the show for "three day." (Tormey actually promoted very strong for five days and did considerable preliminary promotion outside Pittsburgh proper two weeks in front. It was impossible for him to start promoting the show before Monday night since he had the "Motown Revue" on that night and did not want the obviously superior Sam Cooke show to hurt the gate of the earlier show.)

Wynn also said that he expected to play the Arena instead of the Mosque and that he wanted to see the "dome roll back." His argument was that Tormey was guaranteed first money and that it would be impossible for him to get anything out of the show and he might as well cancel so that he wouldn't have to pay the show.

Dick Allen of Universal Attractions was in town and tried to get Wynn to put the show on after Tormey agreed to take a straight 50% instead of getting expenses off the top. Wynn refused and said that "since I did not sign the contract, there will be no show." Tormey said he has a signed contract and that the court would decide whether or not he had a contract.

Beside Sam Cooke, the show had Jerry Butler, Dee Clark, The Crystals, The Drifters, Solomon Burke, Little Esther Phillips, Dionne Warwick, Johnny Thunder, Little Julius High and The Upsetters.

Max Bygraves Headlines Howard & Wyndham's '63 '5-Past-Eight' in Glasgow

Glasgow, May 7.

The 1963 edition of Howard & Wyndham's lavish summer revue, "Five-Past-Eight," teed off here at the Alhambra Saturday (4), with Max Bygraves, English comedian, heading the layout.

Trend is now for U.K. comedians with a national flavor to headline. In earlier years the annual summer show was more intimate in character, and local Auld Lang Syne comics topped the bill.

Dick Hurran has staged the revue in last year's glittering "Starlight Room" nitery setting, with the dance numbers being produced by Lionel Blair. Bygraves fills a large part of the show himself, and is joined by his teenage son Anthony.

Alma Michaels planed in from the U.S. to present her "Excess Baggage" canine act. The Saddri Dancers, a French trio, is the other specialty. Singer Fay Lenore, the dancing Craft Twins, the George Mitchell Singers and 16 Tiller Girls, round out the layout.

Bygraves, in for 10 weeks prior to his summer stint at the Opera House, Blackpool, will be followed in July by Bob Monkhouse, songstress Yana, singer David Hughes, and ventro act Dennis Spicer. Headliners in the third edition in the fall have yet to be named.

Named an honorary mayor of Troy by Mayor Neil Kelliher, on his first appearance, Durante was given a key to the city this time. Thursday was also proclaimed "Jimmy Durante Day."

Everybody in Checker's Personal Manager Act; Record Chubby Roster

Chubby Checker now has more personal managers than any other performer about. He recently split with his longtime p.m., Henry Colt. But the latter still retains a financial interest in the rotund singer who hit bigtime with his Twist album release.

Checker's new management contract is now held by Kal Mann, but it's said to be on a temporary basis. However, Checker's road manager, Dave Machinsky, is signing all the singer's contracts.

Colt also bowed out of the management of singer Dee Dee Sharp, who is also managed by Mann, but Machinsky has nothing to do with that deal.

Colt, meanwhile, has joined with Frank Virtue in formation of Colt-Virt Inc., a Philadelphia based personal management and record producing firm. They now handle singers Tina Powers and Tommy Maris, along with The Teachers, a folk group and The Kit Kats, a teenage set of singers.

AFM Walkout Folds All Mpls. Nightclub Shows

Minneapolis, May 7.

Nightclub entertainment ceased here last week when union musicians walked out because of a wage dispute and the American Guild of Variety Artists prohibited its members from performing where non-union instrumentalists are employed.

Dozens of bistros, several hundred musicians and about 100 performers are involved. Instead of a strike, the tooters' union claims the situation constitutes an employers' lockout. The musicians had set a boosted scale and there had been no niteries' response to an ultimatum to "pay or we'll withdraw."

For sidemen and leaders the union is demanding $3.90 and $4.60 an hour, respectively, from April 15 to Oct. 15 when there's a jump again to $4.25 and $5. Double pay is asked for six holidays.

Previous scale was $3.40 and $4.20 per hour for sidemen and leaders, respectively, and there was straight scale for holidays.

At one establishment, Murray's, a pianist receiving $225 a week, amounting to more than twice the raised scale, refused to work on union orders.

Baldwin-Montrose (GAC) Ups 1st Qtr. Net to 357G

Ft. Wayne, Ind., May 7.

Annual board meeting of the Baldwin-Montrose Chemical Co., of which General Artists Corp. is a subsidiary, last week reported an increase in sales and earnings for the first quarter ended March 31. Sales and commissions rose approximately 34% from $4,900,000 to $6,500,000. Unaudited profits, before preferred dividends, climbed 27% from $280,000 to $357,000. Earnings per common share of 31c for the quarter were more than double the 12c earned in the same period of 1962.

Although gratified with the increase, Baldwin-Montrose board chairman Herbert J. Siegel declared that the improvement should not be taken as a basis for projecting earnings for the remainder of the year. The regular quarterly dividend on preferred stocks of 25c per share was declared, payable June 20 to stockholders of record June 7, 1963.

Conn. Eyes Talent Tax

Hartford, May 7.

Non-incorporated members of the theatrical and entertainment fraternity who perform "professional services" are faced with the spectre of a new state tax.

Currently being studied by the Legislature's Finance Committee is a bill that would extend the state's unincorporated business tax to those performing "professional services."

S. Hurok Now in Moscow Circus Act, May Split Import Billing With Chalfen

The Indian Sign

Albuquerque, May 7.

Raymond Nakai, the former Indian disk jockey on a Flagstaff, Ariz. radio station who was recently elected to head the big Navajo Tribal Council, may now get a little closer to Bing Crosby than strictly on records.

As tribal chairman, Nakai was recently named to the board of directors of the First Navajo National Bank.

Crooner Crosby is chairman of the board.

The forthcoming U.S. tour of the Moscow State Circus is likely to present an extremely mixed management picture. Although "Holiday on Ice" producer Morris D. Chalfen has been given sole credit as importer of the group, he may have to share this honor with S. Hurok. Hurok long tried to bring in the Soviet circus but was stymied through his failure to get permission from the American Guild of Variety Artists. This year, however, a deal was worked out with AGVA whereby the union got $10,000 from Chalfen for allowing importation of the show. Moreover, Moscow performers will not have to join AGVA.

Hurok initially denied his connection with the Moscow import, but recently admitted that he was in the picture and may allow his name to be used in the billing.

Also in the background of the Moscow State Circus is Art Concello, general manager of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus. He will serve as general manager of the Soviet show's American tour, and will also cast the exchange circus that will tour Europe and Moscow next summer.

Concello's dual capacity with both shows has led to one embarrassing situation in which the Pittsburgh Arena nixed the Ringling circus in favor of a stand by the Moscow unit. This is the only domestic mixup in connection with the routing. All other dates of the Moscow circus have no conflicts with the Ringling show.

More such conflicting situations are not likely to result during the European tour of the exchange sawduster. It will be a three-ring affair to differentiate it from the normal one-ring show which plays the Continent.

Tentative schedule calls for the tour after Russia under Ringling auspices to open at Dortmund, Germany, Aug. 29 for 13 days. It will follow with Hamburg, Copenhagen, Goteborg, London, Ghent, Lille and Paris, where it will play for 40 days.

Thereafter the export circus will play Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Dusseldorf, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Zurich, Geneva, Milano, Torino, Lyons, Brussels, Antwerp and Cologne, winding up June 28, 1964. It's planned to cast many of the performers in the U.S. for the Soviet dates. More performers will be added for the Continental tour.

Wiere Bros. Cancel Date For 1st Time in 30 Yrs., L.V. Lounge 'Too Small'

Hollywood, May 7.

For the first time in act's three decades on the boards, the Wiere Bros. have cancelled an engagement because trio feels its turn does not fit a stage on which it must work.

Act opened in newly reconstructed lounge of Las Vegas' Desert Inn on April 30, worked three performances and then agreed with management that the turn wasn't enhanced under circumstances. It is understood the Wieres believed the new stage too small. Management argued it was quite as large as many others.

Gene Murphy, of Desert Inn, stressed the decision was mutual and friendly. "It just isn't their room," he observed. Sylvester Wiere added, "we came across a room in which it was impossible for us to present our act."

Wieres are being replaced by Murray Arnold quartet. The Desert Inn, which was reopening lounge after refurbishing, has three other turns in the facility—led by Dave Apollon and combo.

ALEC SHANKS VICE DONN ARDEN AT LQ

The Latin Quarter, N.Y., is getting a new producer for the edition opening early October. Alec Shanks has been signed for the new show, succeeding Donn Arden whose contract has been ended by mutual consent. Arden is currently producing shows at Le Lido, Paris, and the Stardust and Desert Inn, latter two Las Vegas. Timing of the new LQ edition, it's said, would make it impossible for him to give the show adequate attention.

Shanks is a London producer, who has been identified with top shows in cafes and legit. He staged several editions at La Nouvelle Eve, Paris, did costumes and sets for the Palladium, London, and the Folies Bergere; designed the London edition, later imported to New York, of "La Plume de ma Tante," and was associated with the London productions of "Kiss Me Kate," "Call Me Madam" and "Kismet."

This is Shank's first cafe effort in New York. He is homebased in London.

Copacabana, N.Y.

Brenda Lee with The Casuals (6); Bob Melvin, Magid Triplets, Line; $6, $7 minimum.

This is the time of year when the juveniles take over the New York nitery industry. The proms are starting, and the bid for kid trade becomes one of the major quests of the Gotham bonifaces. To help the Copacabana get its share, Jules Podell has booked Brenda Lee for the current bill to be followed by Bobby Darin, which as the record charts indicate, isn't bad booking at all.

Actually on the opening night of Miss Lee's engagement, the proms hadn't yet started and she had an adult audience. It'll be different on the weekends, when the youngsters are expected to fight for space at this hospice. As a result, Miss Lee worked her preem under a handicap.

Miss Lee has made her mark on Decca Records and has been prominent on the charts since she was that high. She hasn't grown much, vertically, that is, but there is evidence that she has tried to expand in other ways. For this adult Copa audience, she seemed to show several instances when she could make it before the grownups. At these times, she sang sans her instrumental and vocal coharts, alone and quietly and hushes the crowd.

However, there was a vast vocal wasteland much of the time for this particular house. Her record hits had little penetration for Copa regulars, and what would ordinarily kill younger audiences, left the Copa-ites less than shaken.

Miss Lee's act has a lot of vigor and vitality. She has the youthful exuberance and spirit that could make a place jump. Her coharts, billed as The Casuals, a sextet of musicians and background singers, are excellently choreographed so that the act has movement and direction. Dick Barstow, incidentally, prepared the turn.

In all, the songstress needs an audience of her own age group to realize her maximum. But she did prove that she can also work in a mature vein. More of the latter and she can take on adult audiences as well.

Miss Lee's colleague on this session is Bob Melvin, a repeater in this bierstube. He has come in with a batch of new lines which gave him a bad time for the first few moments, but he did reach an understanding with the crowd and wound up a major hit.

The Doug Coudy production, with the Magid Triplets fronting, holds on as does the Paul Anka score. Joseph Mele fronts the Copa crewmen, and Frank Marti supplies the Latin influence. Jose.

Los Angeles, May 1.

Allan Sherman, Jeanie Sommers, Tommy Oliver Band, Lou Levy, Lou Busch; $2.50 cover, two-drink minimum.

In the cold light of day, the teaming of a plump, bespectacled comedy vocalist whose repertoire consists entirely of parodies with a husky, almost raspy voiced, more than slightly pregnant girl singer sounds almost too experimental.

Allan Sherman and Jeanie Sommers, this offbeat offering, create an entertainment package, however, that makes this world a better place in which to live and Gene Norman's Crescendo should resound to the bang, clang of its cash registers throughout their engagement.

Miss Sommers, observing her fifth visit to Norman's-land, probably violates every vocal rule in the book and continually tests her limited voice by pushing it to its outermost reaches. However, what would come out as a hoarse, harsh croak actually issues as a pleasant, melodic, slightly but delightfully abrasive tone. From her opening "Day In, Day Out" to "Redesign Your Baby," she's refreshingly different and, among nitery songbirds, a rara avis, indeed.

As long as composers keep turning out tunes, Allan Sherman will probably find ways to spoof them. An outrageous punster (a paradox is when Ben Casey meets Dr. Kildare) and a free-swinging smasher of idols with clay feet, most of his parodies are aimed at the general problems that plague us all, but for this engagement he has sprinkled his repertoire with many "show biz" routines. He puts the Crescendo into its proper niche with his opening shot. During the rest of the uproarious evening, he takes aim at every target in or out of sight—and, what a marksman!

Showtunes provide his best material and show people, his best subjects. In a performance, Sherman runs through an enormous amount of material—under the heading of "short songs," he'll toss off eight to 10 parodelightful tidbits—"Goldman's Earrings," "Hymie's On The Moon," "I See Bones" or "The Last Time I Saw Maharis." His needle goes deep but leaves no scars. Many of the items are from his Warner Bros. albums. Robe.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 30.

Teresa Brewer, Dave Barry, Dale Harris, Marcia Rogers, Moro-Landis Dancers (16), Louis Basil Orch (15); produced by Stan Irwin; choreography, George Moro; $4 minimum.

Teresa Brewer hasn't come up with a gimmick to replace her dancing boys (6) but she and choreographer-stager Bob Herget have injected freshness into her act which makes it sparkle with originality while moving at its fast pace. As an excuse to use some new songs, she and her terping teammates look into the future with a "Way Back In '83" number, which also gives her a chance to demonstrate her versatility as a competent dancer.

An equally clever bit introduces her hit record medley—she pulls her partners, who turn thumbs down on the nostalgia while the audience insists she revive some of her trademark tunes. Miss Brewer remains a solid song stylist, and her delightful extra-added squeaks are in tune, in tempo and on key. She makes several gown changes, and in the finale shows she's not superstitious by defying the show biz taboo against yellow dresses.

Conductor Herb Buchanan, fronting the Louis Basil orch (15) for Miss Brewer, guides the petite songstress and helps her keep her reputation as a strong Vegas attraction in producer Stan Irwin's stable.

Dave Barry, a regular and always a favorite here, is comedy star of the bill. His lampoons, with uncannily accurate sound effects, of wives, children, drivers, drunks, and other targets never fail to register strongly in the laugh department.

Handsome singer Dale Harris, and shapely looker Marcia Rogers, who does a dance specialty, are outstanding in the Moro-Landis production number, which features the 16 "Most American Girls In The World."

Buddy Hackett returns here May 20. Duke.

Edgewater Beach, Chi

Chicago, April 30.

Vagabonds, Edgewater Beach Guys (5) & Dolls (5), Les Waverly Orch; $2.50-$3 cover.

The Vagabonds was one of the first acts booked by Gene Barrett when he took over as g.m. of the Edgewater Beach last year, and they proved highly successful at that time. They're the kind of high-decibel low-comedy act that can reach out to the far corners of the spacious Polynesian Village and weld the far-flung tablers into an audience.

Current Vagabonds' personnel includes Al Torre and Dominic Germano on guitars, Attilio Risso on accordion, Dino Natale on bass, impressionist Babe Pier and distaffer Bobbi Boyle as vidist and vocalist. Notable by his absence is Eddie Peddie (now doing a double with Danny Stanton), who was the group's mainspring in their last appearance. He is not only a firstrate rubberface comic, but also served as an important catalyst for the entire group.

Peddie's mugging chores have largely been taken over by bassist Natale, who to a degree makes up in enthusiasm for his predecessor's skill as a mime. Miss Boyle is a charming chirp and able instrumentalist, and her vibe tandemry with Natale provides some of the brighter moments in the show. Pier is an astute mimic, and makes a major contribution with his carbons of Liberace, Boris Karloff, JFK, Ted Lewis, Cary Grant and the like as they would sing "When The Saints Go Marchin' In".

Producer Robert Simpson has, for the second show in a row, put together a lackluster melange of overgrown and partially-staged showfare for the resident Edgewater Beach Guys & Dolls. With the exception of baritone vet Sherri Noel, the youthful cast appears to have tired of its longrun gig and seems to be working mechanically. Noel carries off his male chores with vigor and is the vocal backbone of the production numbers. Mor.

ROGER WHITTAKER
THE NEW YORKER

Hilton Hotel, London

London, April 30.

Maria Peralta, Judd Solo Orch (7); lighting, Leslie Wheel; $7.15 minimum.

The Rooftop restaurant of the newly-opened Hilton Hotel, 28 stories up, is providing Londoners and tourists alike with a magnificent panoramic view of the city. It surprises no one that since its opening earlier in the month the room has been at capacity every night, with reservations extending months ahead.

Obviously the room itself is the novelty and the cabaret is, for the time being, of secondary importance. That is not meant as a disparaging comment, but a statement of indisputable fact. It would be reasonable to assume that the same lively business would be maintained, in these early days, without any entertainment.

Maria Peralta, who has the distinction of being the first artist to play the room, can, however, take considerable comfort in the knowledge that his original three weeks' booking has now been extended to three months. It is a well deserved tribute to an artist who plays a unique instrument with considerable flair and style.

Peralta, who hails from Uruguay and now resides in New York, is a skilled musician who taught himself to play the bandoneon, an instrument which is a variation of the accordion and concertina. Instrument was made more than 100 years ago. With its 98 buttons, each of which produces two distinct notes, it has a remarkably wide range, and is far more melodious than either the accordion or the concertina.

His act is a brief one, just about 15 minutes, but in that short space of time he illustrates his prowess with an ingratiating display of showmanship. A key feature of his program is wedding music, which has a topical note in London, after the recent Royal marriage.

Resident in the Rooftop room is the Judd Solo orchestra, a seven-man combo, which splits up for part of the evening and plays as a complete unit for comparatively short periods. Its dance music style is mainly sedate, though there are some lively interludes. However, they overdid the backing for Peralta and virtually drowned his opening number.

With a minimum of just over $7 for a four-course dinner, the Rooftop at the Hilton is one of the best buys in town, and will undoubtedly lead the popularity stakes for a long time to come. Myro.

Viennese Lantern, N.Y.

Malagon Sisters (3), Ron Eliran, Ernest Schoen Orch; $1.50 cover.

The international settlement character of the Viennese Lantern is further enhanced with the current bill which ranges from Spain to Israel, with the only Viennese elements being operator Max Loew and the string ensemble batoned by Ernest Schoen.

The new show also marks a try at commercialism, although it doesn't seem in character with the operation. The Malagon Sisters, a trio of classy Columbian femmes, with a batch of special material, Latin tunes interspersed with bits of comedy, appear more for the midtown spots than the softer confines of the Lantern.

The Malagons are a family aggregation of the Andrews Sisters tradition who punch out their material and keep up a slambang pace throughout their turn. The Loew spot isn't conducive to that type of entertainment, although the potential of this act in another kind of atmosphere is big.

Ron Eliran, an Israeli singer accompanying himself on the guitar, seems more in keeping with this spot. Unlike the Malagon Sisters, his current acceptance in the commercial cafes will take considerable time.

Eliran evidences natural voice and charm. There is little artifice in his turn and he has a native ingenuousness that gives him top rating here. He sings songs in several languages and from several countries, making with charming explanations where needed. He came back for several encores.

The Schoen ensemble, with the maestro also contributing vocals, showbacks excellently. It also does the strolling instrumental bit to enliven the in-between-show periods. Jose.

Carillon, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, April 30.

Lou Walters' production, "Oo La La," with Ruth Wallis, Eddy Garson & Chico Chico, Pierre Jackson, Jerry Newby, Line (15), Jacques Donnet Orch; choreography, Jack & Marilyn Nagle; $3.50 minimum.

Lou Walters' continuing editions of his Parisienne revue concept is now well into their fourth year, setting what may well be a record for any production in the mercurial history of this resort's niteries, either of the long-gone indie genre, or along hotel row.

Solid hold on audiences (and hotel op wants, budgetwise) can be credited to fresh-as-new look and pace of the frolic by Walters and his company manager Max Selette. With it, are regular changes in top-slot acts (usual tenure is three to four weeks). Also brought in at intervals are new ensemble faces and figures, plus costuming. Another asset is reasonable minimums and, of course, that overall nut that allows for a break-even or in-the-black score every week.

Current edition is illustrative. Walters has installed Ruth Wallis as his feature and she turns out a smart choice, what with the conventioneers' biz around that provides goodly amount of customers along with the wide-eyed tourists from the smaller cities and midwest centers who don't make it hereabouts in winter.

The Wallis set of special lyrics—most of them her own—are of the spicy sort that tickle their risibilities. The artful delivery of Miss Wallis takes any edge off a line that might border on a single entendre, to make it all a happy time for the auditors.

Most of her material is angled to spoofs on men manners and morals. But inject of a seriosa, "The Clowns," is a shrewdly set change of pace that grabs rapport with any femmes who might have had doubts. It's a show biz piece that wraps up. Closes with another showmanly straight on "This Is The Life For Me" to wind into encore-returns. Miss Wallis works with class and a free-wheeling delivery that add to the big impact.

Eddie Garson and his Latino-lined wooden partner, Chico Chico, is a familiar in these parts and sets well with his familiar lines and "dialog" with the vis-a-vis, plus the adept voice tossings in three parts, a la Senor Wences. Pierre Jackson contribs an effective panto in colorful clown costume to set the solo spots off to warm reception.

Production is a brilliant one. The choreo ideas of Jack & Marilyn Nagle are inventive, and worked out with flair and imagination, notably in a "Fountains of Rome" sequence that is a triumph of costuming and strobe-light effects.

The 15 dancers and paraders are attractive as well as handle their assignments in zesty manner; ditto on the Walters trademark, the Can-Can bangle complete to the little screams accompanying the high-kicks into splits. Handsome Jerry Newby is a versatile production lead, handling the songs and terps with verve. Jacques Donnet, who arranged the show's bright score, conducts his orch on the backings in top style.

As noted show is in for indefinite period with Miss Wallis remaining until May 15, at least. Lary.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 2.

Tony Martin, Jose Greco & Co. (18), Jackie Clark, Jack Cathcart Orch (23); presented by Elias Atol; stage direction, Milt Bronson; $4 minimum.

It's Tony Martin time again at the Versailles Room, and the man who seems to have invented savoir faire in singers has an act which is both updated and nostalgic. In the former category, he gets maximum applause for a very clever parody on "I'm In Love With A Wonderful Guy," using names of golfers in the current Tournament of Champions.

His version of "Days Of Wine and Roses" is superb, and he freshens the over-exposed "What Kind of Fool Am I?" by doing his impresh of Anthony Newley impersonating Tony Martin. In the nostalgia department, his distinctive tones play with such numbers as "Lullaby of Broadway," "Fascination," and "Avalon."

Hal Belfer, now in his 10th year as Martin's producer-stager, keeps the turn imaginative and the pace smooth. Al Sendrey at the 88 pilots the bash on an even keel as conductor of the Jack Cathcart orch (23). And Martin's seemingly effortless efforts are occasionally supplemented by a fine choral group of two males and two femmes.

Martin is now one of the Riviera stockholders, and he generously gives Jose Greco 100% billing—recognition which is well deserved. Greco and his dancers (18) open the show with an exciting splash of authentic Flamenco feet and body movement, highlighted by a most effective salute to Ravel's "Bolero." Greco's colorful revue is an ideal balance for Martin's songalog.

Icing on the cake is the very funny standup comedy routine of Jackie Clark, whose stories and one-liners are mostly virginal on the Strip. This is Clark's second trip here, and his acceptance indicates that he can easily join the fraternity of major league humorists on the Las Vegas beat.

This program, with stage direction by Milt Bronson, is in for four frames. Duke.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, April 29.

Kim Sisters, Ben Arden Orch; $2-$2.50 cover.

The Kim Sisters are among that handful of topflight acts that spell surefire business in the posh and roomy Empire Room, and if past performance and opening night turnout are any indication, they're in for a hot four-week stay. The girls are a combination of two winning factors for this spot—freshness and vitality for the family trade and a cute sexiness for the more jaded tastes of the samplecase set.

An o.o. of their turn shows why the threesome is in such trim shape. It's a colorful and explosive hour-long display of vim, versatility and knowhow that is virtually irresistible to wide range of tastes. Vocal arrangements are flawless, terp routines are expertly planned and brightly executed, and the girls' solo and combo work on a staggering array of instruments is bound to impress.

Ben Arden's house orch provides an able assist plus a terpworthy between-shows beat.

Bill is in for four weeks. Mor.

Fuera, Toronto

Toronto, May 1.

Norman Brooks, Paul Grosney Quartet; no cover or minimum.

Boniface Lou Coleman, at a cost of some $130,000, has converted this former midtown Child's restaurant into The Friars Club. The 200-capacity room now has a black and scarlet decorative motif. He has set baritone singer Norm Brooks and the Paul Grosney Quartet for tee-off. Brooks is in for two weeks, ending May 11, and the Grosney Quartet is permanent. Mel Torme is next, with negotiations underway with Deep River Boys and Helen Forrest to follow.

Brooks, who talks and sings like the late Al Jolson, started when caught with "When You're Smiling" followed by a Jolie medley, repeated with request numbers in future shows. He is on for four nightly, 35-minute sets, expertly backed by the Grosney Quartet, who also play for the dance session. Grosney plays a hot but subdued horn when circumstances warrant and is backed by piano, bass and drums.

Gypsy Rose Lee Peels Off 'A Curious Evening' At Buff's Statler Hilton

Buffalo, May 1.

It's a long time and a far cry from the floor show at McVan's bistro on the banks of the old Erie Canal here to the posh precincts of the Statler Hilton Rendezvous Theatre—but Gypsy Rose Lee has made it.

Hotel room features special $3.75 Theatre Dinner (though a la carte is also available) with an added $2.50 tab for the show, and you take either or both. As of now, it is the sole operation of its kind in downtown Buffalo and at the price it represents top dining and entertainment value.

"A Curious Evening," with Gypsy Rose Lee; dinner, $3.75, plus $2.50 for show.

"A Curious Evening" is indeed a curious evening. Except for a 15-minute intermission, it is a two-hour animated magic lantern slide show with the inexhaustible Gypsy on stage and in charge throughout.

The film, which tees off with the Hovicks in Seattle in 1913, comprises intimate family, national and even international clips and traces the clan's personal and professional history from hammy child performances to polished adult stardom. All of their fellow performers through the years—cronies and celebrities—are shown.

Miss Lee, gowned like a queen and seated on a high upholstered stool at one side of the rostrum, punctuates the action on the screen with a running stream of salty comment. The run-off is not only a recital of the defeats and triumphs of the fabulous Havocs but is in large measure a history of their identification with show biz in all its manifestations—music hall, vaudeville, burlesque, pictures, legit and niteries—during the first half of the century.

The story closely follows Miss Lee's book which was transmuted into the musical "Gypsy", and the portion devoted to rehearsals and staging of the show is especially engaging. Whether or not the present recital is too repetitive and heavy on the personal memoir side, or whether it runs too long on the same note without variation, is a matter of personal taste.

To show biz buffs at least, it is both engrossing and rib-tickling, although for general consumption there might well be some different element of entertainment supplied.

Miss Lee wears a couple of breathtaking creations for the performance and, although at the beginning of each stanza she projects a few moments of what threatens to be a well gilded display of the peeler's art, she never permits this part of the presentation to get out of control, in spite of obvious audience expectation and approval.

Booking of "Evening" into the 250-seat room was originally for two weeks but has now been extended for two additional stanzas, which is the best indication of the show's audience impact. Burton.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

Louis Nye, Jane Harvey, Addiss & Crofut, Bobby Short Trio; $6 minimum; $2.50 in lounge.

The Blue Angel is back in stride following its lapse with the previous bill. With Louis Nye and Jane Harvey as newcomers plus the holdover Addiss & Crofut, the entertainment values are highly evident in this session, and biz is slated for an upbeat at the Max Gordon spot.

Nye, who was propelled to national prominence with his work on the Steve Allen Show, has perfected his routines in various intimeries. He carries them off expertly, getting maximum response out of routines which he first unveiled in New York at the Bon Soir.

His discourse on an Army noncom's etiquette of a mixed shower, an Arabian takeoff as well as his enactment of a scene from "[illegible]" provide a wide range of endeavor. The basic premises are fairly funny and Nye makes them count for tremendous payoffs.

Jane Harvey has been thrushing for some years. Never one to delve into the obvious or corny, she has an evergreen outlook, which permits her to give fresh facades to a wide variety of tunes. She can give a number a jazz or a sentimental treatment and shift a composer's emphasis to a viewpoint of her own without dishonor to the drafter. Miss Harvey has been out of the cafe-society spots for a while, but this engagement seems to be a calling card back into bigtime.

Addiss & Crofut continue to do folksinging and ballads, and get good results in the process. Still getting the necessary experience, they continue as worthy show openers.

In the lounge, the Bobby Short Trio, catches a trade all its own for the further enrichment of the Gordon treasury. Jose.

Nat (King) Cole, Bracia & Tybee, Dick Stabile orch (20); $3 cover, $3.50 weekends.

That Master of The Soft Sell is here on his annual encampment, and the efficacy of Nat (King) Cole's draw on his home loam was proved opening night Tuesday (30) when nearly 800 were chaired—largest bow-in bunch in the Grove in many moons. They anticipated what they came for, and they weren't disappointed. He covers the field—ballads, uptempos, soul—and hits his highwater marks on a limpid "Way You Look Tonight", "Day In, Day Out", "Dance, Ballerina", "Paper Moon," "Mona Lisa", "Where Did Everyone Go?". For his inning on the keyboard, he embroiders the melody of "Laura" with some downright exquisite needling.

Many a young singer could take a lesson in poise, complete lack of affectation and the crisp enunciation of Cole. Like the Old Pro he is, his style is his own, his rhythm sense innate. His staging and reading of that Cole Porter venerable, "Miss Otis Regrets," is so provocative the evergreen is all new again.

King Cole called for more than his Fiddlers 3 for this booking. Dick Stabile's house orch has been amplified to 20 from recent norm of 13, and six are strings. Against so lush a background, particularly ballads, artfully arranged, he seemed to assume new dimensions. For a bit of midway novelty, Cole tootles a clavietta; and his sparse, relaxed patter complements his gentle mien. It is as fast a 65-minute turn as glimpsed hereabouts in a long time.

Preceding, dance team of Bracia & Tybee does some neat, [illegible] and before strutting with sufficient energy, marked by some agile lifts. A standard act in its field, pair could devise a more exciting climax.

Stabile, between shows, has a ball batoning that outsize orch and keeps the dance floor thronged. Next: Johnny Mathis, May 21. Wes.

Basin St. East, N. Y.

Al Hirt (7), Brook Benton; $3.50 cover.

Al Hirt and his horn of plenty corn is back at Basin Street East, and as usual the rotund, bearded trumpet blaster is getting the ultimate in showmanship out of his Dixie quint, plus a couple of chicks for chorus effect.

Cued by his own jerky gyrations on trumpet, Hirt and the sidemen blow up a storm with a book primarily made up of the foolproof Dixie standards, pausing in the exciting torrent of two-beat occasionally for a tempo change-up via clarinet or piano solo (latter was a Thelonious Monk composition melodically rendered and something of a testament to the taste of Hirt, which filters through to his picks in the pop-jazz catalog).

The blimp-built leader also displays a hip comedic sense in his breathless segue bits, nicely keyed to the just-short-of-panic pace of the turn as a whole.

Sepia singer Brook Benton has come a long way from the pop charts and those shy appearances on the Apollo stage to this BSE proscen. Seemingly a bit high on the prospects of this top-drawer nitery turn, Benton belted and clowned, the latter sometimes loosely, for an hour during his opening show. It was an over-extension, but nothing that can't be trimmed during ensuing turns.

This is a smooth and polished singer who can make it on the pipes alone. His range of song stylings from "Boll Weevil" to show standards is what lifted Benton up and well beyond the r&r circuit. For the club act, he has a couple of sophisticated, swinging special numbers, and his "Boll Weevil" routine, with impressions of several other sepia vocal artists, is just as solid now as it was on the Negro vaude circuit and new to this audience. Bill.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

Although only two new acts have been added to the E. M. Loew and Ed Risman production, "The Touch of Venus," current show here plays almost like a fresh revue. Comic Corbett Monica and balladist Lovelace Watkins are new faces that fit nicely into this costly production. Lineup is attracting plenty of out-of-town trade judging by current biz.

Monica, who was at the LQ several years ago, is a big addition to this layout. Known most recently as "Larry" of Joey Bishop's television show, he is a likeable, standup comedian who ingratiates himself with this audience. Even with the more familiar bits, he clicks nicely via his keen delivery.

There is a casual reference to Hollywood and Las Vegas as Monica feels out his auditors. His "What Kind of Fool Am I" becomes a laughable "What Kind of Egg Am I" song. The only other tune he sings is "Bluebird of Happiness" to close his act. Monica also tosses in the "Nine Kids and No Bed" bit along with a wide range of oneliners. He has a potential for almost any nightclub or hotel room.

Watkins, a tall Negro singer, has played N.Y. niteries before. Possessing a strong voice, he also is excellent with the softer, slower ballads. He uses "Lullabye of Broadway" as his intro number in an effort to get his auditors swinging along with him. A slower tune, "If Ever I Should Leave You," points up his ability to articulate.

Watkins, who strums a guitar for a portion of his vocalizing, has a strong climax with "I Believe." He urges the audience to sing-a-long with one number and to clap hands with another. Both seemed like extraneous bits.

The Woman acro troupe still opens the show here with its rousing routines. Richiardi Jr., magico, continues to baffle with his trunk and other feats of legerdemain, with four assistants helping. But the production numbers here still are tops in town especially the vivid Oriental scene. Jo Lombardi, per usual, cuts a sharp show. Wear.

Sparks, Nugget

Sparks, Nev., April 25.

Dennis Day, Chordettes (4), George Arnold Singers & Dancers (17), Foster Edwards Orch (10); produced and staged by Arnold; choreography, Rene DeHaven; no cover, no minimum on second show.

Dennis Day, back for the second outing in the Nugget's Circus Room since it opened last June, is again proving his multi-talent abilities as singer, comic, dialectician, thespian, and mime. He's proficient in all areas. For this segment there's a bit more of the nostalgic, attention to family and domestic matters (re his wife and children — with No. 9 expected while he's at the Nugget stand) than in the last time around.

Opening with "Comes Once in a Lifetime," he follows with a choice diversity of titles including "Sound of Music," an impressive interpretation of "Granada," a tender and sentimental brace of "First Born" and "Softly As I Leave You There" (accented to leaving wife and family for jobs on the road), and an Irish medley ("McNamara's Band," "Galway Bay," "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling") near tag end of turn. Exit is "If I Can Help Somebody."

Singer shows much savvy as dialectician and comic with his carbons of vidshows emanating from London, Japan, and Tel Aviv. Routine includes clever use of props, fresh material and smart pace. And, naturally, there's the reference to his long association with Jack Benny, but it's wisely held to a minimum.

The Chordettes, new to this room, score with a 25-minute songfest of the new, the old, the novelties. Girls know their way around in all tempi, and handle the harmonics in authoritative fashion. Opening with "Alabama Jubilee," they keep act in high gear for full turn. Subtle harmonics show for strong endorsement on "Getting to Know You," and the security in tonal gradations is highly evident on such as "Let the Rest of the World Go By," done sans orch accomp.

Civil War Centennial to Bust Out With 'Drummer Boy' at Columbus, Pa.

By JOSEPH T. KINGSTON

Columbia, Pa., May 7.

Tourists as well as residents in this Lancaster County community are due for noisy entertainment come the last week of June, as the famous old "Drummer Boy of Shiloh" is revived for a full week's nightly run as a combo outdoor-indoor production. The show, first done in 1938, will be a highlight of Columbia's week-long observance of the centennial of the burning of the mile-long Susquehanna River bridge on June 28, 1863, to prevent the big wooden structure from falling into the hands of Gen. Robert E. Lee's invading Confederate Army.

Directing "Drummer Boy," last played here in 1938, on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, will be Paul Rodenhauser, program director of WGAL-TV, Lancaster, who himself played the title role in the 1938 revival. For years, from the original staging in 1923 until well into the 1930's, "Drummer Boy" was an annual event in the now-vanished Columbia Opera House. When a road company didn't come through with it, which was seldom, the Columbians did it up in amateur production—usually for the benefit of the local G.A.R. post.

The 1963 version, however, promises to make these earlier stagings seem sedate and lacklustre. Rodenhauser will precede each conventional stage performance in the new Columbia High school auditorium with a noisy, smoky "sham battle" outside the hall. Troops to be employed are members of the Lancaster Pennibles, an authentically uniformed and armed Civil War Centennial military unit (45 men), already featured in the re-enactments of the battles of First Bull Run (July, 1861) and Antietam (September, 1862).

The Pennibles fire original Civil War rifled muskets, .58 caliber muzzle-loaders, that produce satisfying flashes of flame and clouds of smoke. They go into action with their own fifers and drummers, also using restored original instruments of 1861-65.

"Drummer Boy" will play nightly, June 24 through 29, immediately following the sham battle starting at 7 p.m. The show is part of a series of Civil War Centennial events in this area, to culminate with the four-day observance of the 100th anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, opening July 1.

The Lancaster Pennibles will participate in that, as well as in Gettysburg Campaign "battle action" re-enactments planned for Wrightsville, Pa., at the other end of the Columbia River bridge (June 29), and Hanover, Pa. (June 30), where the famed "Jeb" Stuart's Confederate cavalry clashed for three hours with Kilpatrick's Union horse soldiers.

Former President Eisenhower heads the project as honorary chairman for the Pennsylvania Gettysburg Centennial Committee, and President Kennedy is expected to participate in some of the doings.

LOATH TO SPECIFY ROLES FOR SINGERS

San Francisco, May 7.

With its usual reticence to match talent and repertory, the San Francisco Opera, which previously gave its complete fall repertory several weeks ago, has now named its roster of stars, and the guessing game as if to who-sings-what is under way.

At the top of the fall roster is soprano Joan Sutherland. Even the amateurs can match her with Bellini's "La Sonnambula," which she has just performed at the Met—and recorded. Her husband, Richard Bonynge, part of the package, is expected to conduct "Sonnambula."

Leontyne Price and Regina Resnik (now a mezzo) are returning after absences, as are tenors Cesare Valletti and Jon Vickers.

Again on the roster are Mary Costa, Dorothy Kirsten, Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Renato Cioni, Sandor Konya, Raymond Manton, Geraint Evans, Colin Harvey and Giorgio Tozzi.

Caroline Swann Plumes To London for Confabs

Caroline Swann, producer of "The Pinter Plays" at the Cherry Lane Theatre, N. Y., planed to London last week to complete negotiations for the presentation off-Broadway of T. S. Eliot's "The Elder Statesman." Paul Shyre, who directed a production of the play recently at the Fred Miller Theatre, Milwaukee, is to stage the presentation.

Miss Swann's overseas agenda also included a visit to Paris to meet with Rene Clot, author of "The Revelation," which she has under option.

Peggy Cass in 'Wildcat'

Albany, May 7.

Following the Ethel Merman Show, which opens the season June 25 at the Colonie Tent in Latham, producer Eddie Rich will present Peggy Cass in "Wildcat," July 2-7, and Genevieve in "Irma La Douce," July 9-14.

Negotiations for other productions are under way.

'Pajama Tops' Due in N.Y. For Twofer Engagement; Mostly Panned on Road

The New York area will be flooded with 10,000,000 two-for-one exchange coupons for "Pajama Tops," which Zev Bufman and Stanley Seiden are moving from the road to Broadway for a May 30 or May 31 opening at the Winter Garden Theatre. The figure on the number of twofers being put into circulation on the show was disclosed by Bufman, who claims the cost of printing and distributing the discount ducats will be $35,000. In addition to that figure, he says about $15,000 more will be spent on advertising.

"Tops," adapted by Mawby Green and Ed Feilbert from the farce, "Mousmee," by Jean de Letraz, was profitably toured during the 1954-55 season by M. Clay Blaney and Rex Carlton, with the late Diana Barrymore starred. The play was subsequently acquired by Bufman and Seiden, who presented it on the Coast for a number of years prior to sending it on tour this season as twofer offering with June Wilkinson heading the cast.

Despite generally unfavorable critical reaction on the road, business has been good. This is largely attributed to Miss Wilkinson, whose amply-proportioned frame is regarded as the production's key lure. The booking of a Broadway house for a presentation of this nature where the emphasis is on twofers and sex is an unusual contemporary occurrence.

"Tops," currently in the second frame of a three-week booking at the Ford's Theatre, Baltimore, is scheduled to begin previews May 20 at the Winter Garden. An engagement at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, previously scheduled to begin on that date, has been cancelled. According to Bufman, the potential weekly capacity at the Winter Garden on a complete twofer sellout will be around $36,000. The exchange coupons will apply to all performances on a Tuesday-Sunday basis. There'll be no matinees, but on Friday and Saturday evenings there'll be performances at 7:15 p.m. and 9:45 p.m.

The regular scale on tickets will range from $3.00 to $7.50, which at the twofer rate will bring the cost per individual to a low of $1.50 and a high of $3.00. Bufman claims the presentation will have to gross around $23,000 weekly to break even the first few weeks because of the amortization of advance expenditures. After that, he says, it'll need $20,000 weekly to get by.

Bufman is hopeful that the twofer setup in New York will follow the pattern in out-of-town cities where the average return on the exchange coupon campaign has been around 12%. A return such as that on a spread of 10,000,000 twofers could fill the 1,404-seat Winter Garden for about 10 weeks.

National Rep Will Tour 3 Revivals Next Season

The National Repertory Theatre, under the production auspices of Michael Dewell and Frances Ann Dougherty, plans touring a repertory of three plays next season. The program will consist of a new adaptation by Eva La Gallienne of Chekhov's "The Seagull," Christopher Fry's "Ring Round the Moon" adaptation of Jean Anouilh's "L'Invitation au Chateau" and Arthur Miller's revised version of his "The Crucible."

It's the intention of NRT, sponsored by the American National Theatre & Academy and assisted financially by various foundations, to launch the tour in the fall and move the repertory program from the road to Broadway in May of 1964.

Schedule New 'Andorra' Adaptation For Repertory in London in Fall

An unusual deal involving three separate managements has been worked out for the London presentation of "Andorra." The Max Frisch drama is to be presented in the West End next fall by the Royal Shakespeare Theatre Co., as part of its repertory program at the Aldwych Theatre. However, the contract permits subsequent transfer of the drama to another house for a regular commercial run under the production auspices of H. M. Tennent Ltd. and Oscar Lewenstein.

Peter Wilt, Frisch's representative, on "Andorra," worked out the arrangements for the London production of the play while in Europe recently. According to the New York agent, Laurence Olivier also sought the English rights as a vehicle for the opening season of Britain's new National Theatre. He also planned to appear in it for a limited time. Wilt met with Frisch in Rome, where the Swiss playwright maintains a home, to consider the various British offers.

"Andorra" is to open at the Aldwych sometime in September and play 30 performances in repertory over an eight-week period. The Royal Shakespeare Theatre Co. will retain an interest in the production if it's moved by Tennent and Lewenstein to another West End house.

Lindsay Anderson, who directed Frisch's "The Fire Raisers" at the Royal Court Theatre, London, in 1962, will stage "Andorra," in which Tom Courtenay will portray the role played on Broadway by Horst Buchholz. The play is being cast so that Courtenay and others in key roles will be able to transfer to another house, if such a move is made, without disturbing the repertory policy at the Aldwych.

All rights for English-language productions of the play, other than the one planned for London, are now being withheld. The George Tabori version, which had a nine-performance run on Broadway, will not be used for the West End production. An almost-literal translation of the play by Michael Bullock, published in London about a year ago by Methuen, will be the basis for an adaptation by a writer yet to be chosen.

Wilt, who returned to New York last week after spending about a fortnight in Europe, also arranged for Charles Boyer's appearance in London next fall in the Terence Rattigan play, "Man and Boy." In addition, he made preparations for Eli Wallach and Anne Jackson (Mrs. Wallach) to make a limited appearance in London about a year from now in "The Typists" and "The Tiger," the double-bill in which they're now appearing at the Orpheum Theatre, N.Y. Claire Nichtern, producer of the off-Broadway presentation, is to be partnered with Tennent in the West End production.

Offering Acting Course For Local Business Men

Milwaukee, May 7.

A special class in acting for businessmen and other adults who want to improve their public speaking will be offered this summer by Ray Boyle, producer at the Swan, local legitimate house.

The playhouse will be dark this summer, but Boyle will start his special course June 17.

No Magic B.O. In Sunday Shows —Harold Bowden

Sydney, May 7.

Harold Bowden, executive director of J. C. Williamson Ltd., key legit operators here, just returned from an overseas show-buying trip, said he could not agree with Tibor Rudas', indie producer, who stated that Australian legit would fold within 18 months unless the government allowed theatres to open on Sundays to offset the low grosses typical of Monday nights.

Bowden thinks that Sabbath playdates would not hype legit biz here to any great extent. Successful shows, per "My Fair Lady," experienced no difficulty in houseselling on Monday nights.

Bowden went on to say: "There have always been people ready to call in the undertaker for the legitimate theatre." Bowden pointed out that his organization had a heavy production program lined up to cover the next two years, including "Sail Away," "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "Camelot," "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "Mary, Mary," "Never Too Late," and the Ballet de Folklorico Mexico. Jack Benny has been booked for an Aussie tour next year and Victor Borge is currently making a second roundabout.

Boss Need For New Writers

Bowden informed this reporter that during his U.S. business he was amazed at the number of shows playing up four letter words and 'garbage can' themes. "In my opinion," said Bowden, "there never was and never will be a more successful formula than boy meets girl; boy and girl quarrel and part; boy wins back girl."

MERMAN CANCELS PITT; OTHER DATES UNSURE

Pittsburgh, May 7.

Ethel Merman has cancelled her scheduled week at the Penn Theatre here because of her inability to put a show together in time. The booking was for eight performances starting May 21.

The singer-actress had a nice advance along with Theatre Guild subscription, but her personal manager, Milt Pickman, advised Penn manager Bill Meclair that she would never be able to assemble the supporting acts for the proposed variety presentation.

Much of the delay was caused by the extra work she had to do on her latest film, "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World."

Toby Robins Will Star In 'Four Faces' on B'way

Ottawa, May 7.

William Freedman, who took his Toronto production of "Salad Days" three years ago for an off-Broadway stand, will try Broadway this time, according to Murray Davis, managing director of the Crest Theatre, Toronto. "Four Faces of Two People," by Albert Maglia, will play a tryout Sept. 6-Oct. 12 at the Crest, then go to New York.

The dual-bill will star Toby Robins, Freedman's wife, a Canadian television personality who has also appeared at the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespeare Festival.

Piccadilly's Facelift Purely Coincidental; Not Just for 'Enrico'

London.

Editor, VARIETY:

In Legit section of VARIETY, April 17, under the heading "London Producer Prefers Ticket System Like B'way's," a statement is made to the effect that the producer of "Enrico" is knocking out the side walls of the Piccadilly Theatre, to accommodate the new stage machinery he is fitting for the musical.

Whilst it is true that we, Piccadilly Theatre Ltd., the owners, are spending a great deal of money on the theatre and the stage is being considerably enlarged in order to accommodate the largest musicals, these alterations have nothing specifically to do with the production of "Enrico." They are, in fact, being carried out and paid for entirely by us and the work has been going on now for nearly a year. It is surely coincidental that the improvements are due to be completed at about the time that "Enrico" is scheduled to be opened.

Calls English Theatres Unsanitary; Equity Prez Cites West End Houses

London, May 7.

Almost the whole of Felix Aylmer's speech at last Sunday's (5) annual general meeting of British Actors Equity was devoted to an attack on the unsanitary conditions in most theatres, including even new ones in the West End of London.

The organization president referred to the theatre's exclusion from the protection of new legislation as "the greatest disappointment we have suffered this year." He declared that minimum conditions of health and hygiene in places of employment will henceforth be guaranteed to nearly every class of worker in the land, except the actor.

Aylmer said it was urged successfully by those who owned the bricks and mortar that to bring their conditions up to the level considered essential for everyone else would impose so great a strain on the economy that the industry would be ruined. Provincial theatres have been tumbling down like railway stations, he added, but even in the West End, where the support of money and fashion might be expected to insure presentable conditions, many houses would be condemned as factories or office buildings.

He mentioned one "fashionable theatre" where laryngitis is endemic, and a throat specialist has become almost a permanent feature of the staff. There is another which provides actors with little chance of escape in the event of fire, he asserted.

There had been hope, he said, that with the building of new theatres, modern plumbing might be taken for granted, offering something better than a basin and bucket to remove greasepaint. But he charged that the manager concerned with one of the latest West End theatres recently broadcast his views on the subject, and when asked specifically by the interviewer whether baths were installed explained that the girls come to the theatre to dance, not to bathe. The space occupied by a bath, Aylmer observed, could be made to seat two paying spectators, and the architect received his instructions accordingly.

In the election of the new council, Aylmer topped the poll with 823 votes. Richard Attenborough, with 367, was runner-up.

13 Committee Nominees Set for Equity Council; 2 Petition Candidates

Thirteen of the 15 candidates selected by the nominating committee of Actors Equity and two of the four candidates nominated by position won council posts in the union's recent election. Among the 15 winners were nine incumbents. Of a total of 1,904 ballots received by the union and tabulated by the accountant, 1,910 were valid.

In the category of councillors performing principal work for five year terms 10 vacancies were filled. Those elected include six incumbents on the nominating committee's slate, Walter Abel, Mike Kellin, Nancy R. Pollock, Nancy Devlin, Jeff Warren and Lucia Victor, and one incumbent nominated by petition, Robin Craven. The other three winners were Hilda M. Simms, Lee Richardson and Eugene Francis, all nominating committee candidates.

Elected to fill the three vacancies as councillors performing chorus work for five-year terms were incumbents Crandall Diehy and Sonya Lund, the former a nominating committee candidate and the latter nominated by petition, as well as Josephine Lang, who was also on the nominating committee's card. Nominated by the nominating committee and elected without opposition for chorus terms of two years and one year, respectively, were Richard G. Hermany and Bob McClure.

Losing candidates for five-year principal terms were Knigh Dhiegh, a nominating committee candidate, and Felix Munson, nominated by petition. Losing candidates for five-year chorus terms were Elma Laun, an incumbent selected by the nominating committee, and Kenneth W. Urmston, nominated by petition.

Philadelphia, May 7.

The bus-and-truck edition of "Mary, Mary," costarring Patricia Smith and Jeffrey Lynn, has been booked for a May 20-Aug. 10 engagement at the Forrest Theatre here. The presentation is currently in the final fortnight of a tour of mostly split-week stands booked by National Performing Arts.

"Mary," costarring Julie Meade, Scott McKay and Tom Helmore, will vacate the Blackstone to make way from the Tom Ewell-starrer, "Take Her, She's Mine," slated to open at the house June 17 after a three-week stand at the National Theatre, Washington. "Take Her," currently at the Biltmore Theatre, Los Angeles, exits there May 18 for a May 21-25 booking at the Auditorium, Denver. It then goes to Washington for a May 27 opening at the National.

Jack McQuiggan Manager Of Fred Miller, Mil'w'kee

Milwaukee, May 7.

Jack McQuiggan is the new manager of the Fred Miller theatre, with both artistic and managerial authority. He has succeeded Paul Shyre, who resigned some weeks ago.

The controversy-ridden theatre in the round now expects McQuiggan's appointment to be accepted by the Ford Foundation, which granted the Miller theatre $100,000. McQuiggan says he intends to "perpetuate and enrich the Miller's current quality theatre policy." He plans to hire a resident company next fall, bring in as few actors as possible, and to book plays and hire guest directors.

Olivier as Moor, O'Toole as Dane Set for Old Vic

London, May 7.

Laurence Olivier's appearance as Othello stacks up as the outstanding event of the planned initial season of the National Theatre's debut at the Old Vic later this year. It's the only major Shakespearean tragedy in which Olivier has not played the leading role. However, he portrayed Iago at the Old Vic in 1938.

Another notable event in the National Theatre's production schedule will be Peter O'Toole's appearance as Hamlet, under Olivier's direction. It will be the opening bill.

Nine plays are shedded, but the only other one yet named is "The Recruiting Officer," by William Farquahr. Olivier, as director, will be aided by two associate directors, John Dexter and William Gaskill.

A permanent company of the National Theatre is to be formed and in the spring of 1964 two productions will be on tour, with others pending. Classical repertory plays will mingle with new ones, outstanding productions will be held over from season to season and, eventually, the National Theatre aims at a different play each night.

Board's Veto of 'Virginia Woolf' For Pulitzer Award Stirs Uproar; Brown, Gassner Resign in Protest

A Pulitzer Prize controversy has erupted over Edward Albee's first Broadway play, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" The lengthy three-acter, the winner during the last fortnight of both a Tony (legit's counterpart of a film Oscar and television Emmy) as well as the N.Y. Drama Critics Circle citation as the best play of the season, would have made a clean sweep of the three major annual legit awards by copping the Pulitzer for drama.

The play was this year's selection by the Columbia Univ two-man Pulitzer Prize drama jury, but the recommendation was rejected without comment by the advisory board on the Pulitzer Prizes. This prompted jurors, critic-author John Mason Brown and theatre historian-critic John Gassner, to resign. Their two-year terms expire this year.

The announcement of the Pulitzer awards was made last Monday (6) and for the sixth time since the prizes were first given in 1917 there was no award in drama. The last time the award was bypassed was in 1951. The rejection by the advisory board of the Brown-Gassner recommendation marked the second turn-down for the pair, who've been jurors for several years.

In 1960, they had recommended Lillian Hellman's drama, "Toys in the Attic," but the prize that year went to the musical, "Fiorello." The awards procedure calls for the jurors in each Pulitzer Prize category to submit their selections to the advisory group, with final approval left to the Columbia trustees. Last year, the advisory board, itself, was turned down by the trustees on its recommendation for a biography award to W. A. Swanberg for "Citizen Hearst." This year, a spokesman for Columbia said, "the trustees approved everything that the advisory board had recommended."

According to Gassner, after being overruled in 1960, he and Brown stipulated that if the trustees overruled them on future occasions and gave the award to another play, the trustees would have to announce their selection. "This year's decision," he said, "seems to be an indirect way of getting around our vote." In 1924, the drama jury's choice of George

Stars Off-B'way, A Growing Trend

Shelley Winters, Celeste Holm and Jack Warden are joining an expanding list of name performers who are taking off-Broadway assignments. Miss Winters and Warden are to costar in "Cages," the overall title for a program of two one-act plays by Lewis John Carlino, and Miss Holm is to star in a revival of Turgenev's "A Month in the Country."

The Carlino one-acters, "Snow-angel" and "Epiphany," are being produced by Judy Rutherford Marechal for a June 10 opening at the York Playhouse. Howard Da Silva, currently appearing on Broadway in "Dear Me, the Sky Is Falling," will direct the presentation which goes into rehearsal next Friday (10).

Rehearsals of "Country," which David Ross is producing and directing for a May 28 opening at the Maidman Playhouse, began last week. The play has been adapted by Ross' wife, Carmel, from the Constance Garnett translation. Ross is unable to present the revival at his own off-Broadway house, Theatre Four, which is currently tenanted by the click revival of "The Boys from Syracuse."

Belgian Nat'l Theatre In 8,000th Performance

Brussels, May 7.

The Belgian National Theatre, under the direction of Maurice Huisman, has registered its 8,000th performance with the current production of Pirandello's "The Giants of the Mountain." The outfit was formed in 1945.

This play was the author's last and is an unfinished script, missing an act. The incomplete portion is being mimed by the players, with spoken commentary based on a synopsis told by Pirandello to his son. The production is being financed by Caltex, local business firm.

Apart from presenting each play at the Brussels resident theatre for monthly runs, the company regularly tours the provinces, performing at 100 theatres. There is also an annual summer festival, to be held this year at Spa.

The Boys from Syracuse

Cast: Ellen Hanley, Danny Carroll, Cathryn Damon, Stuart Damon, Clifford David, Julienne Marie, Karen Morrow, Rudy Tronto, Mary Gobes, Fred Stuthbrough, Matt Tobin, Jim Pompeii, Richard Calicchio, Jeanne Derbs, Richard Neves, Dom Salvatore, Betsy Stephens, Svetlana McLee, Zebra Nevins, Violetta Landek, Charlene Carter

The only problem in the revival of "Boys From Syracuse" is which of the dozen wonderful Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart to whistle leaving the theatre From the opening "I Had Twins" to the closing "Oh Dionysus," the score of this joyful musical is a parade of lilting, memorable tunes and wry, sophisticated lyrics.

Since George Abbott's book is still zanily amusing, and since the cast of this revival is excellent, "Boys from Syracuse" is a total delight The show hasn't been seen in New York since 1938, so it should rack up a run of many months at Theatre Four.

Standouts in the admirable cast are three talented ladies, Ellen Hanley, Julienne Marie and Karen Morrow Miss Hanley, a real beauty, caresses "Falling in Love with Love" and "The Shortest Day of the Year," and the charming Miss Marie does "This Can't Be Love" effectively. As for Miss Morrow, she's a howl, rendering "What Can You Do With A Man" and "He and She" with the twin Dromios hilariously When the three girls get together in "Sing for Your Supper," they stop the show cold

Danny Carroll and Rudy Tronto, as the twin slaves, probably won't make those who saw the original production forget Jimmy Savo and Teddy Hart But they're both highly amusing, and their "Big Brother" number is excellent.

Stuart Damon and Clifford David, as the long-separated brothers, perform nicely in both singing and acting, and Cathryn Damon leads the quartet of courtesans with verve and enthusiasm She earns heavy applause with her "Oh Diogenes." Matt Tobin is broad but funny as the sorcerer and also as the father of the twins and Gary Oakes, Jeane Derks and Zebra Nevins display talent in smaller roles.

The staging by Christopher Hewett and choreography and musical staging by Bob Herget are generally exuberant and worthy of the material Occasionally, however, the staging is obvious, and as in the case of "I Had Twins," unimaginative Such low points, however, are rare.

The production is elaborate and obviously expensive, and is a treat for the eye Guy Kent's costumes are colorful, and the sets by Helen Pond are exceptionally attractive Incidentally, Capitol Records will issue a cast album of the show. It should find a wide audience, as should this top-notch revival of an outstanding musical. Kenn.

The Dragon

Phoenix Theatre presentation of a drama in two acts, by Eugene Schwartz, translated by Elizabeth Reynolds Hapgood. Staged by Joseph Anthony; sets, Harris Houghton; costumes, Patricia Zipprodt; lighting, John Fleher; production manager, William Ross. Opened April 9, '68, at the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y., $4.95 top.

Cast: C K Alexander, Leslie Barrett, John Bottomley Jr., Martin Brennan, Jan Peerce, Louise Sorel, Ralph Bunce, Roland Wood, Walter Williams, Virginia Lloyd, Joanna Roos, Carrie Nye, Tom Smith, Bob MacDonald, Ed Burdo, Jay Travers, Jacky Ellis, Mark Burnham, Rosalie Lee, Nina Romero, Dennis Scott.

Imaginatively staged by Joseph Anthony and beautifully mounted by the Phoenix Theatre, "The Dragon" is provocative, unusual entertainment Russian playwright Eugene Schwarz wrote the drama in 1943, but it was banned by the Stalinist regime It's easy to see why, for although the work takes the form of a simple fairy tale, it is clearly an attack on dictatorships and a rebuke to those who allow themselves to remain enslaved.

The setting is a Eurasian town, ruled for 400 years by a fire-breathing dragon who takes human form to cajole the citizens but enforce his will. The hero, a stranger named Lancelot, slays the dragon despite the reluctance of the townspeople to disturb the status quo. But a second tyrant seizes control, and the hero must free the town again, this time permanently.

Throughout the play are barbs against such totalitarian devices as brain-washing, censorship, and the branding of the opposition as "warmongers," as well as comments on the hypocrisy and cowardice of the oppressed people. But there is warmth in the work, too, notably in the relationship between the hero and his sweetheart. There is also abundant humor, both in the staging and in Elizabeth Hapgood's translation.

Visually, the production is splendid, with lovely costumes by Patricia Zipprodt and fine sets by Norris Houghton. The special effects, including a three-headed dragon, and lots of flying objects, smoke, and evocative sounds, are delightful.

Occasionally, Anthony allows the pacing to lag, and the play as a whole could stand pruning. But the staging is mostly skillful and effective and the cast is fine. Jan Peerce and Louise Sorel are excellent as the hero and heroine, and Dolph Sweet as the dragon. C. K. Alexander as a petty tyrant, Leslie Barrett as a talking cat, and Josip Elic as a donkey are all good. Bob MacDonald, Ed Burdo and young Dennis Scott are winning in smaller roles

"The Dragon" contains no new ideas, but it is an interesting treatment of valid ones. It's thought-provoking, and it's also enjoyable. Kenn.

The Emperor

Jeff Britton, in association with Ted Marshall & Minetie Hirsch, presentation of a drama by Hermann Greunberg, adapted by George White. Staged by Warren Enters; sets, Peter Wingate; costumes, Hal George; lighting, Lincoln John Smith. Opened April 16, '68, at the Maidman Playhouse, N.Y., $4.95 top weeknights, $5.95 weekends.

Cast: Tim O'Connor, M'el Dowd, Jerome Merlin, Claudette Nevins, Vincent Romeo, James Pritchett, Ned Wertimer, Dalton Dearborn, William Bramhall, Robert Trevor

Nero doesn't fiddle in "The Emperor," but maybe he should. This dramatization of the life of the notorious Roman ruler needs more action and less talk.

The descent of Nero from an impressionable youth to an insane despot is interesting, and the play is not without its compelling moments. But authors Hermann Gressieker and George White, who last collaborated on "Royal Gambit," have concentrated on analyzing the circumstances and conflicting ideas that made Nero what he was. They have substituted philosophy for drama, and their attempts to draw universal meaning from the situation are tiresome. There is an excess of verbiage, and little stimulation.

The staging, by Warren Enters, is good, however, and the performances are skillful. M'el Dowd makes Agrippina, Nero's mother, fascinatingly evil, and it is unfortunate that the character's early death prevents actress' appearance in the last act Tim O'Connor projects the stature and dignity of the teacher Seneca, and Claudette Nevins makes a wistful, appealing slave girl.

As Nero, Vincent Romeo conveys the emperor's erratic personality and basic weakness, but since the role is not sharply written, the character becomes a bore. Peter Wingate's sets and Hal George's costumes are effective, but "The Emperor" is only occasionally absorbing. Kenn.

The Saving Grace

Gene Dingovney & Jane Gilliland presentation of a comedy in three acts, by Edwin Harvey Blum. Staged by Richard Altman; sets and lighting, Richard Casler; costumes, Willa Kim. Opened April 16, '68, at the Writers' Stage Theatre, N.Y.; $4.95 top weeknights, $5.95 weekends.

Cast: John Cullum, Jerome Cowmeadow, Humphrey Davis, Patricia Falkenhain, Harvey Jason, Jonathan Moore, Dorothy Patten, Andrea Rau, Arne Wheaver, Judy White.

If Oscar Wilde, John Osborne and T. S Eliot had ever collaborated on a play, it might have turned out to be something like "The Saving Grace" This comedy-drama by Edwin Harvey Blum is schizophrenic and uneven, but it is loaded with sharp satire and pungent social comment, and in the hands of stager Richard Alt-

It was an inspiration for Edwin Lester to cast John Raitt and Jan Clayton in the roles they originated in "Carousel" on Broadway in 1945. They know the show backwards and forwards, are at home in it, appear to enjoy doing it, and do it well, getting an ovation.

There are some reservations about their performances, as well as the casting. Both are 18 years older than the young couple they portrayed in '45 (when Miss Clayton did Julie here in 1953, she was only eight years older, which didn't make such a difference).

The added years are reflected in their differing portrayals. Raitt is more mature and assured, while Miss Clayton substitutes serene maturity for girlish charm. Raitt is in excellent voice, notably in the "Soliloquy," but Miss Clayton's lovely soprano tends to strain.

Claramae Turner's velvety contralto is a little heavy for Cousin Ettie's "June Is Bustin' Out All Over", but shows to better advantage in "You'll Never Walk Alone". Pat Stanley is cute as the heroine's gamine friend who marries Mr. Snow and rears a flock of super-respectable children, but occasionally accentuates the girlishness. When she sings straight as in "When I Marry Mr. Snow" and "When the Children Are Asleep," she shows that the affection is a liability. As Mr. Snow, Frank Porretta uncorks a corker of a voice.

Gerald Price is in good form as the tragi-comic Jigger, who leads Billy Bigelow astray, and makes the most of the comic parts of this curious role. Don Reddoe, who was here 10 years ago as the Starkeeper, repeats the role touchingly. Linda Howe is youth itself as the dancing daughter of Billy and Julie.

This CLO revival of "Carousel" is lovingly assembled and so carefully rehearsed that no opening-night jitters were apparent. The costumes are beautiful and the sets and props are fine. Evie.

Looking For The Action

London, April 24.

Harold Fielding presentation of The Second City Co. production of two-act satirical revue. Production supervision, Bernard Robbins and Paul Hill; staged by Hills and Larry Arrick; music, William Hudgins (played on piano by Pat Smythe). Features Sandy Baron, Severn Darden, Richard Libertini, Erin Martin, Paul Sand, Eugene Troobnick. Opened April 23, '68, at the Prince Charles Theatre, London; $5.60 top.

A company of the Second City, of Chicago, played the Establishment Club, the West End satire spot, awhile ago. Another company has now arrived to play the Prince Charles Theatre.

Satire has had a vogue in Britain since "Beyond the Fringe," and with the added boost by the BBC tv program, "That Was the Week That Was." There have been legitimate fears that too many people were scrambling on to a tiny, fashionable handwagon. Now comes "Looking for the Action," witty, intelligent, on-the-ball, to give the new vogue a perceptive shot in the arm.

The cast of five men and one girl are good humored and talented, and make incisive points without spleen, mime as well that they use no props, except musical instruments, only a handful of costume embellishments and no scenery. The stage is "cluttered" merely by three chairs which, considering the cast is six-handed, cannot be tagged ostentatious.

The first half of the slim short show starts briskly with three 30-second blackouts, laconically dismissed as "our production numbers." Some of the other items are rather longer, but only one or two are unduly extended. They josh contemporary Italian films, sex (but in a seemly manner) and the American instinct for togetherness. The best of the first half items are an American Official Secrets official being interviewed by a newshawk and a first-class, funny and edgy sketch on how to sell a fall out shelter to the man in the street.

The second segment has another choice item in which Khrushchev, with an interpreter, holds an impromptu press conference, with questions shot from the audience. There's also a caustic, funny sketch in which two drunk American businessmen visit what they take to be a brothel, but amid fast, clever comedy lines, reveal their erotic subconsciousness. The show is staged has such pace that even the bits that misdire achieve the level of adult entertainment.

The six performers, Sandy Baron, Severn Darden, Richard Libertini, Erin Martin, Paul Sand and Eugene Troobnick, work smoothly as a team, and also capitalize on every personal opportunity. Troobnick, an amiable comic, has two standout chances as Khrushchev and as a defiant patient in a dentist's chair, and Severn Darden one as the secretive official blandly coping with a naive pressman. Miss Martin is a lively, leggy, personable young woman who doesn't make a wrong move.

Few visitors to Prince Charles Theatre will regard the excursion as anything but a stimulating, amusing experience. Rich.

All Square

London, April 26.

Lionel & Bunder presentation of revue in two parts (20 scenes), with book and lyrics by Alan Melville; music by Charles Ever. Staged by Charles Hickman; dance, Berkeley Sutcliffe; musical numbers, George Carden; lighting, Richard Northern. Features Beryl Reid, Maureen Wayne, Joyce Blair, Robin Hunter, John Warner, Robin Palmer, Anna Barnes, Jane Murdoch, Suzanne Delannoy, Ricky Newman, Julian Holloway, Karen Clare. Opened April 25, '68, at the Vaudeville Theatre, London; $6.30 top.

Alan Melville makes the point in the introductory sketch that there is something to be said in defense of squares, and that he is for the Queen, the Prime Minister, Noel Coward and the Establishment. These are rash words in these scornfully hip days, but insufficient material for a hit revue.

Although there are bright moments in "All Square," most of the sketches are overlong and there are too many dull moments. Even so, the enthusiastic first-night audience laughed and applauded even the most banal bits of humor.

To further his defence of the good old days, Melville ribs kitchen sink drama, and takes a swipe at the present-day satirical trend with a highly amusing sendup of the BBC television program "That Was the Week That Was," including a topical reference to Daily Mail drama critic, Bernard Levin, who was publicly clouted by an intruding visitor on the show the previous weekend.

There is not one of the 26 items that could not be improved by editing—some more than others. Not one of the sketches has a sharp payoff line of situation, and the joke is frequently made with almost sledgehammer tactics, as if the square audience is unable to be with it from the start.

That happens time and time again, with such numbers as "Dance Gastronomique," a labored takeoff of a well-known local personality, an item about a woman announcer on radio, who blotted her copybook by innocently using a word which had a double meaning, and a scene in which an ex-doctor becomes an ink addict, always getting ink (he has lost the dr handle to his name—get the point?).

On the other hand, the show has Beryl Reid, who has the facility of adding substance to the most slender situations. She is a talented comedienne, with a wide range, and switches easily from a posh Kensingtonian accent to an authentic Midlands dialect.

Maureen Wayne, also a polished performer with a gift for carefully restrained delivery adds punch to several items. Joyce Blair, a vivacious singer and dancer, provides charm for the proceedings and Robin Hunter excels in a brilliantly realistic impression of Field Marshall Montgomery.

John Warner makes a fair impression in "Asylum," an item about Nureyev, and the other members of the cast give useful support, but have few opportunities with individual contributions.

Charles Hickman's direction is handicapped by the overlong sketches, but Berkeley Sutcliffe has gone to town with lavish decor

Where subscription is mentioned, the gross is the net after the deductions of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

Rehearsal Club to Have 50th Anni Party May 15

The Rehearsal Club, in West 53d Street, Manhattan, is commemorating 50 years of existence. There will be a cocktail party May 15 at the clubhouse-residence where girls from legitimate theatre and other entertainment media live. The club is non-profit and non-sectarian.

Commonly taken for the model of a number of plays and films, Rehearsal Club is akin to the Charlotte Cushman Clubs of Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago. It currently houses girls from 25 states. Two are in the Copacabana line, two in the Gleason show and several with ballet troupes. The establishment lodges and feeds its girls, takes their telephone messages (vital to careerists), provides rehearsal facilities and so on. All for $22 per week.

Carol Burnett rates as the most recent Rehearsal Club alumna to make it big. The roster of former residents includes Jo Van Fleet, Phyllis Thaxter, Shirley Booth, Bibi Osterwald, Anna Russell, Martha Scott, Ruth Hussey and Annett MacQuarrie.

The resident girls make their own house rules. One is that beaux must depart the premises at midnight, and never be above the ground floor.

Another report will be made by a COMPO committee that has been looking into the feasibility of a campaign aimed at arousing the public to an awareness of the Bill of Rights and present threats to it. Also slated is word from a committee set at the organization's last meeting in November for the purpose of exploring means of increasing picture production. On the agenda too is a vote on the application of Independent Film Importers and Distributors of America (IFIDA) for admission to COMPO.

All In Good Time
(PHOENIX THEATRE, LONDON)

London, April 30.

With its transfer to the West End "All In Good Time" joins two other Mermaid originals, "Lock Up Your Daughters" and "The Bed-sitting Room," which have also travelled from the City to the heart of the theatre district. This latest arrival also stacks as a substantial hit.

Bill Naughton's comedy-drama of two north of England working class families, originally a 60-minute television show, is acutely observed, sensitively developed and in good taste. There are signs of padding, particularly in the slightly overlong second act, in which the author analyses the personal problems of the two families linked by marriage, and projects the main theme of a young couple who have failed to consummate their marriage after six weeks of not-so-wedded bliss.

A standout performance by Bernard Miles as the groom's father sets the standard for some of the best acting to be seen in town. Marjorie Rhodes as his wife, Donald Eccles and Maureen Pryor as the bride's parents, and John Pickles and Lois Daine as the young couple, are all first-rate, and there are well observed contributions by Peter Welch as the groom's boss and John McKelvey as the bride's uncle, a helpful physiotherapist. Josephine Wilson's firm direction and the David Myerscough Jones decor, operating on a revolving stage, are top grade.

Bob Weiner Also Works On 'Sammy' as B'way Show

Robert Weiner, who's been active as a producer on Broadway and at The Happy Medium, Chicago, is now working on the musical version of "What Makes Sammy Run?" which Joseph Cates intends producing on in New York next season. The legituner is one of the Broadway projects of the Joseph Cates Production Co., of which Weiner is vice-president.

The Cates firm also plans producing a film based on Robert Sheckley's "The Prize of Peril" and a television show for 1964 is also in the works. At present, Cates is executive producer of tv's "International Show Time." The book for the musical version of "Sammy" has been written by Budd Schulberg, author of the novel, and his brother Stuart Schulberg. Music and lyrics are by Ervin Drake.

Incidentally, Weiner who originally produced the revue, "Put It in Writing," at the Happy Medium, says he hasn't had anything to do with that presentation since last January.

He's involved in litigation with the spot's management. Weiner also has no connection with the off-Broadway edition of the show which opens next Monday (13) at the Theatre de Lys N.Y., under the production auspices of Lucille Lortel and Arthur Cantor.

Pressagent Thinks 'Mary' Has Most Road Troupes

Milwaukee.

Editor, VARIETY:

I wonder if some of your readers could give me a historical assist. Roger L. Stevens, producer of "Mary, Mary," has the original company on Broadway, three companies on the road and a fifth in London.

Looking back over the past decades, I can't recall a single dramatic hit that had so many replicas playing concurrently. "Life With Father" may have set a contemporary record by sending forth 11 touring troupes, but I don't think there were ever more than two afield at the same time.

Back in the mid- and late-1920's there must have been a fantastic number of bushwhacking editions of such smashes as "Abie's Irish Rose" and "Broadway"—perhaps a dozen or more operating simultaneously (some under canvas, I remember). But has any play since then had five companies running concertedly?

B'way Blah; Only 'Succeed,' 'Late' SRO; 'Loves Me' $42,424, 'Hot Spot' $54,266, 'Photo' $20,164, 'Simple Man' $13,275

It was murder on Broadway last week, with most shows registering severe drops. The b.o. decline, a continuation from the preceding stanza, is expected to ease this week with a slight pickup in receipts. Among the productions hit by sagging business last week were "Beyond the Fringe" and "Oliver," both failing to hold at capacity. The sole sellouts were "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" and "Never Too Late."

There were no closings or openings last week. However, two shows, "Calculated Risk" and "Mother Courage and Her Children," are to shutter this week.

Howard Taubman, of the N.Y. Times, has objected to a story in last week's issue, referring to his actions as presiding officer of the recent N.Y. Drama Critics Circle meeting at which "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf" was voted the best play of the New York season. He did not, he declares, refuse to consider a vote for the best foreign play, adding that such a proposal was not even made. Moreover, the reviewer insists, any statement he may have made dismissing the idea of a cocktail party at which an award ceremony might be televised, was after the meeting had been adjourned, and therefore was not made as presiding officer or even as Circle president.

As explained by Taubman and subsequently confirmed by others present, the "Virginia Woolf" vote was followed by a motion by Walter Kerr, of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, that a special award be given to "Beyond the Fringe," and it was seconded and passed. Then John Chapman, of the News, moved that award nominations be closed, and it was also seconded and passed.

There followed some informal conversation, heard by several members present, to the effect that it would have been helpful to give a best-foreign-play citation to "Mother Courage," for the purpose of giving the Bertolt Brecht drama a needed boxoffice boost. No such motion was made, however, and presumably would not have been entertained in any case, as the nominations had been officially closed. In any case, Taubman did not overrule such a motion.

The Times critic was quoted in the VARIETY story as remarking of the cocktail party suggestion, "To hell with it—they've had enough." He says he doesn't remember what his exact words were, but adds merely that he wouldn't be interested in such an affair. In any case, he insists, the remark was made after the meeting was adjourned.

No minutes of the session were kept, as George Freedley, curator of the theatre collection of the N.Y. Public Library and secretary of the Circle, has been ill and could not attend.

London-resident Canadian playwright Ted Allan, author of "Double Image" and other plays, has entered suit against the Theatre Royal, Stratford, East London, for alleged infringement of copyright, the Canadian Press reports syndicate reported last week. The plaintiff says he suggested to Joan Littlewood and other Theatre Workshop officials a satirical show built round songs and speeches of World War I, was commissioned to do it, and was given a $1,400 advance. He claims that he called the work "Oh, What a Lovely War." A show with that title, produced by Miss Littlewood and currently at Theatre Royal, is credited to Charles Chilton, British radio writer who authored a program of similar theme for BBC in '61.

Allan's lawyer, Denise See, asserts that the Theatre Workshop saw and rejected his client's script, as it was "perfectly entitled" to do, but that when Allan saw the current show "he felt that it infringed on his copyright." Incidentally, "Oh, It's a Lovely War" was the title of a song done by Red Newman in the Canadian World War I soldier revue, "Dumbells," which had runs in London and New York.

and gaily colored sets of the kind that were the vogue in revue some years back. Charles Zwar's music is adequate if not memorable, and George Carden has staged a few lively production numbers.

With the cast to help it along, and as there is no other comparable revue current in town, "All Square" has a chance of a profitable run, but this would be increased if the material is given a rapid workover. Myro.

Luv

London, April 25.

Oscar Lewenstein, in association with Leonard Field, presentation of comedy in two acts by Murray Schisgal. Staged by Ted Kotcheff; decor, Timothy O'Brien. Features George A. Cooper, Dick Emery, Penelia Fielding. Opened April 25, '63, at the New Arts Theatre, London; $2.10 top.

Harry .... George A. Cooper
Milt .... Dick Emery
Ellen .... Penelia Fielding

Murray Schisgal's three-character comedy, "Luv," which is having its first-ever presentation at the New Arts Theatre Club, relies largely for effect on the inventiveness of the director, and the facility of the cast to cope with extraneous business. They do well enough in the circumstances, but their efforts cannot always disguise some of the labored situations. The show appears to have a 50-50 chance for transfer to the West End for a commercial run, but would need substantial overhauling before it could reach Broadway.

"Luv," which comes to the Arts under the Oscar Lewenstein-Leonard Field banner, is an extension of the conventional triangle theme. There is considerable adroitness in the construction and a great deal of visual humor. The writing, though uneven, has some excellent comedy passages, and the director has not missed a chance in developing either the visual possibilities or the amusing dialog passages.

The yarn, located on a bridge in New York, involves a man who palms off his wife on an old friend in order to marry another woman, but then realizes he'd rather have her back. There is a great deal of comedy byplay, one of the most effective aspects of which is the rivalry between all three characters as to who had the most miserable childhood. There are abortive attempts at suicide and murder, all aimed with a touch of hilarity.

Under Ted Kotcheff's skillful, inventive direction, George A. Cooper has most of the visual opportunities, and capitalizes them admirably, while Dick Emery gives a sharp and forceful comedy interpretation as the scheming husband.

The acting threat, however, comes from Penelia Fielding as the successive wives of the two men. She gives a delightful and delicious portrayal, rich in humor and full of warmth and understanding. She has one exceptionally funny moment, when she produces a chart with a record of her sexual relations with her husband, and later a much smaller chart showing her non-existent relations with her second husband. She also gaily participates in a couple of inconsequential, but highly entertaining, song and dance numbers. Myro.

Naives Hirondelles

London, April 16.

Michael Burdman presentation of a three-act comedy by Roland Dubillard. Decor, Jacques Noel; music, Roland Dubillard, Marc Arlette Reinberg, Roland Dubillard, Bernard Fresson, Tania Balachova. Opened April 15, '63, at the Piccadilly Theatre, London; $2.50 top.

Germaine .... Arlette Reinberg
Mme. Severin .... Tania Balachova
Bertrand .... Bernard Fresson
Fernand .... Roland Dubillard

For the second successive year the Piccadilly is housing four Paris legit productions, each for a week. The idea is fine for aficionados, although availability naturally restricts the choice. "Naives Hirondelles" is a production by the Theatre de Poche, Montparnasse, of Roland Dubillard's comedy, transported intact. It followed a Comedie Francaise week, and its successor will be Ionesco's "Amedee" and a Feydeau farce for the next fortnight.

The piece has inconsequential charm, conveyed even to those whose French is limited to schoolday memories, and its theme of life's unpredictability is wittily translated in a set of charades, gaily fanciful and artfully enchanting.

The company, including the author, is splendid, with Arlette Reinberg scoring as the simple-hearted woman whose intrusion breaks up the other trio and sparks most of the action. Jacques Noel's setting is moody. Otta.

Agency Commission Suit Closes 'Here Today' Tour

Wilmington, May 7.

A suit for $800 in unpaid commissions, filed in Superior Court here last week ended the road tour of "Here Today," starring Tallulah Bankhead and Estelle Winwood, in Boston last Saturday (4). The George Oppenheimer comedy had been scheduled for an engagement at the Playhouse here this week.

Superior Court William J. Storey had ordered attachment of the advance sale receipts of the Wilmington engagement, at the request of Stewart B. Young, attorney for House of Bliss Celebrity Bureau, Hollywood. The agency charged that the management, Brock-Carsons Productions, also of Hollywood, owed $800 in unpaid commissions on two Judith Anderson appearances last March under its sponsorship.

The complaint alleged the $800 represented 20% on the Anderson shows given at colleges in North Carolina and Virginia.

man and a fine cast it is often uproariously funny.

Written in what sounds like blank verse, the play concerns the unexpected return to his parents' country manor in Gloucestershire of a young man who has spent the past 17 years in a mental institution. It coincides with the weekend visit of a formidable London couple whose son is earmarked for the hosts' socially backward daughter. The hero's reliance on the saving grace of poetry, and his refusal to accept the vanidness and shallow values of the British fox-hunting set, lead to hilarious complications.

Under the laughter, however, is a merciless attack on the narrowness and stupidity of the English "country-gentleman." Blum's writing is often bright and skillful. But sometimes it is murky and pretentiously poetic, and the various conflicting elements of content and style conflict, so the work, despite its virtues, is not entirely successful.

The production is fine, however. Richard Altman's staging is a deft blend of inventive details and comic business. From his cast he has elicited fine performances. Patricia Falkenhain, as the hero's distraught mother, is delightful, a bundle of quivering lips and wringing hands. The comic ingenues, Judy White and Harvey Jason, are wonderful as a repressed pair who finally summon courage to declare their love.

John Cullum, as the prodigal madman, alternates bravado and despair skillfully, and manages to build sympathy and respect for the character. Dorothy Patten, Jerome Collamore, Arne Weiner, Humphrey Davis and Jonathan Morris are good in other parts. Andree Rae, saddled with the tiresome role of a local spinster with a Cassandra complex, does what she can.

"Saving Grace" contains many allusions that are lost on American playgoers. It is a special concoction, but is intriguing, with laughs galore. Kenn.

Pulitzer Uproar

Kelly's "The Show-Off," was overruled by the advisory board which thumbed down in favor of Hatcher Hughes' "Hell-Bent for Heaven."

There appears to be some suspicion that "Virginia Woolf" was nixed because of the earthiness of its theme and dialog. An argument in that area is that the drama award in 1964 went to Tennessee Williams "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," also regarded as a rough play. The drama award is made for "the American play, preferably original in its source and dealing with American life, which shall represent in marked fashion the educational value and power of the stage." The Albee drama, incidentally, is currently in its 31st week at the Billy Rose Theatre, N.Y.

The Pulitzer Prize for music went to Samuel Barber for his Piano Concerto No. 1. Barber previously won the music prize in 1958 for the opera, "Vanessa," for which Gian-Carlo Menotti wrote the libretto.

Hartke 25th Anni Opens Catholic U. Fund Drive

Washington, May 7.

A testimonial dinner, marking the 25th anniversary of Father Gilbert V. Hartke as head of the Catholic Univ. drama school, was the occasion last week for the start of a campaign to raise $1,500,000 for the construction of a new theatre building on the campus.

The project is to include a 600-seat theatre, a 200-seat laboratory playhouse, quarters for the speech and drama department, two public lounges, six dressing rooms, a rehearsal hall, scenic and costume workshops and a 5,000-volume library. The building has been designed by Thomas H. Locraft Associates, Washington. Construction is to start this summer, with completion due in the fall of 1964.

Congratulatory messages to Father Hartke were received from President Kennedy, Walter and Jean Kerr, the drama critic of the N.Y. Herald Tribune and his playwright wife, and from Robert Ryan, the legit-film actor who was the priest's classmate at Loyola Univ.

Ed Quinn's Picasso

Ed Quinn, who covers the Riviera for VARIETY from his home in Nice, is reading proof on a de luxe book on Picasso which covers the author's association with the famed artist, who lives in nearby Vence, for some 13 years. It will be simultaneously published in at least six countries; McGraw-Hill has it in the U.S. and will probably retail at $15-$20.

It's a costly production job which Conzett & Huber, in Zurich, is printing via the sheet-fed gravure method. It has 236 pages of which 36 are in color. Picasso has done some special drawings for it also. Quinn, who is a newspaperman-photographer, has been a longtime friend of the artist.

World Merger Rumor

Book trade has been strongly hinting at a Los Angeles Times Mirror Co. acquisition of World Pub. Co. and while neither side will comment, this statement to stockholders was issued by the latter's board chairman, Ben D. Zevin, and prez Leonard A. Charpie: "Discussions (for this merger or sale) have been carried on, looking towards a possible merger, but such discussions are in a preliminary and tentative stage and no agreements have been reached. If and when current discussions result in agreement, shareholders will be promptly advised . . ."

Both book stocks have been pushing, World particularly going from $9 to $15 on the Midwest Exchange in the past few weeks.

World's first quarter earnings dipped from 18c. to 14c. per share on $3,100,000 sales versus $3,391,120 in '62 blamed "to a considerable extent to the New York newspaper strike which deprived the company of considerable advertising availabilities." Quarter's net earnings of $86,451 compared with $116,790 last year.

Ohio's Smut Drive

Mrs. Walter V. Magee, past president of the Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs, said she is planning a drive "to dump crime comics and put pornographic publishers and film distributors out of business." Mrs. Magee is third vice-president of the world women's organization, which has 11,000,000 members.

"We're not bluenoses out to censor what people may read or watch," she said, "but we are determined to be guardians of our communities, in keeping with the rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court regarding obscene and pornographic materials. The court has ruled that such material does not enjoy protection of the First Amendment. We have put 28 of 30 crime comic book publishers out of business in recent years. Now we're taking aim on the sex and violence books and films. They represent a billion-dollar industry and we intend to put a sizable dent in this smut mill."

Tougher Obscenity Bill

Approval by Gov. Rockefeller of the Murphy bill, amending the General Business Law to require the name and address of the publisher shall appear on every publication "devoted to the description or portrayal of bondage, sadism, masochism or other sexual perversion or to the exploitation of sex or nudity" came as a welcome note to the N. Y. State District Attorneys Assn. and to the Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive & Obscene Material (drafter of the measure).

The sponsor, Assemblyman Lawrence P. Murphy, Brooklyn Democrat, is a veteran member of the Joint Committee and serves as its secretary.

Pilat's Peg Bing

Westbrook Pegler has been sharply fluoroscoped by Oliver Pilat, former Washington correspondent and presently political editor for the N.Y. Post. Pilat's biography of the cantankerous kid from Minneapolis, slugged "Pegler: Angry Man of the Press" (Beacon, $5), is dedicated to a group of New York newspapermen who helped drive the Commies out of the American Newspaper Guild.

The Pegler bio takes the aging six-foot, Garner-browed columnist from his freckled midwestern youth through his brilliant sports writing days and probes his carbolic columning career on matters cosmic. The Pilat account of the early days of the ANG, the Broun-Pegler feud, the Drew Pearson fracas and the Pegler-Quentin Reynolds libel trial are highly dramatic sections in the broad and fascinating journalistic canvas that is Pegler. Pilat writes feelingly of Pegler's love for his first wife, Julia Harpman, the professional newswoman from the N.Y. Daily News. He also reveals the many cityroom goings-on of both Peg and his father, Arthur James. Nor does Pilat overlook the Willie Bioff-IATSE story and VARIETY's important role in exposing the labor leader's racketeerings.

The book closes with Pegler's clash with top Hearst execs and his present frenetic alliance as staff philosopher with Robert Welch's personal magazine, American Opinion. Pegler is now one of the voices for the John Birch Society.

"Pegler: Angry Man of the Press" turns out to be a penetrating study of a master of ultra-right wing journalism. Rens.

Plagiarism Award

Writer Helen Holdredge has won a $2,000 judgment plus $500 attorney fees against Knight Publishing Corp. and Sam Merwin in a Los Angeles Federal District Court ruling on her infringement of copyright suit. Miss Holdredge charged that Merwin had plagiarized material from her book, "Mammy Pleasant's Partner," for an article he wrote for Adam Magazine under the title, "Mammy Pleasant."

While any historical character is in public domain and not entitled to copyright protection, Judge James M. Carter in his ruling held, "The association, arrangement and combination of ideas and thoughts and their form of expression may constitute a particular literary composition to protection."

He held further that the defendants couldn't avail themselves of the defense of "fair use" that is generally applied to cases involving scientific, medical and historical materials because the use that was made of Miss Holdredge's book was neither reasonable nor customary.

"The test," stated Judge Carter, "is whether the one charged with the infringement has made an independent production, or made a substantial and unfair use of the complainant's work."

Jessamyn West's Warning

Author Jessamyn West ("The Friendly Persuasion," among many others) told a Honolulu audience it is a great mistake to "guard young people from books which have ugly truths in them and instead encourage them to read books with sentimental lies."

"He who cares more for what is good than what is true loses, in the long run, both goodness and truth, since there is no goodness without truth," she said. "The only 'dirty' book is the book which falsifies life."

LaPole's Facelift

The amusement page of the N.Y. Journal-American is taking on a new look under the aegis of Nick LaPole, acting drama editor. (La Pole was longtime assistant to Jim O'Connor, vet J-A amusement editor, who died of a heart attack during the newspaper strike.)

LaPole, who has the daily task of juggling around with three columns, is spotlighting the return of Dorothy Kilgallen with an eight-column banner and has Louella Parsons on page opposite and Louis Sobol on page over. (Sobol being off his longtime position opposite the editorial page and in the new spot because he was holding down the Kilgallen slot while she was ill.)

Other makeup changes instituted by LaPole are the liberal use of boxes to point up shorts, fillers and topical news, and the use of heavy borders to emphasize special stories or reviews.

was a kid, I didn't have a sled. I went down the hill on my cousin."

Sammy Davis Jr. was the only Clan member mentioned in Bishop's act. He gagged about Davis' faith, saying, "When Sammy sings, 'Let My People Go,' you're gonna see a crowd."

Gordon & Sheila MacRae performed segments of their nitery act, including her impersonations of Carol Channing, Zsa Zsa Gabor and Peggy Lee, and his of Edward R. Murrow and Red Skelton. They omitted from the show Sheila MacRae's spoof of Jacqueline Kennedy. Presumably there was concern that it might not sit right with President Kennedy, but it definitely would have been the hit of the night with everyone else.

The MacRaes were in fine voice and enthusiastically received.

Lisa Kirk, in a dazzling white beaded gown, put lots of life in the show with rousing arrangements of "Anything Goes" and "Bye Bye Blackbird." Her familiar "Good Little Girls Go to Heaven" was delivered in button cute style, and she showed off her fine voice with "What Kind of Fool Am I?"

The program, rated generally as one of the best the Assn. ever presented, was arranged by a network committee headed by David Tebet of NBC and including John Green of ABC, Phil Lamphin of Mutual and Tom Loeb of CBS. Phil Lamphin was musical director, and Victor Allen of CBS was producer.

Robert H. Fleming, head of ABC News in the capital, presided as the outgoing prexy of the Assn. Stephen J. McCormick, Mutual v.p., was general chairman of the dinner.

Political celebrities were on hand in large numbers. The head table included President Kennedy, Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson, Chief Justice Earl Warren, Senate and House leaders and FCC Chairman Newton Minow, among others.

NBC prexy Robert Kintner and Mutual prez Robert Hurleigh were on hand as were the heads of the news operations of all four nets, Richard Salant of CBS, William McAndrew of NBC, James C. Hagerty of ABC and Stephen McCormick of Mutual.

The big handicap of the night was that the only hotel ballroom in town available to the Assn. on Friday (3) night was too small to hold all those with tickets. The White House had picked the date for the dinner to comply with the Kennedy calendar, and it was an evening which all the big rooms in D. C. were already taken.

The ballroom of a new hotel, the International Inn, was all there was. Tables were jammed together so close that the waiters faced an almost impossible problem in serving food. The stage was, indeed, a miniature. ("I've got cuff links bigger than this stage," Bishop quipped.) A platform had to be built over a bunch of tables to hold the band, since there was no room for it on the floor.

a day will be accommodated at the Top of the Fair bars and restaurants in its completely glass enclosed 360-degree interiors atop the Heliport Bldg. The restaurants etc. are two-floors high and suspended just under the heliport which can bring visitors from the new Pan American Bldg. heliport in Grand Central zone to Flushing Meadows in six minutes. In turn, the heliport at the Fair will be the base for two sightseeing services—one around the Fairgrounds and environs, and the other providing a bird's-eye-view of Manhattan, the Statue of Liberty, the UN, Central Park, etc.

The skyport can efficiently handle up to 30 flights per hour.

Since the World's Fair Heliport Bldg., which is situated in the hub of the Transportation Centre, will ultimately become a permanent part of the Flushing Meadows Park—the permanent heritage of Robert Moses' "dream" exposition—these restaurant etc. facilities will continue. Operators feel that it may be easier to take a six-minute skyport-to-skyport hop from Manhattan to the Top of the Fair and-or its Terrace Club than brave the taxi jams to some midtown eatery.

Swanky Auspices

The swanky Terrace Club membership will have a permanent pass to the fair, special emblem and shield for valet-parking privileges, private elevator etc. (They also will have special lounges for VIP parties, business sessions, etc.). (The anticipated 30,000-a-day visitors will be charged $1 to visit the Top of the Fair but this will be credited to food and beverages if they patronize the restaurants.)

William E. Robinson, chairman, and Howard S. Cullman, vicechairman, head the board of governors of the Terrace Club; Robert D. L. Gardiner, treasurer, and Richard C. Patterson Jr., secretary. Board comprises Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, John J. Clancy, Thomas J. Deegan Jr., Bernard F. Gimbel, James C. Kellogg 3d, Mrs. Mary W. Lasker, Matthias E. Lukens, Joseph A. Martino, Charles Poletti and Bayard F. Pope. Ex-officio members of the board are Moses and Austin J. Tobin, executive director of the Port Authority.

Top of the Fair Inc. officers are George Myers, prez; Gardiner, exec v.p.; Barry Buchanan, v.p.; William F. Foley, managing director.

Apart from the global accent on viands and vintages—"drinks around the world," etc—Duke Arturo Pini di San Miniato, designer and art curator, is consultant and art director for the TOF. Historic engravings and water colors will be on permanent display in the Terrace Club. Count Louis Quintanilla, the Spanish artist, will do the three large murals in the main restaurant.

While the rooftop heliport will serve as the aerial gateway to the Fair, the ground level beneath the towering 12-story tall heliport contains a 360-degree circular cinema. It will accommodate audiences of 400 who, in 10-minute shifts, will see and hear about the operations of the Port of New York.

Top of the Fair Inc. will also use this circular cinema as a 350-seat theatre-in-the-round during pre-Fair and inter-Fair periods for demonstrations.

The Knott Hotels chain will physically operate the restaurants for the TOF Corp.

formers, who were mostly working or living in the New York area.

The presentation was a benefit for the Museum of the City of N.Y., with virtually everything from the theatre to the souvenir program donated. The museum, in honor of the Equity anniversary, launched an "On Stage, 1913-1963" theatre exhibition on the same day as the benefit performance. The display, which fills almost the entire second floor of the museum, includes around 2,000 items, such as costumes, props, original scene and costume designs, set models, handwritten manuscripts and original music scores, as well as photographs, playbills and other memorabilia.

Tickets for the benefit at the Majestic were scaled up to $25. Contributing, among others, to a smoothly running performance, besides Miss Dalrymple, were John Fearnley, director; Pembroke Davenport, musical director; Peggy Clark, lighting director; Herman Shapiro, production stage manager; and Homer Poupart, assistant to Miss Dalrymple.

The program was confined to excerpts from legit shows except for the opener, a dedication to Bill (Bojangles) Robinson, in which the Copasetics, a zingy, colored eight-man tap dancing troupe, displayed some dandy footwork. The balance of the presentation, which Cyril Ritchard emceed, comprised the following:

A scene from "The Teahouse of the August Moon," with David Wayne, John Forsythe and Paul Ford, repeating their original roles; Sally Ann Howes reprising "I Could Have Danced All Night" from "My Fair Lady"; Marc Connelly, Dore Marenda, Katherine Meskill, Jack Fletcher, Melinda Dillon, Lillian Gish, Walter Abel and others in an excerpt from "Our Town"; Beatrice Lillie, as Britannia in the "March With Me" number from "Andre Charlot's Revue"; Carol Channing singing "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" from "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes"; and the "Kansas City" number from "Oklahoma" with Richard France as lead dancer.

Also, Art Lund and others singing "Little Tin Box" from "Fiorello"; William Warfield and Leona Foster in "Porgy and Bess" excerpts; Swen Swenson dancing and singing "I've Got Your Number" speciality from "Little Me"; Vivian Blaine singing "Adelaide's Lament" from "Guys and Dolls"; Helen Hayes as Queen Victoria in "Victoria Regina," and Robert Preston singing "Trouble" from "The Music Man."

ture) the year it was released.

The N. Y. objections to the film, which is currently in the 13th week of its Washington prexem engagement, follow almost a year of hassling between the distrib and the U. S. Customs, before the latter finally cleared the pic for import here—with what is described as one brief cut of "no more than 60 seconds."

Deletions asked by New York occur in two scenes, both involving the depiction of the sexual act. Trans-Lux, which points to the awards already won by the film and the highly laudatory reviews published in such magazines as Time and the Saturday Review, bears its defense on the opinion that the picture is not obscene. They also state that the second "objectionable" scene is basically essential to the drama, since it is (apparently literally and figuratively) the climax of the story.

VARIETY reviewer Stef, in reviewing the picture from San Francisco in the Nov. 2, 1960 issue, called "Stranger" a "brooding, explosive and superbly fabricated Danish film" with "only one obvious flaw: it is simply too explicit for exhibition in the U. S." He said further that it is "a highly moral film, but the candor of its two seduction scenes makes France's 'The Lovers' seem like a Disney family special.")

Trans-Lux prexy Dick Brandt reported yesterday (Tues.) that T-L has "absolutely no intention of making any cuts whatsoever" and will pursue the case to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary. Attorney Harry Bond, of the law firm of Weisman, Celler, Allan, Scott, Spett & Sheinberg, is repping T-L in the case.

Producer-director Jacobsen is due in the States next month in connection with the New York situation, as well as three openings in the middle west and on the coast set for this summer. The New York opening, of course, and the general release of the picture will await developments with the Board of Regents.

due for release in about two weeks, alleges that the union, in an effort to get more dues, worked in cahoots with mobsters, silently watched its members be forced into prostitution and condoned violations of its contracts without a squawk as long as the money rolled in.

Several Federal agencies also come in for criticism from the subcommittee.

The Immigration & Naturalization Service is accused of being asleep on the job while young Canadian girls were imported into the Chicago area to be turned into B-girls. The Internal Revenue Service is charged with laxity in letting various dives get away with not holding out income tax and Social Security from the pay of strippers, hoofers, bellydancers and the like. The Labor Department is criticized for not enforcing the reporting requirements under the Landrum-Griffin Act.

At the moment, the McClellan Subcommittee is still deeply involved in its probe of the TFX contract award to General Dynamics.

No Generalities Accepted

Present plans are to issue the AGVA report when the TFX hearings are over. Then, after a lapse of a few more weeks to give everyone involved plenty of time to study the report, a one-day or two-day AGVA hearing will be called.

Representatives of the union and the Federal agencies involved will be called on the carpet to explain what they have done to correct what the subcommittee has criticized.

"We won't put up with any generalities," one subcommittee member said. "We will demand the specifics of what has been done to clean up this mess."

Later, the subcommittee chairman, Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), intends to introduce several bills to tighten loose places in Federal law which permitted some of the AGVA abuses.

German film industry in their long careers in films.

Cordula Trantow (who won the German Federal Film Prize for her role in Bernhard Wicki's "The Bridge") and Thomas Fritsch (popular newcomer in "Julia, You Are Enchanting") were chosen as the most outstanding newcomers in the German film industry.

Metro's "Ben-Hur" and Gloria's "Via Mala" were chosen as the foreign and German films that attracted the most ticket-buyers, according to a poll of the German exhibitors. "The Black-White-Red Four Poster" (Schorcht) and "As In a Mirror" (Nora) were selected as the most artistically outstanding films in a poll of the German film crix.

Awards of $50,000 apiece were given through the West German government to films that were considered outstanding in furthering the image of Germany. Included among the $50,000 winners were Columbia's "The Fire Ship"; Gloria's "Three Penny Opera"; Constantin's "Treasure of the Silver Lake"; "Four Poster"; Schorcht's "Confessions of a Man Living in a Furnished Room"; "Endless Night" and "He Cannot Leave."

newspapers and radio to contend with. The current structure will have as its major concern written, aural and visual media, including international television. Much of it in color.

The building, erected in consultation with communicators of all types, contains headquarters for the major news services, a radio interview room, booths for the changing of film for photographers, dark rooms, interview rooms, and a large lounge as well as a setup for 40 telephone operators to answer inquiries on the Fair. Also a long string of pay phones. It will also be the headquarters of the Thomas J. Deegan Co., publicity and public relations consultants for the Fair; the William J. Donoghue Co., press relations; and J. Walter Thompson agency which handles the Fair's advertising. All these branches are being coordinated by ex-NBC newscaster Bill Berns, veepee in charge of the Fair's communications and public relations.

Dedication of this building was given tremendous hoopla to an invited audience followed by a mass feed, during which the main speeches were delivered by Salinger and Fair prexy Robert Moses.

Later, usually one of the more volatile citizens in the public eye, whose talks were frequently colorful and explosive, took a more moderate turn on this occasion. His plea was for the press generally to focus on the accomplishments of those creating the fair. He asked the press "to practice superlatives as this will be a superlative show." He continued, "The Fourth Estate furnishes the inspiration as well as the facts for the voice of the people, which we are told is the voice of God. We are emboldened, therefore, to ask you to give us more than lip service, more than coldblooded justice, more than impartial criticism—give us a break."

OBITUARIES

MONTY WOOLLEY

Monty Woolley, 74, assistant professor of drama at Yale who turned actor, died May 6 in Albany, N.Y., of a kidney and heart ailment. He was famed for his portrayal of Sheridan Whiteside in the Kaufman-Hart comedy, "The Man Who Came to Dinner," which he played on both stage and screen. The bearded actor was noted for his arrogant characterizations on both stage and screen.

Woolley was born Edgar Montillion Woolley of a family which was closely allied with the theatre. His father operated the old Bristol Hotel, now demolished and also the famous Grand Union Hotel, Saratoga Springs. In this atmosphere he was exposed to the greats of the theatrical, academic and literary fields.

He became an instructor at Yale, and following a hitch during World War I, he returned to Yale as an assistant professor of Drama. Under his influence, the theatrical activities of this department expanded considerably. He resigned when George Pierce Baker of

At various times she was associated with Columbia Pictures, Fox Films, Universal, RKO and United Artists. She had been ill for many years and virtually inactive since the late '30s.

TED WEEMS

Ted Weems, 62, a top bandleader in the 1930s and '40s who batoned "Heartaches" into a smash hit died of a lung ailment May 6 in Tulsa, Okla. He had been hospitalized for seven weeks with emphysema, a disease that attacks tissues of the lung.

Weems, whose band played top hotel and ballroom locations in the pre-World War II heyday of name orchs, was noted for his arrangements that frequently featured the use of whistlers. One of the latter was Elmo Tanner who long appeared with Weems.

His orchestra also was a talent incubator for a number of top vocalists including Perry Como. During the late '40s when name bands were slipping, Weems cashed in on a revival of "Heartaches." He

After rustication at the family manse in Saratoga Springs, where he grew a beard, he ultimately gravitated to the stage. He directed "Fifty Million Frenchmen," "The Second Little Show" and "Jubilee." But it was his reputation as a wit and partygoer that led to his becoming an actor.

He migrated to Hollywood in 1937, where he appeared in many top films including "Nothing Sacred," "Dance Coed," "Holy Matrimony," "The Bishop's Wife," "Miss Tatlock's Millions" and "When Irish Eyes are Smiling." His final film was "As Young as You Feel" in 1951.

Woolley disdained television and lived in retirement at his Saratoga Springs home.

There are no immediate survivors.

BRYANT WASHBURN

Best remembered for his three "Skinner" comedies — "Skinner's Dress Suit," "Skinner Steps Out" and "Skinner's Baby"—Washburn also starred in such films as "Prince of Graustark," "What Happened to Jones," "Breakfast at Sunrise" and "Nothing to Wear." With advent of talkies he turned to character roles, and for a time was an advance man for Mike Todd.

Son and daughter survive.

GERTRUDE PURCELL

Gertrude Purcell, 6[illegible], early-day actress-playwright-screen writer, died of cancer May 1 in Hollywood. Following a brief excursion on stage she turned to writing and collaborated on eight musical comedies. She wrote "Voltaire" for Arthur Hopkins, and "Three Little Girls" for the Shuberts. She also collabed on "Royal Family of Broadway," "Follow the Leader" and "Sap from Syracuse."

helped push the tune into one of the top 1947 disk bestsellers.

Born in Pitcairn, Pa., Weems formed his first band shortly after leaving the U. of Pennsylvania. During World War II he served with the Merchant Marine. Also a composer, he wrote such tunes as "The Martins and the Coys," "Jig Time," "The One Man Band" and "The Toyland Band."

Only a few days before his death, Dallas newspapers published an open letter signed by bandleader Blue Steel which pointed out that Weems was waging a desperate fight for his life in Tulsa's Hillcrest Memorial Hospital. He urged readers who have "enjoyed his wonderful music" to mail a personal check to Weems to ease his personal heartache by defraying tremendous medical expenses.

Surviving is a brother Art Weems, a longtime agent.

OSCAR MARIENTHAL

Oscar Marienthal, 50, co-owner (with his brother George) of three of Chi's top niteries, died of a heart attack in that city May 4. In 1954, he started Mister Kelly's at a Rush St. location that had been the site of a series of previous restaurant failures. The entertainment at Mister Kelly's rapidly developed from cocktail lounge acts to name performers and it became the top club on Rush St. Shelley Berman (who is currently there), Bob Newhart and Mike Nichols & Elaine May all played their first major nitery dates there.

The Marienthals opened the plush Happy Medium cabaret theatre on Rush St. in 1960, and it is currently showing "Put It In Writing," the second long run tab revue since the spot opened.

In addition to his brother George, Oscar Marienthal is survived by his wife, daughter and two sons.

SOLLY VIOLINSKY

Solly Violinsky, more famous for his quips and one-liners than for his prowess at the instrument from which he took his name, died May 5 of cancer at the Lourdes Hospital, Binghamton, N.J. He had been ailing for some time.

Violinsky was born Sol Ginsberg and took his name from the fact that he played the fiddle for many performers. He ultimately wrote his own act with which he toured the circuits as one of the monologists of the era.

However, Violinsky was better known for his quick gags. At one time it was reputed that most of the one-liners in circulation on and off the stage were the products of Violinsky's wit. He took recognition of that face by handing out cards reading: Solly Violinsky, Genius.

Violinsky's best known line was the one in which he declared that he has laid off under every president since William Howard Taft.

Violinsky was in demand as an after-dinner speaker. He also used to be called on to save some of the Saturday afternoon sessions at the old Friars. He was said to have given away, free, more lines to performers than some writers could hammer out in a lifetime.

Violinsky was a member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. His best known song is "When Frances Dances With Me." He was in fairly comfortable circumstances at the time of his death according to intimates at the Friars, of which he was a lifetime member.

Lewis, who pioneered in the introduction of opera into English, also organized troupes of nitery performers as well as a number of dance bands for bookings in the '30s. During that era he produced the operetta, "Gypsy Blonde," in a Broadway theatre for a three-week run in the summer off-season.

A modernized version of Victor Herbert's "Red Mill," the operetta was presented on a mutual profit-sharing basis among performers, musicians, theatre owner and the producer. In recent years, Lewis managed the Roseland Bldg., N.Y., until it was razed for an office building. He retired several years ago.

HENRY M. NEELY

Henry M. Neely, 84, died May 1 in City Hospital, Elmhurst, L. I. He had several different careers in his time, having achieved unique fame as a writer-lecturer on astronomy at the Hayden Planetarium, N. Y., after 1946. It was upon this latterday activity that the lay press obit notices concentrated.

Actually, Neely had been well established in radio's heyday as a writer-director. In proof of his versatility he switched to acting, having running parts in a number of daytime serials, notably the CBS sustainer five-a-week by Addie Richton and Lynn Stone, "This Life Is Mine." He also was the first radio editor of the old Philadelphia Public Ledger, having assumed the post in 1927.

Other radio program credits of Neely included the old "Maxwell House Show Boat" and the "Fitch Band Wagon." His hobbyist interest in astronomy led to a considerable success in that area. His books sold well and his lectures were taped for syndication to schools.

Until recent years he lived in Manhattan but moved to Jackson Heights, where last winter he slipped on icy pavement and broke his back.

Neely was emcee for the old longrun Philco program on radio with Jessica Dragonette, among other chores. He was one of the pioneers who started with wireless and went on to radio entertainment. One experience of his youth was shipping to the Antarctic as Morse code operator.

He first appeared on Broadway in 1921 with Doris Keane in "Romance," and made another visit in 1930 when he played in "Symphony In Two Flats." Samson, whose sensitive voice, was one of his biggest assets, made many films and tv appearances.

Lincoln Center announces the first New York Film Festival

—presented in collaboration with The Museum of Modern Art and the British Film Institute.

The motion picture, as an authentic art form, is now to be included in the presentations of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts.

On September 10, 1963, Lincoln Center—in collaboration with The Museum of Modern Art and the British Film Institute—will present in Philharmonic Hall the first annual New York Film Festival.

The Festival, with Amos Vogel as the co-ordinator, will run for ten days, showing a total of twenty new films. Literally it will be a Festival of Festivals. For the films will be chosen by Richard Roud, organizer of the London and New York Film Festivals, from among the best pictures of other festivals held during the year.

These same films will serve as the program of the 7th London Film Festival in October.

The New York Film Festival, like its London counterpart, will make no awards, have no judges or juries.

Selection for showing at the Festival will in itself be the mark of a picture's merit.

'Cash on Delivery' of Food 'n' Booze New Result of Expense Acct. Chill

The recent petitions for "arrangements" under Chapter XI of the Bankruptcy Act by relatively top priced restaurants may be the forerunner of some other dramatic financial crises involving some better known gastronomic haunts. The vendors of viands and vintages, through their interstate institutes, for some months have been alerted to "cash on delivery" consignments to spots which had exhausted their credit.

The "arrangements" asked in New York recently by the White Turkey restaurants, then the Arthur Murray eateries last week, and spots like the Monterey Restaurant on 8th Ave. and 55th St. and Chanteclair House on New York's Madison Ave. are perhaps a bit more surprising than the class joints. These normally should not have been casualties under the "entertainment deductibility" spending, which is more apartment to the tonier "fittingeateries."

In line with that, despite the hue-and-cry by the hotels, eateries and niteries about the Internal Revenue Service's recent edicts anent entertainment spending—which will be allowed if found "legitimate"—actually the sundry businesses which have swelled the coffers of the bistros and pubs and clubs aren't too saddened by IRS Collector Mortimer Caplin's cracking down.

Texas Deejay Monickers: 'Zing Zang,' 'Hotsy Totsy,' And Even 'Dizzie Lizzie'

Houston, May 14.

Joe Fife, manager of KYOK, said the outlet is leading all local radio stations in zany names for its disk jockeys: Unusual nicknames have long been a part of Negro culture, so the station decided to adopt some of them for its own personalities.

Avery Davis is known on the air as "Zing Zang" derived from the name applied to a man who played the banjo in a minstrel show. Davis is a third generation member of an old minstrel family.

"Hotsy Totsy" has come to mean "big and handsome," and fits disk jockey Chester McDowell, according to Fife.

Novella Smith, a graduate of the U. of Heidelberg and a veteran of a number of French motion pictures is "Dizzy Lizzie," a well known Negro nickname, adopted after England's Prime Minister Disraeli became known to the world as "Dizzy Lizzie." Since then several "Dizzy Lizzies" have appeared on the stage, in minstrel shows, and various other Negro entertainments.

KYOK airs especially for the local Negro market.

Cannes Likes Bette Davis

The picture that almost wasn't made, "What Ever Happened To Baby Jane?" (WB) has received the "best" reaction so far at the present Cannes Film Fest. It has put Bette Davis into position to possibly win "Best Actress" award.

Audience and critics joined in appreciation. Director Richard Aldridge shared in the hit.

Scrub of Cooper Shot Costs Webs Over $1,000,000

Though Gordon Cooper's psyche seems to have remained mostly intact through it all, the delay in his manned orbital flight will cost the three television networks the very minimum of $1,100,000 in lost coin, it is estimated.

Thirteen minutes before blastoff yesterday (Tues.) at Cape Canaveral, NASA decided to scrub the 22-orbit flight of Mercury-Atlas 9, Cooper's "wheels." The tracking station in Bermuda wasn't functioning properly, which was the last of a series of troublesome moments that preceded the scrubbed flight.

ABC, the network operating the pool cameras, and NBC and CBS together decided after the scrub to preserve crews at the blastoff station in Florida. They will also keep open cables and other communications lines, also costly. "As each day of a space shoot delay passes,

Play About Gen. DeGaulle Aimed for London, B'way

Rome, May 14.

"The Invincible" is a new play which its author, Ion Nicola, describes as "one which Charles DeGaulle's enemies will call subversive and his friends will call pro-government." It's about the French Premier, of course, has been written in English and is to be produced first this fall in London, then on Broadway.

According to the playwright, a Rumanian who has so far worked primarily for Broadway, where he staged "Road to Glory," and where he hopes to stage "Viva Rafaela," based on his own book, "The Slaves of Freedom," inspired by the life of Castro, the figure of a dictator who is eventually overcome by his own nature more than events.

SEE NO DANGER OF A SHUTOUT

It's highly unlikely that the increasingly powerful Common Market organization of Europe will ever exclude—or even try to limit the freedom of movement of—U.S. film companies and/or U.S. films in that vital six-nation community.

This optimistic forecast—along with some pertinent reasons—was given VARIETY last week by a top U.S. film exec who headquarters in Europe and who, because of his close association with CM officials, prefers to sound off in diplomatic anonymity.

One of the principal reasons for the optimism: any moves to exclude or limit the U.S. companies would mean disaster even greater to the various European production industries than to Hollywood's. As the exec put it, U.S. distribution companies, with their worldwide releasing organizations, now are responsible for bringing in more export revenues for the various Common M. film production industries than all the European distribution companies combined. This is a reflection not only of the U.S. companies' increasing investment in local European production, but also of a comparatively new preference, on the part of European producers, to make worldwide

New Bid to Halt Cig Endorsement By Pro Athletes

Minneapolis, May 14.

The American Association of Health, Physical Education & Recreation with a 38,000 membership took steps here to halt professional athletes' endorsements of cigarets on television and elsewhere.

A unanimously adopted resolution at the convention held in Minneapolis calls for the end of such endorsements. It was announced this will be urged "in order to protect teenagers' health."

This is the first national education group to adopt a resolution drawn up last December by the National Conference on Secondary School Athletic Administration. That Conference was sponsored by six national groups interested in education, including the President's Council on Physical Fitness and the U.S. Office of Education.

"We expect the other groups to adopt the resolution soon," said R. D. Merrick, the Association's executive secretary. "Advertisers and manufacturers will think twice before continuing their practices if other groups follow our lead."

The athletes themselves will be requested "earnestly" to quit the endorsements, averred Merrick.

The Cronyns See Mpls. Repertory Relief from 'Crap Game' of B'way

By LEE REES

Minneapolis, May 14.

The "frantic crap game" atmosphere that frequently undermines preparations for a Broadway play was missing from rehearsals of the Tyrone Guthrie repertory company which opened its initial, 26-week season here last week.

So says Hume Cronyn who, with his actress-wife Jessica Tandy, heads the distinguished first-season company. The Cronyns think the repertory experiment in mid-America offers actors and playwrights distinct advantages over Broadway productions, benefits which may presage a shift in U.S. legit concentration away from New York.

If the Guthrie theatre succeeds and inspires the establishment of similar playhouses in large cities throughout the nation, the Cronyns believe talented actors would be lured away from Broadway. "I believe that many players will regard association with repertory companies having the services of top directors like Guthrie so advantageous that it will be their preference over the risks and worries attached to Broadway employment and careers," Cronyn says.

Bard's 'Rondshow'

Claudia Cassidy, Chicago Tribune drama critic noted for her caustic reviews of touring shows that play the Windy City with replacement casts, panned the production of "Hamlet" that last week opened the new Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, Minneapolis.

The reaction of the company was, perhaps, predictable. "Of course she didn't like it," commented one of the actors, "It isn't the original cast."

Eddie and Liz will be reunited or at least side by side, on Broadway June 9 and 10. Fisher opens as headliner of the Hotel American's Royal Box on Tuesday, a day ahead of "Cleopatra" bowing at the nearby Rivoli Theatre. Fisher's minimum tariff (cover charge) will be $6 and $7.50 for his four-weeker, as against $5.50 top for "Cleo," but there's no disputing that $15,350,000 or so, which the 20th-Fox film has "in the box," via the cash-in-advance guarantees under the company's unique sales policy.

The Americana's Claude C. Philippe was scouting for a "prom season" headliner in June but figures Fisher will get both the kids and the others. Fisher's guarantee is reported at $12,500 a week, plus other "considerations" (extra musicians, hotel suites, etc.).

Pres. Kennedy to Probe Propaganda Via USIS

Frankfurt, May 14.

The subject of whether American servicemen overseas are being fed slanted news broadcasts via U.S. Information Service shows is going to be studied by President Kennedy, it has been reported here.

American soldiers and their families living in Europe listen mainly to the soldier network American Forces Network (AFN), headquartered in a Frankfurt suburb.

And daily shows titled "Today's Analysis of the News from Washington" are aired on the GI network, with the announcer stating these shows are of "particular interest to U.S. military personnel overseas."

The shows, read live from the United States, are not identified as USIS material although they are done by the U.S. Information Agency.

The programs are carried twice daily to the soldiers in Europe at 5:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. and have become the object of Federal scrutiny since reporters have questioned Pres. Kennedy as to whether an official government agency should be sending its comments and opinions to the military abroad.

Yanks Foresee Russ Gesturings Of Prizes to Neutralist Nations At Peace-Slanted Moscow Fest

Washington, May 14.

Diplomatic sources here predict this summer's Moscow Film Festival will be a mix of honorariums for films and pitched woo to emerging nations.

Preparations being made here for the July 7-21 fest will have to take account of diplomatic as well as cinematic intricacies, State Dept and U. S. Information Agency sources said.

As with other festivals, the film aspects will be handled by George Stevens Jr., USIA motion picture chief. He will head the U. S. delegation in Moscow.

An official Yank film, to be picked soon, will be entered in the main competition. Four other pictures "representing the diversity and artistic quality" of U. S. films will be entered in special competitions.

Acknowledging the political purposes behind the fest, diplomatic sources were especially wary of its pitch to the "new and nonaligned nations."

Theme of this Third International Film Festival is "For humanism in cinema art, for peace and friendship among nations."

A dispatch from the Soviet Novosti Press Agency said special prizes will be awarded to encourage infant film industries. Sources said these special awards are to be parcelled around to neutralist countries with presumed political motives.

Artists rather than political judgments will be rendered in regular competitions, however, because of the international composition of the juries. Stanley Kramer will probably be the American rep on the jury.

WALDORF EXCLUSIVITY: A STANDUP CHANNING

Carol Channing, currently playing a cabaret engagement in the Empire Room of the Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y., was to have teamed last Sunday night (12) with Anita Loos in a reading of the latter's preface to a forthcoming new edition of her original novel, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," at the Gramercy Arts Theatre, N.Y.

The hotel management exercised its contract, however, forbidding Miss Channing from outside performances during the cafe stand, so the comedienne remained in the audience at the off-Broadway spot, merrily asking questions of Miss Loos and occasionally offering humorous comment.

There was an informal wine-tasting after the reading, but Miss Channing still stayed off the vino, several glasses passed to her, and she served it to others in the audience.

Fears Flood of Commie Films in Japan From Expected Free Mart

Tokyo, May 14.

While many importers of foreign films here are eagerly awaiting next year's expected free market, pres Hideo Shintogo of the Shochiku-Eiheri Co. warns that a complete liberalization of the market would bring a flood of films from Communist countries. He regards this prospect as undesirable.

"I was informed that a few hundred feature films already have arrived at the Soviet Embassy," Shintogo said.

Shintogo, one of Japan's biggest dealers in foreign films and a member of the six-man advisory board on motion picture import policies to the Finance Ministry, believes that films from Red China and the Iron Curtain countries will be offered here at virtually no cost if unlimited imports were permitted.

With 44 additional licenses granted this fiscal season, 275 foreign films will be imported in the year from April 1. Shintogo says the limit next year should be set at 200, to prevent a cinematic wave of Communistic propaganda. He notes that from next year, film imports will come under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI). He reports to be a member of the advisory committee on motion pictures to MITI.

Shintogo points out that he has long been among those urging the

Philip's Robert Proper

London, May 14.

Prince Philip was embarrassed by actor Tom Bell while speaking at the Awards dinner of the British Film Academy. Towards the end of his speech Bell called out "Tell us a funny story."

Without batting an eyelid, Philip turned to the interrupter and said, smiling: "If you want a funny story, you should have hired a professional comedian." He then concluded his speech and walked off the dais, still smiling. Leslie Grade, Attenborough and others, at whose table Bell was sitting, later apologized for the actor's lapse.

'Debilitated' By Ala. Racial Mess, Joan Baez Skips

New Orleans, May 14.

Suit for $100,000 damages was filed Thursday (9) in Federal Court here against folk singer Joan Baez and her manager, Manuel Greenhill, in connection with her failure to make an appearance at the Loyola U. field house performance Wednesday (8). The action was brought by Irvin S. Smith, head of S&S Productions, sponsors of the event.

It is alleged that the defendants, without cause or justification, violated the terms of their contract calling for Miss Baez's appearance. An estimated 3,000 folk music fans were on hand at the field house when the singer failed to appear. The suit asks damages for loss of profits and damage to the reputation of the sponsors.

Greenhill told the disappointed audience that Miss Baez was "debilitated" because of the Alabama racial disturbances. He said the singer has been touring the South and "got taken up with the problems that exist in Birmingham and just debilitated herself."

A few hours before concert time Miss Baez told Smith she was ill

Retards, Hope Style

Cincinnati, May 14.

As a result of his doctor's advice that he had better slow down, Bob Hope used a "cozy rollerchair" during most of his 70-minute performance in his show last Wednesday (8) for the U. of Cincinnati's Student Council. An audience of approximately 5,000 was on hand at the UC armory-field house for the show which included Gisele Du Maven, a replacement for the ailing Molly Bee, and backed by the local 12-piece L&M Band.

As a warmup for the show, Hope also found time to sit in on Ruth Lyons' "50 Club" show on WLW-T and autograph copies of his "I Owe Russia $1,200" at a local department store.

11-Screen Cinerama Hits Piccadilly, Initial Day Admissions, 2,000

London, May 14.

Opening day of Piccadilly's new Cinerama Theatre drew around 2,000 tab buyers to the 20 showings of the 20-minute Russian traveling, "Russian Roundabout." A Cinerama spokesman claimed that this "was a distinctly encouraging start."

London's Cinerama differs from the Moscow setup in that it has only 11 screens compared with Moscow's 23 screens. London has abandoned ring of 11 upper screens in the interests of better picture definition. At the moment, Cinerama is merely a novelty gimmick and some patrons may find having to stand, if only for 20 minutes, a chore. Cartoon characters, galloping Cossacks, sleighs, spaniels and trains whirl around the theatre with a bewildering sense of atmosphere and realism, disturbed only by the separations of the screens. Some of the most successful parts of "Russian Roundabout" are the traveling sequences of the Black Sea, Moscow and Leningrad.

The sponsors, Leon Negner and Leonard Urry, are charging 50c admission for adults and 25c for children.

Bops Irish Tourism

Dublin, May 14.

Lack of night spots is hitting Irish tourist biz, particularly in the dollar market. Irish stay up late to talk, but don't go to night spots. Only after midnight entertainment is an occasional dance, usually without a show.

Several attempts to start night clubs have met with licensing and other problems, and the few all-night restaurants offer no entertainment. Attention of Irish Tourist Board is being called to this deficiency which, hoteliers say, is militating against possibility of winning convention business.

RCA exec Frank M. Folsom, who now admits "having taken on too many causes" but likes to do a conscientious job whether he's the chairmaning Bible Week or a testimonial dinner for Tonto Shor, has some pointed observations on how some of the commercial pitches should be handled. Especially, not handled.

For one thing, in the eager-beaver techniques, now old-hat, by the professional moneyraisers — after all, both the "chairman" or the "honored" guest is most often a willing clay pigeon for sweet charity's sake—their names and the weight of their prestige are used rather loosely.

Folsom declared himself that henceforth he wants to see every letter, wire or communique over his signature. One special instance revolved around working newspapermen who were solicited in a form letter over his signature. He recognizes that tapping a newsman $50 to $75 a ticket to "honor" some pal "just ain't right, in my book". Folsom's attitude reflects the heretofore silent opinion of many excepting that he has been the first to voice it.

The "old hat" technique has gotten so that it really fools none but the naive. First is the invitation to join an "honorary committee" for this or that cause. Then there is a cocktail party—"21" seems to get that business a lot, but of course that's charged off against the operating overhead — and this devolves into a "pep talk" to "make this a big success" and "not let down our distinguished guest of honor". Then follows a letter to those who didn't show up—that's most of the hip bunch—that "sorry you weren't there," followed by the plea "to make this event a signal success will you, as one of the sponsors, take a table for 10" at $50, $90, $75 or whatever the tariffs.

SEEK 'CLUB' TO SOOTHE GAMBLERS AT FLAMINGO

Las Vegas, May 14.

Flamingo Hotel here is making a pitch for the showing of "Cleopatra" in the hotel's 2,000-seat grand ballroom, according to Morris Lansburgh, one of the operators, who stated that the deal depends on whether he can secure zoning variance. It's understood that Lansburgh offered an approximate $150,000 guarantee to 20th-Fox.

The Las Vegas Zoning Dept. is set to meet next Monday (20) to consider Lansburgh's application.

RE-CASTING OF N.Y. IMPORTERS

Accidentally, We Sold to TV

Colorama Features has been slapped with a breach of contract suit in New York Federal Court by Vernon Productions. Action, which seeks a $162,000 cash settlement plus $100,000 in damages, involves the distribution of 10 features in the U.S. and to the Armed Forces.

Vernon, indie film operation, says in the complaint that it set a distrib agreement with Colorama Dec. 14, 1959 calling for the marketing of the pix, mostly in outdoor situations. Plaintiffs claim that Colorama breached the pact by giving the same films to tv, a move expressly forbidden in the contract, and by other violations.

Defendants, in an answer to charges, have admitted letting the pix go to tv, saying that it was an "inadvertent" move. Vernon isn't satisfied with the explanation, however, and wants the $162,-000 it paid at the time of the agreement, plus $100,000 damages.

Telec of Canada Controls Colorama; Deal Delivers 13 European Features

Telec Inc., a U.S. subsid of Telec of Canada, distribution-exhibition-import firm, has acquired a controlling interest in Colorama Features, Yank distrib-producer. The result is a reorganization of Colorama and the expansion of its distribution organization.

Under terms of the deal, Herbert G. Stevenson, Canadian Telec prez, becomes chairman of the Colorama board of directors. James B. Woill continues to serve as prez of the reorganized Colorama operation and Richard Arlen, who heads U.S. Telec will be in charge of production for the newly-revamped organization.

An immediate result of the new Telec-Colorama relationship is the acquisition by Colorama Features of 13 European pix for distribution here. All are recent vintage pix and some are still in the latter stages of production. In addition, Telec will produce or coproduce two features in Hollywood this year with four more Coast pix scheduled for 1964, all to be distributed by Colorama Features. There's also "Sandokan," a Steve Reeves boef-eahe spec, which begins production in Ceylon in August, coproduced by Telec and George Venturini.

Among the 13 films ready for distribution with releases shedded for later this year are a Carlo Ponti production, "Letters of a Novice"; a John Barrymore Jr.-Jeanne Crain-Ahim Tamiroff-Gordon Mitchell vehicle, "Fire and Sword," "The Virgins," directed by Jean-Pierre Mocky; a Walter Chiari-Fred Clark-Tamiroff-Yvonne Bastien comedy; and "The Traffic Cop," starring Alberto Sordi, Vittorio De Sica and Sylva Koshina. Topping the Colorama release shed for this year is the filmation of Mickey Spillane's "The Girl Hunters," which preems in Gotham in June.

Dino Fazio, long a rep in the States of European pictureraders and financiers as well as a former manager of distribution for Telec throughout the western hemisphere, becomes exec v.p., replacing Carroll Puciato. Leo Samuels continues as v.p. in charge of sales. The revamped Colorama Features will continue to maintain exec offices in Hollywood and New York.

United Artists Diversifies Into Gibbs Shipyards Corp. On Loan-Backing Proviso

Looks like United Artists is thinking seriously about diversification. Annual report to stockholders reveals that last month, UA guaranteed $1,000,000 of a $3,500,000 debt of Gibbs Shipyards Inc., in connection with which UA received an option exercisable within a year, to acquire 30% of Gibbs' stock for $1,316,000. The loan which UA guaranteed is said to be secured by real estate and other fixed assets.

Deal means that UA has one year in which to study Gibbs situation and decide whether or not it wants to buy in. In the meantime, UA has the right to designate voting trustees to vote two-thirds of Gibbs stock. Gibbs' shipyard is located in Jacksonville, Fla., and does a lot of work for U.S. Navy.

It's 'High Noon' in Prague

Washington, May 14.

The first U.S. films in more than 10 years are currently being screened in Czechoslovakia and, according to reports to Washington from the American Embassy in Prague, "High Noon" with Gary Cooper, is doing capacity business and won raves from the critics.

Five films in all are being released there. Others are "The World of Comedy," "War and Peace," "Inherit the Wind" and "Picnic."

Czechs bought U.S. features, in an effort to get the people back into the habit of going to motion picture theatres. The villain: Television.

Jerry Pickman Joins Columbia

Hollywood, May 14.

Jerome (Jerry) Pickman joined Columbia Pictures yesterday (Mon.) in a special exploitation capacity in line with stepped up program being mapped by Robert S. Ferguson, veepee in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

Ferguson, in confirming the Pickman hiring, said that chief function of the former Paramount ad-pub and later domestic sales veepee would be in area of "marketing and merchandising certain designated" pix. In other words, Pickman will be assigned to work more directly with Col's indie producers, thus taking some of the load off of Ferguson who now shoulders administrative details in addition to plotting and supervising overall promotion of company's releases.

Pickman's last venture was with Max E. Youngstein and Charles Simonelli in the ill-fated Entertainment Corp. of America which collapsed after Columbia and others joined in court suit to halt ECA's initial project, "Fail-Safe." Conflict arose over alleged similarity with Col's British-made comedy, "Dr. Strangelove Or; How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb."

Col has taken over "Fail-Safe" in deal whereby Youngstein is acting as exec producer of this film, now shooting in New York.

LOUIS LEWIS UPPED TO NEW POST WITH ABELES

London, May 14.

Louis Lewis, managing director of Warner-Pathe Distributors since 1950, has switched to other duties, both here and overseas, with Arthur Abeles, of Warner Bros.-International. Mike Havas, 1ill recently in a similar capacity, was recently appointed chairman and managing director of Metro in Britain.

Macgregor Scott, managing director of Associated British-Pathe, has also been appointed managing director of Warner-Pathe Distributors and will combine the two duties. Appointments became effective yesterday (Mon.).

MANY NEW FACES IN INDIE BIZ

By VINCENT CANBY

New faces are turning up all over the U. S. indie distribution scene these days. The business, which in years past was dominated by the same old (and often respected) characters, is now getting a bunch of new players who, if not always unfamiliar, are taking unfamiliar roles.

The latest additions to the cast, which has changed drastically in the last 18 months, are Donald Rugoff, head of the artie Rugoff Theatres circuit, and Donald Lawrence, who last week formed Cinema V Ltd., for the acquisition and coproduction of offshore product.

The newly acknowledged kingpins of indie distribution are Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures and Walter Reade Jr.'s Continental Distributing. According to this publication's annual check of business done by foreign film imports (see International Film Edition, May 8), Embassy has in effect become a one-company rep for the Italo production industry, while at the same time expanding its relations with French producers. In the same way, Reade's Continental has assumed a leadership with its succession of new, offbeat British pix.

Reprise

What has happened to the leaders of old?

Ilya Lopert has turned his attention to United Artists' overseas production affairs and his Lopert Films, while still successful and active, has become more and more an integral part of the parent UA. Kingsley-International, which handled Columbia's artie product and whose success directly reflected the unique talents of the late Edward L. Kingsley, ceased with Kingsley's death. Irvin Shapiro lived most of last year abroad, during which time his previously very active Films Around The World released only two new pix, including the U. S. indie-made "The Connection."

Also during the past year, two promising newcomers came upon bad days: Pathe America's financial troubles led to its acquisition by Astor Pictures, which in turn was forced into filing a chapter 11 petition under the Bankruptcy Act.

A new face on the indie theatrical scene is Ely Landau, whose

Barkers Gather For Variety Int'l

Houston, May 14.

Convention of Variety Clubs International formally began here today and will run through Friday (17), with the awarding of the organization's 1962 Humanitarian Award and Heart Awards at a final banquet. "Barkers" and their wives are participating in the program, business sessions for which are all being conducted at the Rice Hotel. About 800 registration is anticipated.

Participants have gathered from 34 active tents in principal cities of the U.S., Canada, Mexico, Ireland and Britain. The international officers met yesterday (Mon.) for a discussion of the conclave's agenda. Election of officers for the coming year will be held on the final day of the gathering. A report of the nominating committee also delivered yesterday recommended nomination of the present slate of officers.

Incumbents include Rotus Harvey, international chief barker; James Carreras, first assistant international chief; Ralph Pries, second assistant; Jack Fitzgibbons, Int'l property master and Joseph Podoloff, Int'l dough guy. In addition to these business sessions, various entertainment plans have been formulated, including a big party this evening. Both Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola sponsored events, and other functions.

Chicago, May 14.

Arthur Wirtz, owner of the Palace Theatre, who a few months ago said he might sue 20th-Fox when it was revealed that "Cleopatra" would open at the State-Lake, last week formalized his threat with a $1,500,000 triple damage antitrust suit against Balaban & Katz and 20th Palace has been dark for over a year, prior to which it had shown Cinerama reruns.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court last Wednesday (8), charges discrimination against the Palace in bidding for "Cleopatra" in that the Wirtz house bid $750,000 for "Cleo," but that B&K got the film for the State-Lake for $600,000 and, according to Wirtz, a deal to treat 20th pix preferentially in the future.

It also charges that negotiations between 20th-Fox and the Palace for "Cleo" were a "ruse" to maintain the illusion of competition, and adds that B&K, with 85 theatres from Milwaukee to Gary, exerts a "stranglehold" on exhibition in the area.

Tradesters here say that 20th had "serious negotiations" with at least three other exhibitors, one of whom also offered a $750,000 advance. This was Oscar Brotman, who preferred the deal for his two outlying hardtops on a simultaneous basis, but was turned down because 20th wanted a Loop preem. The Oriental and Woods theatres were both said to have made offers under the B&K bid.

The Palace suit is likely to get bogged down in the courts unless Wirtz attempts to get an injunction to prevent "Cleopatra" from opening June 26 at the State-Lake. In that case, the suit would necessarily have to get a preliminary cursory hearing in order to determine whether court action was needed before the preem date.

'B'-as-in-Tasteless

National Legion of Decency has B-rated (morally objectional in part for all) 20th-Fox's "Marilyn," feature-length documentary on the career of the late Marilyn Monroe. Pic is comprised of clips from her various 20th films, including the uncompleted "Something's Got to Give."

Roman Catholic reviewing group calls the picture "a tasteless and unscrupulously commercial exploitation" of the star and says that the sequences "mainly highlight suggestiveness in costuming, dialog, dancing and situations."

"Particularly offensive," adds the Legion, "is the pornographic and coarse treatment given to a sequence taken from an unfinished film."

Reveal Rising Expenses at UA

An explanation as to why United Artists net income for 1962 was down fractionally from 1961, even though gross income soared from $112,000,000 to $126,810,380 last year, is contained in the just issued annual report to stockholders. Expenses in 1962 rose to $118,-308,276, from $106,717,725.

While interest and debt expenses, and selling and general administrative expenses remained fairly constant in the two years, producers' participation, amortization and other costs rose sharply in 1962, to $80,368,000, compared to $76,617,620.

UA's earnings before taxes last year were $7,302,104, up slightly from $7,281,363 in 1961. However, the total provision for taxes in 1962 of $3,487,000 brought net earnings to $3,815,104. This compares with $4,042,363 in 1961 when the tax provision was $3,239,000.

Company's proxy statement reveals that four of the UA officers have substantially increased their holdings of common stock in the year. Chairman Robert S. Benjamin's holdings rose from 1,547 shares to 4,338; prez Arthur B. Krim's from 2,902 to 7,451; exec veep Arnold Picker's from 920 to 2,373, and veep William J. Heineman's from 179 to 2,473.

In addition, 404,931 shares of class B common are held of record by Krim and Benjamin as joint tenants. This reps 23.32% of total outstanding voting stock.

For services of Krim and Benjamin during the year, UA paid law firm of Phillips, Nizer Benjamin, Krim and Ballon $52,000 each for the prez and chairman.

Company's annual meeting will be held June 11 in New York.

FRANK McCARTHY TO U AS 11TH PRODUCER

Hollywood, May 14.

Frank McCarthy, former 20th-Fox executive and producer, has been inked to an exclusive term pact as a producer by Universal. He checks in the middle of June to start new duties.

Signaturing of McCarthy, who has been a brigadier general in U.S. Army Reserve since 1957, brings to 11 the number of producers now on U's roster. Others include William Alland, Robert Arthur, Sy Bartlett, George Englund, George Gollitzen, Ross Hunter, Elliott Kastner, Harry Keller, Arthur Loew and Stanley Shapiro.

Tabor's 'Seeds of April' As Israeli-Yank Feature Under Jacob Hamiri

A feature film utilizing capitalization from both the U.S. and Israel is planned for production this fall by Tabor Films Ltd. Called "Seeds of April," the pic will be lensed in the English language in Israel on a budget of $135,000.

Produced by Israeli-born Jacob Hameiri, who has been studying Yank film production methods in New York for the past year, working in various phases of production at MPO and Filmways, "Seeds" is based on an original story by Israeli writer Uri Ramon called "Around and Around." The screenplay received an award at the International filmscript contest held in Israel in 1960, among the judges for which were Elia Kazan, Vittorio de Sica, Fred Zinnemann and Arthur Krim.

Hameiri plans filming the project with an American director and cameraman, neither of which have been selected yet. It will be the first film produced by Tabor Films and is also the first low-budget, English speaking film to be lensed in Israel in over a decade. No distributor has as yet been set and no attempt is being made to secure one until production is completed.

Financing is coming from private sources in both the States and Israel. Hameiri says. As to why he's going all the way back home to do his first film, he comments that it will be about two to three times cheaper to lense it in Israel than it would be to do the same thing in the U.S. He is also no stranger to film work in Israel having been assistant to the director of the Israeli Government Film Center for several years, participating in the filming of several documentaries.

Now: 'You'll-Love-to-Hum-'Em-Again' Reprise From Metro's Vault Cadets

Special unit at Metro which had been assigned to the release of operettas (such as the Nelson Eddy and Jeannette MacDonald efforts), has been given a new assignment. This unit has been called upon to sell the so-called "Famous Musical Hits" from the MGM backlog. The MGM division, which is headed by Fred J. Schwartz and Si Seadler, also will continue to market "heritage" pix in the backlog—these being historical items.

First feature under the Schwartz-Seadler tandem is to be "Three Little Words" (Harry Ruby and Bert Kalmar), followed by "Till the Clouds Roll By," "Singin' in the Rain" and "Because You're Mine."

Strangely enough, Schwartz and Seadler are in process of selling features in the theatrical market which already have been licensed to television. And yet they're doing well, to the extent that they're operating in the black and this means amortization of costs for prints and advertising.

Pan Arts Sets Sellers

Peter Sellers has been signed by Pan Arts, indie production company of producer Jerry Hellman and director George Roy Hill, to star in "The World of Henry Orient," first P-A pic to be made under firm's multiple film deal with United Artists. Pic, to be filmed entirely in New York starting July 20, has a screenplay by Nunnally Johnson and his daughter Nora Johnson, based on the daughter's original story.

Also planned for Pan Arts production is "A Bullet for Charlemagne," originally scheduled to be filmed in Haiti, but now indefinitely delayed due to the political problems in Hispaniola.

Readying 'Hawaii' At Under 4 Hrs.

Honolulu, May 14.

Harold Mirisch told a Honolulu interviewer that his company's production of "Hawaii" probably will be filmed in Cinerama, with the project budgeted between $17,000,000 and $18,000,000. Nine-month filming schedule will get under way next spring.

Film will follow James A. Michener's novel "as closely as possible." First half of the book, however, will be handled as a prolog in order to stay inside a four-hour film.

Mirisch said he may use Isle warehouses for certain interior shots "so we won't have to go back and forth" to Hollywood.

850-CAR OZONER DUE WITH TRAY CAFETERIA

Raleigh, N. C., May 14.

A new $250,000 drive-in theatre is revealed by Philip Nance, district manager for Consolidated Theatres of Charlotte. The new Forest Drive-In will be located four miles from Raleigh on No. 1 North.

The project will be of a specially engineered ampitheatre design situated in a scenic 20-acre tract with natural surroundings. There will be parking for 850 cars on landscaped ramps.

The new drive-in theatre is expected to be finished by mid-summer. When completed, it will replace the present Forest Drive-In Theatre, which is also located on No. 1 North. It will be owned by F. M. Beddingfield, T. A. Little and J. Francis White of Charlotte who also operate theatres in South Carolina, Virginia, and Georgia.

Peck Pic's Princess

London, May 14.

Princess Margaret headed the list of guests at the British preem of Universal's "To Kill A Mockingbird" at the Odeon Leicester Square Theatre here Thursday (9) night. All proceeds went to the Invalid Children's Society, of which the Princess is president.

Also in attendance was star Gregory Peck. Pic is having its Continental preem at the current Cannes film fest, where it is the official U. S. entry.

'We Will Bury You' Still in Playoff

Columbia Pictures is going ahead with releasing "We Will Bury You," its anti-Communist documentary, despite certain antagonisms which have cropped up. Actually, because of these, especially on the heels of an assault on a theatre attache in Quito, Ecuador, Col is not withdrawing the film as was reported initially.

Feeling at first was that the attendant ruckus resulting from pro- and con-reactions to the Commie feature perhaps wasn't worth the risks entailed. But Col says it has sold the picture in Panama and Central America, and intends pushing it generally. This may have been an about-face by Col sales toppers. Originally, some felt that it might make a better educational, college circuit and kindred 16m markets release, but it is now being sold broadside.

Incidentally, the young man who was taking the print to the theatre when he was attacked in Ecuador is still hospitalized but expected to recover. Local film industry, along with Columbia, staged a benefit for him.

Hope, who pointed out "Critic's Choice" was shot at the WB Hollywood plant, added, "Mr. Warner is a fine gentleman."

Jack Palance is working in familiar surroundings for his current acting assignment in Joseph E. Levine-Carlo Ponti's "Ghost at Noon." One of the sets for the drama, which costars Brigitte Bardot, is a 200-year-old Roman villa which the actor had rented last year until visiting snakes, lizards and such forced his retreat.

Minneapolis TV Times' (a weekly publication) lead article purported to be an "exclusive" interview with Sybil Burton titled "The Cleopatra Triangle—Is It Just Publicity?" Periodical devotes itself ordinarily to all media exclusively. While pre-production film deals are common on Broadway, Off-Broadway seldom is so farsighted (or lucky). Shelley Winters stars in the legit "Snowangel," one of two short plays being opened under the collective title of "Cages."

Paul Anka Film Kudo

Toronto, May 14.

"Lonely Boy," a National Film Board entry dealing with the rise of Canadian-born Paul Anka, was named "Canadian Film of the Year" in the 15th annual competition of Canadian Film Awards. Picture was one of 175 submitted by 44 Canadian producers in 12 categories.

Running 27 mins., b & w NFB film has been shown twice on Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s "Lively Arts" and "Junior Magazine" series on trans-Canada English-language webs; is currently being sought as a short by American and Canadian distributors.

Awards were made in Toronto by joint sponsorship of Canadian Film Institute, the Canada Foundation and the Canadian Assn. for Adult Education, with screenings arranged for the press in the Hotel Westbury here.

"Lonely Boy" was codirected for the NFB by Wolf Koenig and Roman Kroitor, with Tom Daly as producer. Citation read: "For its achievement as a work of art as much as a document on a phenomenon of our times, distinguished by its conception, camera work and editing."

Joe Koenig of National Film Board is headquartering at Contemporary Films in Manhattan seeking U.S. distribution for Anka film.

Hedy's Endless 'Ecstasy,' Immune To Suppression, May Put Back Cuts

Sam Cummins, pioneer exploitation picture impresario whose Jewel Productions still owns "Ecstasy," along with Gustav Machaty, its original Czech producer, may release the picture now that revised censorship attitudes may permit reinstatement of four heretofore censored scenes. Cummins feels that the "what was cut out?" interest in the old Hedy Lamarr-starrer will make another reissuance worthwhile.

This thought was sparked by some Coast interest in possibly remaking "Ecstasy" which became chiefly notable for a nude bathing scene of its star. At that time this caused mittel-Europe munitions tycoon Fritz Mandl (then married to Miss Lamarr) to seek to buy up all prints showing his wife en deshabille. However, he was never successful in acquiring the negative.

Cummins, who resides in New Rochelle and has extensive Florida realty interests, recalled, "We never had a preengagement on "Ecstasy." The courts made ours the best publicity possible because, if some state censor board was not seeking to enjoin the film's exhibition, we'd start a suit against them to generate such publicity."

Mandel's & Metro's Pitches

When Miss Lamarr (nee Hedy Kiesler) was married to Austria munitions maker Fritz Mandel he was allegedly influential at the 1934 Venice Film Festival in downgrading critical attention so that the top prize did not go to "Extase" (original title). Later he offered Cummins $200,000 for all existing prints and when Metro put Miss Lamarr under contract (and changed her name professionally) it also offered Cummins $100,000 to keep the film off the market. Latter was agreeable, at that time, but he recalls, in a Dec. 9, 1933 VARIETY story "that some genius at MGM figured it was silly to plug up all that zany publicity revolving around its newly named star, Hedy Lamarr."

A May 26, 1954 news story in VARIETY pointed up that, after 20 years, Machaty was declared owner of the basic copyright of the controversial Czech film which, until that time, had grossed $3,000,000 in the world market. It was an exploitation quickie when made originally at short money.

Elekta-Film, A.G., a Czech outfit, had certain rights which had expired in 1937, according N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Morris Eder's decision in 1953. During the World War II years there was an impression that, because Czechoslovakia had been "nationalized" by the Nazis, all property rights ceased. It was during this period that one Jack O. Lamont, of Mexico City, had been licensed by the Czech Legation in that city for distribution but finally Cummins' Jewel Productions was ruled the sole distrib.

Cummins has always had two versions available, the other being less expurgated than heretofore allowed in then "usual" American outlets. The amelioration of censorship, viz., the "Connection" and other rulings, may open up new markets.

For a time Irwin S. Joseph's Ecnanjay Films felt it held U. S. distrib rights, via Lamont's licensing thereof.

At that time, with all the censorship fuss, Cummins sought out and found a new market, the Campus Circuit; the college kiddies ate it up under the guise of "cinema art." They and he (Cummins) knew different, but they chose to see esoteric values he wasn't one to give them a battle.

Equity Implements 'Studio Showcase'

Hollywood, May 14.

Six motion picture studios have given initial approval to an Actors' Equity plan to establish live theatre presentations at the studios to provide "showcase" opportunities for actors here, according to the Union's prexy, Ralph Bellamy.

Four Star, Universal, MGM, Columbia, Walt Disney and Desilu have "expressed tremendous interest in the project," noted Bellamy. He said the Actors' Equity Governing board has approved the "Studio Showcase Theatre" plan conceived by actor Tom Ewell.

Michael Ellis, Broadway producer currently with Bucks County Playhouse in Pennsylvania, has been offered post of exec producer to oversee the project, arriving here May 16 for meetings.

Plans would call for any member of the Four A's unions, as well as Equity, to be eligible to participate in the operation without joining Equity.

BUT MAY PARK 'EM ON ROOF

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, May 14.

Steps are being taken to correct the startling omission of motion pictures as an art form from the proposed National Cutural Center here. (Films have nearly always been omitted from cultural promotions around U. S. because latter are beneath the chi-chi crowd.)

George Stevens Jr., head of motion pictures for the U.S. Information Agency, seems to have gotten the ball rolling. He conferred with Roger Stevens (no kin), chairman of the Cultural Center's board of trustees.

Stevens and Stevens apparently saw the situation eye-to-eye, with Roger S. suggesting that a motion picture theatre might easily be added to the roof of the building which has already been designed by Edward Durrell Stone.

The extra cost involved in adding a film theatre could pose a problem among the trustees, since hardly any of the $25,000,000 needed for the original version of the building has been raised. There is not yet an estimate of how much the inclusion of a 300 to 700 seat motion picture theatre would involve, but it is assumed that in terms of $25,000,000 it will be relatively small.

Cultural Center planners and trustees, made up almost exclusively of long-hair buffs, have apparently assumed from the beginning that the legitimate theatre designed by Stone could also be used for screening motion pictures. But George Stevens Jr. looked at the plans and recognized it would be next to impossible to make the legit house double as a film theatre.

As a further insult-by-omission for motion pictures, Cultural Center trustees have authorized publication of a book on the arts, "Creative America," which, it is understood, is an elegant study of culture in the U.S. without a mention of motion pictures. The book is a fund raising stunt. It will carry advertising. Proceeds from that as well as any profit on its sales will go to financing construction of the Center.

LeMoyne Billings, N.Y. advertising man and close friend of President Kennedy, is in charge of the book. He is a trustee.

Discussing the absence of a film theatre, Stevens commented: "It is strange to me that here, where motion pictures were born and developed, they are not considered to be among the arts. It is different in Europe."

More & More TV Personalities Are Showing Up in Feature Pix

Hollywood, May 14.

TV personalities, once scorned and shipped by theatrical film producers on grounds their appearance in series eliminated their b.o. appeal, are being utilized more widely than ever before in motion pictures today.

Where once theatrical film producers would take only the star of a hit series (and even this was done rarely), producers today evidently are aware that tv exposure helps, rather than hurts, as far as b.o. is concerned. Consequently, tv personalities appearing in 13 series this season are or will be working in pix, also six such thesps who will topline skeins next semester.

Thus, tv's two medicos, Dick ("Dr. Kildare") Chamberlain and Vincent ("Ben Casey") Edwards spend their time away from tv before film cameras. Chamberlain a topliner in Metro's "Twilight of Honor," and Edwards in "The Victor."

Others of this season's tv personalities busy in pix: Dick Van Dyke, starred in "Bye, Bye Birdie," next stars in Disney's "Mary Poppins"; Morey Amsterdam of the Van Dyke series, in AIP's "The Beach Party"; Chuck Connors, of "The Rifleman," and starring in the new "Arrest and Trial" series, finished "Flipper," next tails in "Move Over, Darling," at 20th-Fox.

Gene Kelly, to star with Frank Sinatra in "The New Yorkers"; Stanley Holloway of "Our Man Higgins," to be in "My Fair Lady"; Troy Donahue and Connie Stevens of Warners' "Hawaiian Eye," in several WB pix.

Other vidstars of the season now ending working fairly regularly in pix are Joey Bishop, Jack Lord, Fred MacMurray, Marty Ingels, Edmond O'Brien, Nick Adams, Nancy Kulp, a regular in "The Beverly Hillbillies," is in Jerry Lewis' "Who's Minding the Store." So is Ray Walston, who stars next season in a new series, "My Favorite Martian."

Others with new series now working in pix are Imogene Coca, to debut in "Grindl," now in "Under the Yum Yum Tree"; Dan O'Herlihy, "The Travels of Jamie McPheeters," in "Fail-Safe"; Robert Loggia, in "The Robert Taylor

These are pic's final European premieres.

Money on 'Bounty' Not for Downbeat

While Metro's "Mutiny on the Bounty" was a major cause of deficit operations last year, this production nonetheless will be the third largest grosser in the history of the film company, according to Morris Lefko, v.p.-general sales manager. It follows "Gone With the Wind" and "Ben Hur."

Film took in over $8,000,000 on roadshow in slightly over 80 situations plus another $1,000,000 in its first month of general release.

Lefko relates that over 600 dates have been set on a non-reserved seat basis between now and the end of the summer, while roadshow dates still are being booked. Production is continuing as a reserved-seat outing at Loew's State, New York.

"Bounty" despite the red ink thus far is having an impact on MGM fiscalitis. Major setback item is that it cost $19,000,000 to produce.

Eastern Settlement For Directors and Producers; Terms Kept Enshrouded

Climaxing over two months of negotiations, Screen Directors International Guild of New York and the eastern Film Producers Assn. reached agreement on a new three-year contract early Thursday (9) morning after an all-night dickering. Pact, which is retroactive to the March 7 expiration date of the old agreement, provides increased pay and fringe benefits for the Guild.

Exact terms of the settlement aren't revealed and are subject to the approval for the SDIG board and membership. Wage scale increases, increased welfare and pension payments, increased provisions for "staff" directors and stepped-up compensation for freelancers were among demands.

Allied States Hits At No-Adjustment Terms Re 'Bounty' and 'Grimm'

Allied States Assn. Report, in its forthcoming issue, will caution exhibitors about signing contracts for upcoming pix providing for premium percentage terms and extended playing time unless there is a prior agreement to adjust terms if they are not justified by boxoffice performance.

Deals being made on release of "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm," according to Allied, will be same as on "King of Kings," with MGM stating these will be "only firm deals and no adjustments will be made if boxoffice grosses fail to justify the contract terms."

Initial general admission engagements of "Mutiny" are being asked on a minimum three weeks of summer playing times at 60% terms first week, 50% second and 40% third. The 60%, under certain circumstances according to MGM sales manager Morris Lefko, might be adjusted down to 50% but no less for first week. Same terms are on "Grimm."

Allied bulletin states such terms show "it is obvious that the film company has no faith in the ability of the picture to justify its terms and, in effect, is telling the exhibitor 'heads I win, tails you lose.'"

Allied execs, Ben Marcus, chairman of exec committee, and Milton H. London, exec director, and Jack Armstrong have met with MGM proxy Robert O'Brien and Lefko to resolve sales policy difference of opinion.

Long Island Studio Making Progress; Foresee Much More Eastern Shooting

Check on the proposed Long Island Studios, the Michael Myerberg-William Zeckendorf multi-stage project at Roosevelt Field, L. I., reveals that considerable progress has been made. The first stage at the studio is expected to be ready by the end of the month, with three more completed by the end of June.

This per Myerberg whose own film project, the adaptation of Joyce MacIver's anti-headshrinker book "Frog Pond," has now been postponed until October. However, Myerberg expects that the studio will be working before his own production rolls there and says that other individuals besides himself are also planning to use the facilities and that some of these have already been negotiating for properties and use of the studio. Some of these will begin ahead of "Frog Pond," he estimates.

Myerberg points out that there are two sections to the L. I. Studios operation, one covering his own productions and another a leasing company which will rent out stages for indie use. Three additional stages to the five expected to be ready by the end of June should be completed and operational by Nov. 1. And there will be more still. Showman estimates Roosevelt Field will offer the largest cubic footage of space presently available for film-telepix leasing.

Myerberg declares L. I. Studios' will be "as modern as anything the Coast has." Plant will contain the latest in sound equipment. Automation will play a large part in the functioning there.

Showman doesn't feel the Coast plans for Malibu super-studio will effect this eastern plant. In fact, he is predicting an increase in east coast facilities, crystal balling around 100 active modern stages in the east within the next five to ten years. He shrugs off skepticism about the L. I. Studios project saying that he'd rather not answer it in words at present, preferring to wait a few weeks and demonstrate the idea's progress by showing off the actual physical developments.

It is also remembered that Myerberg a while ago worked out a plan with local film unions calling for certain concessions on their parts in return for a financial participation in the results of his production labors. This plan, too, awaits a test but Myerberg is confident that this will be effective. This union participation applies only to Myerberg's own projects and does not effect the work of other producers using the Roosevelt Field facilities.

The Moose on The Moon
(BRITISH—COLOR)

Eyeable space travel sequel to "Rocket That Roared," funny oddly, amusing sequences and performances but comic too prolonged; popular British cast could whip up wicket biz.

London, May 7.

[redacted]

On paper the idea for this sequel to the mythical Duchy of Grand Fenwick (the first was in "Rocket That Roared") sounded a likely gag. An up-to-the-minute jacking of space travel, the H.M. Powers and cosmopolitan politics. But though a long and able cast work hard, the proceedings rarely become as funny as they are intended to be and the jokes often fade unreliably flat. Whereas the first pic was treated largely as satire, in this one some of the political touches are treated as straight-acting and the farcical effect. For this director Richard Lester used the mask of the supremely silly. Michael Pertwee's play is not sufficiently integrated, and the gag situations often having the appearance of being tossed haphazardly into the scene.

That's not to say the pic won't do well and make a lot of new friends as well as reinforcing most of those who enjoyed its predecessor. But the previous one had Peter Sellers playing three very individual characters which was a considerable asset to the fun.

The Duchy of Grand Fenwick, smallest country in the world, is still badly in the red. The wily Prime Minister (Ian Bloody) is worried. Disastrous explosions are happening in the local wine which is Grand Fenwick's main export. And Bloody is anxious to get some groundnuts to put plumbing into the spuds. He decides to send a team from America bidding them the Duchy wants to develop space travel research.

Washington comes through with a million bucks as a gift. The politicos argue that it will develop the image of Yank goodwill, but not be enough for Grand Fenwick to proceed seriously as a science program. Russia climbs on the bandwagon with the gift of a rejject Russian rocket. British characters actually sits on the lawn, apart from sending over a secret agent to find out what's really going on.

From then on it's doublecrosses and counter doublecrosses, bluffing in high places and in Grand Fenwick's glamorous Parliament House. Eventually the Prime Minister's plans are wrecked when scientist David Kossoff hits on the discovery that the local wine makes champion motor fuel. Grand Fenwick gets its rocket into space and in by accident first to get astronauts on to the moon. The machinations that arise from the plotting of ambitious politicians provide fair fun but some of the points needed more sting and less deadpan cameras.

Ron Moody (the original Fagin in "Oliver") hams up his role of the Prime Minister for all that it is worth. But he certainly makes a sterling larger than life figure of the ambitious cunning but foolish "dictator" of Grand Fenwick. Margaret Rutherford as the Baroness Gloriana not unnaturally offers a different interpretation from Sellers in the original. It's a role that doesn't extend Miss Rutherford (Overmuch. Bernard Cribbins as the P.M.'s son with ambitions to be an astronaut is badly cast and can extract little from a role which he appears uncertain to play straight or for yocks. Terry-Thomas has some typical silly-ass scenes as the fatuous "bird watching" British spy and David Kossoff provides his own gentle brand of charm and philosophical comedy in the role of the idealistic scientist.

June Ritchie the flimsy love interest gets lost in the proceedings. But in a long list of supporting players John Phillips the inevitable John Le Mesurier as a British politician; Eric Barker Bobby Mc-Gillon Peter Sallis and Hugh Lloyd more effectively. There is also a one-minute guest appearance by Frankie Howerd as a Fenwickian trying to go to public lavatory which is monumental in its lack of point.

Special effects, Ron Greiner's lively score Wilkie Cooper's Eastmancolor camerawork and the general atmosphere of ultra-gentility charm provided by the Westminster Dignity are all pix in a pic that will probably sell well on title and cast. But it could have been so much more of a comedy hit.

In The Cool Of The Day
(PANAVISION—COLOR)

Stereotyped romantic melodrama. Miss b.o. prospect.

Hollywood, May 1.

Prolific, ill-conceived attempt to revive a style that is an anachronism in this highly-selective, neo-realistic era. John Monks production was written for the screen by Meade Roberts from the novel by Susan Ertz. It concerns the romantic encounter that is briefly consummated during a cruise of Greece by an English book publisher (Peter Finch) who is married and unhappy, and cynical wife (Angela Lansbury), and a fragile American girl (Jane Fonda) who has been sheltered and protected to the point of absurdity by her adoring, but overly-fatherly husband (Arthur Hill). Ultimately the girl, a latter-day Camille, dies of, for some mysterious reason known but will to live, and perishes, leaving her husband angry and her lover dazed with a great memory and gratitude (the wife has run off.)

Most of this romantic schmaltz is set against some interesting Greek scenery, such as the Parthenon and the Acropolis, located in Panavision and Metrocolor by Peter Newbrook. Newbrook photographs quite well, but is less effective with people. For example, he manages to disregard the dancers doing in the course of a Greece folk dance scene, which must be regarded as singular lack of photographic observance. Thomas Stanford's editing is competent, but Fregole Chaplin's musical score is far too obvious, obtrusive and overbearing. A crushing overture to accompany the sudden appearance of the Parthenon on screen seems a little unnecessary. A trite, but commercial, title ditty by Manos Hadjidakis and Lionel Bahbour is sung smoothly over the titles by Nat Cole. It seems inevitable, but one of the Gay Kelly dresses worn by Miss Fonda features unaccountable tears at both armpits. The holes, spotted more than once by the camera, don't appear to have been designed by O.K.

Miss Lansbury gets all the best acting in the film as Finch's wife, overflowed with. She sits up the only fun in the generally sour proceedings. Miss Fonda, sporting a Cleopatra haircut, is all passion and intensity. When she loves, but she really loves. Finch wears one expression. It appears to be boredom, which is understandable.

This drab film was directed by Robert Stevens. Tube.

The Young And The Brave

War drama with boy-and-his-dog approach. Too weak for top slots, will do as lower brother.

Hollywood, May 8.

[redacted]

"The Young and the Brave" is a cross between two staples of the budget picture field—the small-scale war drama and the wolf-and-dog opera. But A. C. Lyles' soldiers-and-schmaltz looks like proper screening to make it a possible main course attraction. It will have to serve Metro as a supporting item.

A trite, listless screenplay by Reine Lay Jr., from a story by Ronald Davidson and Harry M. Slott, describes the efforts of several GI's who have escaped from the Communist regimen of Seoul, the time of the outbreak of the Korean War to get back to their own lines. Their course is plotted by a Korean War (Rhenal Pettit), whose pa and mom have been murdered for befriending them, and an abandoned K-9 Corps police dog who has been rescued and befriended by the boy. They are pursued down the hills prodded by singularly inept squad of North Korean troops.

Some fairly responsible acting has been assembled by Lyles for the screenplay, but these experienced actors have very little dramatic meat to sink their teeth into. The three leading roles are dispatched unconvincingly by Tony Caruso, William Bendix and Richard Jaeckel, and such supporting roles are handled with distinctly less vigorous flair by Brett Halsey, Richard Arlen and John Agar, none of whom have much to do. Pettit shows great potential for a support, but his line delivery is generally unintelligible. The dog is excellent, but looks undernourished to death in the semi-last sequence.

Francis D. Lyon's direction is uneven, a condition arising out of the nature of the script, which alternates between pathetic pretty for scenery of dying and other indescribably silly passages in which the film lurch down Elmwood Boulevard. Ellis Carter's photography is very helpful in the unsophisticated manner in which it conveys and sometimes the movements of those involved, generally from an altitude of a porch. Other staff contributions are reliable, if routine.

Das Feuerschiff
(The Lightship)
(GERMAN)

Berlin, May 14.

"Lightship" leaves as one of the better German pix of the season. Adapted from a tale by the German writer Siegfried Lenz, the philosophical ingredients of the original remain on the surface. But the suspense, nevertheless, is an exciting, technically well-made and well-acted film. This one will please the domestic action trade. Also it has the depth to appeal to the more demanding patron.

Story has three bank robbers capturing a lightship with which they want to escape to Denmark. But the ship's captain isn't willing to weigh anchor for the ship's duty is to stay to warn ships of sands along the coast. The gangsters torture the crew but the captain doesn't give in and pays his courageous stand of duty for his life.

The film very much benefits from outstanding acting performances

Cousin romanced and direct documentary pic, on a French-Canadian island that goes back to old fishing methods and of years ago, is in competition in the main Cannes Film Fest.

Pic, with its on-the-spot rough qualities and directness, has a revealing directness and knowing progression that keeps this of interest throughout.

The hamlet people are shown skimming the fishing bit, and are expertly caught in their simple characters and old fashioned outlook. Multiple directors show a flair for catching these people in revealing talks and actions. The final capture of a big white porpoise, sold to a Yank aquarium, is a fitting culmination to this fascinating production.

It does not overdose this island life of the island but does display an abundance that makes it of its own. In fact, if any thing, it could have made a more efficient pic, a less full pic, in its absorbing account, look at old Canadian fishing and those engaged in it.

It is technically acceptable. If there are some grainy patches Canadian-French accents have had it subtitled in French. Mosk.

Hallelujah The Hills

Wispy comic effort on Hollywood pix that could make for only minor, off-beat revival and but could be worth it.

Cannes, May 14.

[redacted]

Formerly this effort N.Y. film-making group mainly has made dramas. Here opens a newly untried romp that talks in subject, with knowing insight and also pushes in some hardly fun half gags and flashes. This attempt a film that will need careful handling but could be a specialized arty house pic.

There is not much of a story. It is mainly a joyous rush of images by a new director who has animated his chunky and regular run of film. Two down-out, adventurous young American stalwarts vie for the hand of a beauteous young girl only to have her snapped up by a bearded character.

Small town life, the cameras pass in review as the two men camp out and take their turns at wooing the girl or trying to cope with outdoor life in the snow and sun. The girl's father passes his time making crucks and the mother in running the wood girl or in family chores.

Time and continuity are broken with ease, but this always has fresh scenes and sly comic touches that take potshots at American clichés but with an ingratiating boisterous reminiscent of the headier days of pre-war U.S. American comedies.

So the nice boys do not get the girl. They are not at ease in out-door life, and their courting of the girl is sometimes tender, childishly beguiling or just plain inept. The free-wheeling breaks in time, are visually and cutting may make this reminiscent of the French New Wave works, but it has a bright collection of its own supplied by writer-director-editor Adolfas Mekas.

He displays a flair for visual revelation, gags and shenanigans that manage to keep this stimulating throughout. It might throw off some critics or audiences or irritate others in its seeming repetition of scenes of inside hamreplay. The intimations of weird pix culminating with a bow to D. W. Griffith in showing the great ivy door scene of Lillian Gish by Richard Barthelmess in "Way Down East."

Mekas cumulates rather than isolates. The actors are all fresh, and covert with grace and a lack of self-consciousness. Peter M. Beard's scenes of bathing in icy waters plus a race to a river, show a possibly new Douglas Fairbanks in his bravado and showing-do.

Camerawork is clear with editing sharp and the music a counterpoint lively. There are glimpses and subtle satiric shafts against war, conspicuous habits, provincial shyness and self absorption in this modern, bright pic.

Film is different, but it shows that Americans, working on their own, can also turn out personalized films that are economical enough to appeal to specialized audiences. Above all, this has an inventive visual comic flair, but its very shambling will make this a touchy pic and it will need careful placement.

After such films as Truffaut's Les 400 Coups, The Little Fugitive, The Connection and The Savage Eye, this shows that the U.S. group is maturing in its art. Mekas, supported with a good performance by Jonas Mekas and the graphic assistance of Peter Beard, Sheldon Rochlin and others may give them a boost. Mosk.

An Italian worker waits for his family and the film deals with their coming and attempts to fit in. Director-writer Paul Meyer did show a good feeling for revealing scenes and handles the non-actors with sensitivity. A miners boy has a slight fling with a local girl. A younger one discovers the school, local and indulgence of the mine-owned society. In the background is lurking unemployment as the mines are abandoned.

Camerawork is sharp and sensitive to the needs and landscape. Simple incidents build to an absorbing commentary on both of the workers and their life. ITALY'S ONTARIO ONSLAUGHT

Hollywood Reacts to Malibu Idea

Hollywood, May 14.

Favorable reaction to the proposed Malibu Beach 20th-Fox-Columbia Pictures-Metro one-studio-for-all complex was registered last week by guild and studio executives, who saw it as a possible means to lower production costs and make it possible to create more West Coast production.

Significant response to the plan came from George Younglog, head of entertainment financing for Security First National Bank. Noting the bank currently is "loaning more money than ever to motion pictures because the costs have gone up so drastically," Younglog said the proposed plan "should assure continuation of the industry here." He asserted it would "work to everybody's benefit to have a modern studio and should have a marked effect in lowering production costs."

Younglog noted that plan was not fully detailed in the studios' announcement but remarked of current facilities, "this property has tremendous value and its sale would leave no financing problems for a new facility." Banker stressed, "We do want to serve the industry and intend to continue to serve it."

Among execs polled, Allied Artists prexy Steve Broidy enthusiastically allowed "it makes a lot of sense economically and should prove a tremendous factor in getting efficiency and economy without affecting the individual companies involved." He could see no reason "why people would lose jobs," as had been mentioned by some observers earlier, because "the incorporation of facilities and proper use of space would lower cost and be compatible to making more pictures." Broidy stressed, thus, "it would be automatic that if you can make money making pictures here, you'll make them here."

Paramount studio head Jack Karp felt the presentation was "very sketchy". He knew "only what I read in the papers." But "it makes some sense in cutting down operations cost." Karp, however, curtailed comment until he found "how they intend to implement the project." He said it came as a complete surprise.

Jack L. Warner, head of Warner Bros. which is not involved in the project, declined comment on the plan.

Joseph Youngerman, repping the Screen Directors Guild, however, was equally interested in the outcome of the proposition, noting "if it happens it could increasingly lower costs and add to Hollywood production. Producers Guild proxy Lawrence Weingarten, just out of the hospital after surgery, said he knew nothing more than he had heard and would prefer to study the proposal before commenting.

Exhibitors could only profit from the eventuality of such a production facility, according to a reaction from Statewide Theatres head Fred Stein. Theatremen asserted it should "strengthen their position and anything that makes their companies more equally sound must benefit exhibitors with product that can keep their doors open." Stein said he knew the area being considered (the 20th-Fox Malibu ranch) and said "it has plenty of room to house such a production complex."

O'Brien Confirms MGM, Col & 20th Studio Proposal

London, May 14.

Robert H. O'Brien, Metro's topper, hosted a lunch party at the Metro Elstree studios for execs and the press, during his quick London whirl. Whatever had been O'Brien's original message for the scribes was lost as he faced a barrage of questions solely concerning the projected Metro-Col-20th Malibu Beach studio deal.

But, despite much probing, O'Brien would not, and obviously could not, add anything to the exhaustive VARIETY report. He merely confirmed that such "exploratory talks were in progress. He reiterated his faith in Hollywood as the world centre for film production. When faced with the direct question: "This project seems not to be so advanced as we had thought. Could it be that it might never come off?" he countered with: "In the film industry, as in any other, anything can fail to come off until it is completed."

However, O'Brien firmly denied that the fact that he, Darryl F. Zanuck and Abe Schneider were all staying at the same hotel was purely coincidental. "Yes," O'Brien agreed "I expect I shall be meeting up with them, but I probably would have done so anyway. It certainly has no bearing on this matter."

However, later in the day the three top brass issued a joint statement claiming that the new studios will enable Hollywood to compete more effectively in today's world markets and prove that it remains the capital of international entertainment.

Steady-to-Portside Ad Policy by Columbia Pics For 'Bye, Bye Birdie'

Columbia will wind up spending over $1,500,000 for advertising for "Bye Bye Birdie." This kind of outlay represents a departure from past policy, states Robert S. Ferguson, ad-pub v.p. In earlier days, related Ferguson, a big ad splurge would be made on a picture at the outset of its marketing and, then, having established the feature, the company would "lay low"—that is, hold back on the ad expenditures.

Now Col is continuing the campaign, theorizing that the more that's invested in paid-for space the greater the benefits. Ferguson reasons there's no ceiling on the b.o. when it's firmly established that the public wants a certain pic, as in the case with "Birdie," and the bigger the ad spread the bigger the income.

Col already has shelled out $150,000 for the ads in New York, unusually high, said Ferguson. The overall splurge will be second highest in Col history, second to "Lawrence of Arabia."

Something extra was spent in Gotham because of the newspaper strike. Company committed itself to subway cards and poster displays, not knowing the papers would be back in business.

ANTITRUSTER COAL: A BID FOR 'PEKING'

San Francisco, May 14.

United California Theatres, operators of Alexandria and Coronet theatres, filed antitrust suit in Federal court here against downtown film houses and distributors. Defendants are Allied Artists and Samuel Bronston Productions, with four chains: AB-Paramount (Paramount, St. Francis); RKO (Golden Gate); Loew's (Warfield); North Coast Theatres Corp. (United Artists, Esquire). Suit charges they illegally conspired to split up showing of first-runs and keep them on Market Street.

Injunction and damages are sought, plus opportunity to bid on "55 Days at Peking," apparently basis of suit.

IT'S 136 FILMS VS. YANKS 202

By ROBERT McVAY

Toronto, May 14.

American-made films are only 32.9% of Ontario's import—lowest in the history of the motion picture industry. Italian and German films experienced a 50% increase.

This revelation was highlight of the annual report of the Board of Censors, ending March 31 this year, submitted by O. J. Silverthorne, director, to Bryan Calthcart, head of the Department of Travel and Publicity, under whose aegis film activities fall.

(Approximately 40% of Canada's film rental income is earned in Ontario, which has some one-third of Canada's population).

Looking out in his fiscal report, Silverthorne charged that certain producers, directors and writers abused their new freedom—which came about through the weakening of censorship in the U. S. by the U. S. Supreme Court and by the liberalized Hollywood Production Code. He declared the use of brutality, sex and violence elements went beyond the necessities of dramatic realism.

Theory of Cuts

"Such perversion of art for sensational purposes is difficult to deal with, for it frequently runs throughout the fabric of the plot," he said. "In such cases, the censorship board makes eliminations rather than rejections, as banning any film today only arouses controversy over the individual's freedom of choice and brings the film in question a publicity value it does not deserve."

Mentioning that the motion picture has now moved into a freedom of expression previously denied it by various forms of censorship, he pointed out the fact that public opinion has changed considerably over the past years; that the same freedom of expres-

Manhattan Shoots On Malibu Studio

Projected plans on the part of Metro, 20th-Fox and Columbia to jointly operate one studio in Malibu Beach, California, on a pro rata landlord basis, as detailed last week, set off an avalanche of trade speculation and second guessing in New York, too.

Said one important eastern circuit executive: "They emasculated us almost 20 years ago, those film companies, because we were associated with them and now they themselves are handing together."

He added: "But I hope it works if it means more pictures for the exhibitors. Heaven knows we need them. But how long will it take? Three years? Or five or ten?"

Other thoughts heard around Gotham:

Union people are inclining to the belief that one studio instead of three will cut down on employment. The answer to this, from one film company president, is that the troika operation via efficiency and modernization will stimulate production and employment. Actually, it was said, there will be more pictures made at the one studio, which replaces the three, than had been made at the three.

The theory in this instance is that negative cost savings will accrue not only to the three but "outsiders" as well and this will encourage the making of a great number of pictures.

Heard from numerous responsible people in the trade: It's been a long time coming.

The thought here is that Metro and 20th have actively discussed a studio merger, as also have Col and 20th. This goes back a few years and the man behind it was former 20th president Spyros P. Skouras.

But they just couldn't see eye to eye, and now apparently they can.

All Present Thinking Says Film Industry Out of World's Fair

U Books TWA Solid

The birds is taking wing. All of the first-run films being used by TWA for its in-flight film showings for the month of May are Universal releases, among them Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds." Other pix to be shown are "The Ugly American" and "Tammy and the Doctor."

The current one-month monopoly by one picture company is the first time such a thing has occurred, incidentally, and U and TWA are tieing this into special displays to be used at ticket offices throughout the world.

It now seems highly doubtful that the Motion Picture Assn. of America will be participating in any way in the 1964 New York World's Fair. This is implicit in a report from last week's meeting of the MPAA's ad-pub directors' committee to the effect that after studying various proposals, committee decided the "industry should move very carefully and only consider participation" if it could present "a spectacular exhibit" that would reflect credit on the industry.

Committee members decided that since the film industry would be competing with very expensive exhibits from other industries, it might be better not to participate if it could not participate on a comparable level.

The ad-pub committee, turning to another area, has proposed that a portion of prez Eric Johnston's upcoming $100,000 pubrel program include special material for a "New Look of Hollywood" campaign for radio, tv and syndicated columnists. Idea would be to film and record special short featurettes, utilizing Johnston, painting up various aspects of the "new" Hollywood.

Ad-pub committee also has recommended the sponsoring of an annual award to recognize those newspapers which do a good job on improving "the content and appearance" of their motion picture pages.

Partial Restoration Of Fund Slash Given San Francisco's Fest

San Francisco, May 14.

San Francisco Film Festival will get $16,000 in aid this year from the hotel tax fund which supports local cultural enterprises. This is half what it got last year but ends the recommendation that it get nothing. The big goosing in the face had been suggested by a band of local financiers but their recommendations were ignored by Chief Administrative Officer Sherman Duckel.

Chairman of the Film Festival Board of Directors, Harold Zellerbach, cabled Duckel from Italy advising him to ignore the economy-minded consultants headed by his brother, J. D. Zellerbach. Duckel accepted 50% of the hint.

Duckel decided against giving the symphony and opera the $100,000 each that the Zellerbach committee recommended, knocking them down to $80,000 each (still $5,000 better than they did last year).

Frisco Ballet, which piled up a big deficit on tour this year, had sought $71,000; Duckel had suggested $30,000, the Z committee recommended $20,000; but Duckel stood pat. This may mean the Ballet will have to cancel performances scheduled for 1964 in the Lincoln Center in New York, according to James Ludwig, president of the Ballet Guild (and of Saks Fifth Avenue here).

Spring Opera, whose current season is drawing raves—and deficits, as usual with opera—is a loser; Duckel went along with the committee's suggestion of its yearly $5,000, rather than the $15,000 he originally earmarked.

Actor's Workshop gets its annual $10,000, a number of smaller groups come out about as usual, and two new ones make the list for small amounts.

The hotel tax is expected to raise a little over $1,000,000 this year, of which $205,000—a reduced amount—goes to the Convention and Visitors Bureau for ballyhoo. The balance goes into a special fund as bait for national political conventions.

RALKE COUNTERSUES; DISNEY 'SECRETS' FUSS

Los Angeles, May 14.

William C. Ralke, local audio-visual equipment designer, filed a $1,500,000 countersuit Friday (10) against Walt Disney Productions charging "unfair competition." Suit, filed in L.A. superior court, was response by Ralke to alleged trade secret suit brought by Disney last week against Ralke and two firms he heads, Ralke Co. Inc. and Western Audio Visual Engineering & Sales Co.

Countersuit accused Disney of "harrassing, intimidating and alienating Ralke's current and potential customers." Charge was also made that "Disney had attempted in at least one instance to induce a Ralke customer to breach his contract."

Landau's Casting His 'Fool' Killers' With Newcomers

Having previously stated the intention of working new talent into his pix whenever possible, Ely Landau has cast a string of film newcomers into his "The Fool Killer," which begins lensing this week in Tennessee. Salome Jens, Dana Elcar, David Doyle, Jean Stapleton, Charlotte Jones and Edwin Wolfe have been added to the cast of the pic.

Previously set were Anthony Perkins in lead and Hal Holbrook of Mark Twain impersonation fame who, like many of the others, will be making his film debut in the Jose Quintero-directed project. "I believe that in casting well-known names for certain film roles, each name personality imposes an element of expectancy on an audience—a preconception that must always, to a degree, lessen the excitement of genuine discovery," Landau commented on the casting.

Eddie Albert Jr., 12-year-old son of the actor, gets his first acting role in the Ely Landau production of "Fool Killer," which began lensing in Knoxville, Tenn., this week under the direction of Jose Quintero.

Boy will get featured billing. He has had no previous experience in any medium.

CHINESE SHARES A FILM

Believed First Time Since 1920s—It's 'A Mockingbird'

Los Angeles, May 14.

For what is reported the first time in its history dating back into the '20s the Chinese Theatre on Hollywood Blvd. has departed from its policy of operating as an exclusive-run house and this week joined the city-wide multiple booking of "To Kill a Mockingbird."

Fox West Coast Theatres, which owns situation, reportedly decided to make move when poor reaction to "I Could Go On Singing" caused sudden yanking of Judy Garland starrer and no other suitable film was available.

B'way Biz Sluggish; 'Sanjuro' Socko $9,000; 'Court' 16G, 'Fox' Mighty 7G; 'Birdie' 12½G, 'Ugly' Attractive 31G

Not helped by any new, big pictures, or with the change to much cooler weather over the past weekend, Broadway first-run trade is mostly on the skids this round. Rain last Friday night and also intermittently on Saturday cooled the atmosphere but did not warm up biz at the deluxers as had been expected. Newcomers mostly are at smaller or arty theatres.

"Day in Court" is doing nicely at the Embassy but is not shaping up too well at the arty Trans-Lux 52d Street. Total for the two houses likely will be less than $16,000 in initial week. "Sanjuro," of which much has been expected, landed socko $9,000 on opening at the tiny Tobo Cinema, by far the best showing ever at this theatre.

Opening round of "Sparrows Can't Sing" hit a hangup $11,000 at the Cinema One. "Black Fox" still is great $7,100 for second stanza at the handbox Carnegie Hall Cinema after an equally smash opening week.

Biggest coin total will go to "Bye Bye Birdie" with stageshow at the Music Hall where a good $122,000 is in prospect for the current (6th) session. It will be replaced tomorrow (Thurs.) by "Spencer's Mountain" and new stageshow. This figure would give "Birdie" a total gross of $1,057,000 for the six weeks.

"Come Fly With Me" is winding its second round with slight $16,-000 or near at the Paramount. "Love Is a Ball" is down to less $14,000 or less in third stanza daydating the Astor and Trans-Lux 85th Street.

"Ugly American" looks to hold with smash $31,000 in 5th session, daydating the Rivoli and Trans-Lux East. "The Birds" is heading for a big $21,000 daydating the Palace and Sutton in seventh week.

Both the Victoria and DeMille have oldies. The latter opens "Yellow Canary" today (Wed.).

"Lawrence of Arabia" held with smash $20,000 in 21st stanza at the Criterion while "How West Was Won" wound its seventh week at the Cinerama with a socko $26,000. These two pix paced the hardticketers, all of them showing the effects of the general downbeat this session.

Estimates for This Week

Minneapolis, May 14.

There are numerous newcomers again currently, but the fresh arrivals, with a few exceptions, are displaying limited b.o. appeal. Typical of the product situation is the plight of the Lyric, ordinarily a Loop solo feature important first-run. Last week, it had a twin bill of lesser pix; this stanza finds it with another dual bill but made up of reissues.

Among the newies, "Nine Hours to Rama" is sad at Century while "Dr. No" likely will be okay for first at Orpheum. Best showing is being made by "How West Was Won," mighty in ninth round. "Lawrence of Arabia" looks brisk in fourth. "To Kill a Mockingbird" still is big in 12th session. "Birds" and "Divorce, Italian Style" still are displaying exceptional pulling power.

Firstruns are spotty here this session, biz being down from recent week's strong showings and only a few money pix are in sight. Trade Still Soft; 'West' Continues No. 1, 'Arabia' 2d, 'Ugly' 3d, 'Birds' 4th; 'Bounty,' 'Mockingbird' Next

Key city exhibitors currently are suffering from a dearth of strong product and seasonable factors. Some key cities covered by VARIETY received a break in that the weekend weather tended to discourage any treks to the outdoors. But mostly it was a case of potential patrons heading for other forms of entertainment, and passing up the cinema.

"How West Was Won" (MGM) (13th wk) still is in No. 1 spot, just as it was a week ago. "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (18th wk), which was second last round, again is landing second money.

"Ugly American" (U) (5th wk) is capturing third position, same as a week ago. "The Birds" (U) (7th wk) will wind up in fourth spot, the place it held last round. "Mutiny on Bounty" (MGM) (21st wk) is taking fifth place. It was sixth a week ago.

"To Kill Mockingbird" (U) (20th wk), fifth a week ago, is capturing sixth position. "Come Fly With Me" (MGM) (3d wk) will be seventh. This is an improvement over a week ago. "Longest Day" (20th) (29th wk) is finishing eighth.

"Free, White and 21" (AI) (3d wk), fairly new pic, is capturing ninth spot. "The Balcony" (Cont) (4th wk) will take 10th place. "David and Lisa" (Cont) (19th wk) is finishing 11th while "Wrong Arm of Law" (3d wk), also from Continental, rounds out the Top 12 films.

"Four Days of Naples" (MGM), fairly new, and "Sundays and Cybele" (Davis) are the two runnerup pix.

"Yellow Canary" (20th), just getting started, is not living up to hopes currently. "Dr. No" (UA), another newie, is sturdy in K. C. and fine in Denver. "The Trial" (Astor), also new, shapes hep in Chi and big in Philly but is only okay in Milwaukee and dull in L.A.

"Black Fox" (Capri) is smash in second session in N. Y. "No Exit" (Indie), lusty in Chi and Minneapolis, shapes nice in Cincy. "Les Nymphettes" (Indie) looks boff in Washington.

"White Stallions" (BV) is fine in Detroit and Philly. "I Could Go on Singing" (UA) is rated mild in Boston and drab in Buffalo.

"Critic's Choice" (WB), good in Chi, looks wow in Toronto and Boston. "Nine Hours To Rama" (20th) continues slow, both in Minneapolis and L.A.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

Civil Libertarians' Disapproval of 'Classification' Drive on Features

Hollywood, May 14.

Under the premise that "censorship is not a proper area for Governmental intervention," the American Civil Liberties Union proposes increased attack on motion picture classification rulings that have been cropping up throughout the nation.

Following national bulletins to its membership, pointing out the increased film classification activities in various states and asking members to prepare to fight such situations, ACLU Southern California censorship committee chairman Nathan Scholchet stated that he and other local members of the group are prepared to speak against censorship in areas from social-civic organizations, to the City Council and the State Legislature.

Scholchet expanded on the national ACLU program, noting "The battle now will be fought in the area of classification, where it has gone in view of the cases lost for outright censorship." He stressed the increase in "attempts to perpetuate motion picture censorship through the back door of 'classification'" and said his organization stands ready to fully fight such activities.

Proponents of censorship, according to an ACLU research program, are sponsoring bills to require stamps or "suitable" or "unsuitable" for young persons on films in more and more communities. Union noted legislatures in New York, Missouri and New Jersey that have had such proposals presented. Similarly, Seattle has enacted such a classification ordinance, along with Detroit suburb of Inkster. Bills, however, were defeated in Marietta, Ga., and Oakwood, Ohio. New York legislature, in discussing such a bill, ended without action being taken.

The 1963 session of New York's legislature considered a bill identical to one defeated last year. Such bill would provide for labeling films for elementary and secondary school pupils. A licensing board would decide if film showed nudity, sexual relationships, violence, horror, brutality, crime, delinquency, drug addiction or disrespect for duly constituted authority in a manner "or to an extent considered contrary to the proper emotional, ethical and moral training of such children." In Missouri, legislature was asked to require exhibs to make their own decisions, theatremen to be "instructed to use as a standard what a reasonable prudent person in the community would recommend."

Scholchet, in stressing the ACLU's position in the matter, asserted "no valid social study has established a causal connection in seeing a film and engaging in anti-social activity." He said the organization feels "as long as they are not forced on the community and people voluntarily go to see them it should be left to the choice of the adult or, in the case of a child, to his parents." He charged, "Local or national Government censorship will develop down to the hands of some committee and there is no group I have experience to whom I would want to entrust a problem of taste." Additionally, Scholchet cautioned, "Government censorship in films is bound to go from this area to the area of politics and challenge the freedom of the press and communication guaranteed by the First Amendment of our Federal Constitution."

Overall ACLU program points to additional objections. Among them are "establishment of a censorship bureaucracy the members of which will, of necessity, utilize individually more or less secretive criteria in making determinations; the necessity of subjecting all movies to prior censorship, the scope of the material to be classified, and the difficulty of choosing censors."

Madrid, May 14.

U.S.A. will be represented at the June 8-17 International Film Festival at San Sebastian with "Days of Wine and Roses." Lee Remick and director Blake Edwards are scheduled to attend Golden Seashell. Contestants also entered are Germany, Argentina, Bulgaria, Denmark, Spain, France, Hungary, England, Italy, Mexico, Czechoslovakia, Israel, Iraq, Poland, Korea, and Rumania.

A special film "culture" series will be dedicated to the bulls this year and will group a variety of celluloid to include the Rudolph Valentino starrer, "Blood and Sand"; an early Max Linder comedy called "Max the Toreador," "La Corrida," by French director Herve Bramberger; the Mexican feature "Torero," "Black Bull," directed by Benito Alazraki, and two Spanish Toro classics, "Sol y Sombra" and "Currito of the Cross." In addition, the series will feature an Abel Gance documentary, "Manolete," and a recent Spanish film starring one of Spain's most popular contemporary toreros, El Cordobes, in "Learning to Die."

Screen Publicists Sign Metro, Face Screen Gems; Seniors Least Pay: $180

Screen Publicists Guild has wrapped up its 1963 round of contract negotiations, having ratified a new two-year agreement with Metro in the pattern of settlements reached within the past month with United Artists, Columbia, Warner Bros., 20th Century-Fox and Universal.

As in the case of the other settlements, the Guild package deal with Metro includes $12 weekly wage increases spread over two years, raising minima so that senior publicists get at least $180 weekly at the beginning of the second year. Improvement in job security is secured through notification of layoff time in the transfer clause. Reduction of tolerance hours (overtime without increased pay) from four-and-a-half hours to four weekly and elimination of all weekend tolerance by the establishment of overtime pay for such work are other gains.

ROSENFELD TALKING WITH POE AND AGENCY

Columbia veep Jonas Rosenfield Jr., whose resignation becomes effective June 1, yesterday (Tues.) had talks with both 20th-Fox exec veep Seymour Poe and with William H. Schneider, who heads his own advertising consultancy firm. Rosenfield, who returned from a Jamaica holiday Monday (13), emphasized that he hasn't yet made any decisions and that possibilities extend beyond the 20th and Schneider interests.

It seems unlikely that because of the comparatively small personnel structure of the Schneider company (which includes 20th as a client) that he will go in that direction. Among Schneider's other film clients is Samuel Bronston Productions. Talks re an affiliation with 20th are expected to continue, however. While Rosenfield's resignation is not effective until the end of the month, he is free to make another deal sooner, if he so chooses.

Poe's Asiatic Jet Whirl

Twentieth-Fox executive vice-president Seymour Poe leaves New York May 23 for his look-see of company operations in Australia and New Zealand.

Exec plans to be back about June 8, in time for the June 12 world preem of "Cleopatra" at the Rivoli in New York.

Dusk-to-Dawn Drive-In

Minneapolis, May 14.

Ultimate in "a lot for the money" in screen entertainment here was reached when the Flying Cloud outdoor theatre offered a "Dusk to Dawn" festival comprising five full-length and one 25-minute features for one file adult admission, the regular price, and children under 12 admitted free.

Pictures were "Rome Adventure" (WB), "The Interns" (Col), "Perfect Furlough" (U), "Adventures of Road Runners" (WB), "Paris Blues" (UA) and "Hound of Baskerville" (UA).

MCA's Quarterly Earnings; for First Time Consolidated

Consolidated unaudited net earnings of MCA Inc. for the first quarter ending March 31, 1963, amounted to $3,137,786 which after preferred dividends were equal to 63c per share on the 4,310,000 outstanding shares of common stock, according to MCA board chairman Jules C. Stein.

Figures include on a "pooling of interests" basis, MCA's interest the reported consolidated net earnings of Decca Records for the same quarter period.

This is the first year that a consolidated earning's statement is being given, therefore no comparable figures for last year are available. However, MCA's earnings (sans Decca) for the comparable period of last year was $4,288,841 or $1.04 per share which included a non-recurring item equivalent to 46c per share.

Ryan Scripts, Produces 'Heart Is Lonely Hunter' For Ely Landau Slate

Ely Landau is adding a sixth property to his production slate for 1963. He is dickering for the screen rights to Carson MacCullers' "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter." Production should roll in mid-August.

Thomas Ryan, from whom Landau is buying the rights, will do screenplay and produce. As yet, no director or players set. This project replaces deal for Bob Joseph's "Third Secret" which caved in.

Beginning lensing this week in Knoxville is "Fool Killer" and upcoming are "Forbidden Area," "The Pawnbroker," "Madwoman of Chillot" and "Leonardo Da Vinci." The latter two will be lensed in Europe while the others will be done in the eastern U.S., with interiors in New York. Landau's operation is Gotham-based and his distribution arrangements are not a prerequisite in that the pix are privately financed outside the area of major studio money.

Landau recently made deals to take over two Gotham 57th Street houses, the Trans Lux Normandie and the Little Carnegie. He now says he's contemplating the purchase of still more houses, both in New York and elsewhere. Part of his plans in this area include the field of theatre tv, his background including exec leadership in National Television Associates and the spearheading of the "Play of the Week" series.

Up-Rank Gunsberg

Sheldon Gunsberg, veepee of Walter Reade-Sterling, has been upped to the exec veepeeship.

Gunsberg joined Walter Reade Theatres eight years ago, and since that time has served in various capacities, including ad-pub veep for both Reade's Continental Distributing Inc. and Reade Theatres. Three years ago, he was named exec assistant to Walter Reade Jr., chairman of Reade-Sterling.

Ritt's 'Hud' Huddling

Martin Ritt arrived in New York from Hollywood this week for a week of interviews.

He just directed "Hud" for Paramount and is anxious to talk about it.

Same 'Art' Vs. 'Business' Cleavage Expressed in Fuss of 'Les Abysses'

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 14.

A Cannes Film Festival always has some sort of hassle. This year it is within the French film industry itself. Even before the start of the festival there was a split between those who feel Cannes is a market and showcase and those for whom it is for unveiling and dedicating the more unusual in films. It boils down to that old battle between art and biz.

Commercial producers of Paris blew up this year when the Cannes Selection Committee picked a film that had been made without getting a Centre Du Cinema visa or having submitted its script to the pre-censor board. Film "Les Abysses" (The Depths) riled French Film Producers Assn. head Francis Cosne when it was chosen as the official French entry.

Cosne maintained it was not right to choose such a film when regular producers have to go through channels. He also blasted the film as something that could impugn French film prestige at Cannes. The producer-director of the pic, Nico Papatakis, promptly slapped a suit on Cosne for $100,000 for having "besmirched" his film and intimated it was made outside the rules.

Actually a producer does not have to submit his script but it can save him future censor troubles. The producers want to send more of their product to Cannes and benefit from the resultant publicity. They feel art pix are still too limited.

But it has always been clear that the intensive focus on films at festivals calls for the different and deep rather than the usual mass product. Many times quality and commerce are not disparate and a pic can have both, like "La Dolce Vita" and others.

The festival authorities try to mix art and biz via stars and out of competition showings of blockbusters or big scale films. They also try to get the best in films to give the fest a backbone. But they too are still not ready to give too much space to the too offbeat since the evening dress crowds are still to be contended with. Two "invited" French films are more in the commercial mould via two big companies and star names, Gaumont's "Carambolages" (Caroms), directed by Marcel Bluwal, is a macabre comedy and Franco London's "Le Rat D'Amerique" (American Adventurer), directed by Jean Gabriel Albicocco, is an adventure tale of a penniless Frenchman in South America. It remains to be seen how they stack up in worth to the disputed Papatakis pic.

Out of the fracas grew the last minute substitution of "Amerique" for another film singled out by the Selection Committee "Hitler, Connais Pas" (Hitler, Never Heard of Him) directed by Bertrand Blier. However this interview pic, looking at French youth, was felt too special for fest airing finally and was replaced by "Amerique."

However the producers of the latter pic insisted, as did fest officials, that "Hitler" be shown in a non-competing spot during the fest as a specially invited pic by the French Film Writer Assoc. So this straightened out a budding new battle.

Fabian Rates Schenectady Overseated; Selling Plaza

Schenectady, May 14.

The Plaza, one of the largest theatres in Schenectady, now closed, will not reopen, at least under its present management. Fabian Theatres have operated the 2,500-seat Plaza since it opened in 1931 and, according to Ed Fabian, the circuit is planning to sell the house which is one of three it operates in Schenectady.

"There is simply one theatre too many," said Fabian, who is planning a trip to the city later this week to try to arrange for the Plaza's sale as a commercial property. "This kind of thing has been happening all over the country," he noted. A local radio station, WSNY, also maintains studios and offices in the Plaza Building.

Fabian circuit, of which Fabian is an exec, operates the Proctor's and State in the city. Latter is a smaller, older situation and both are located on State Street, Schenectady's main drag. The Plaza is situated at the top of State Street hill.

Cannes' Critics Section

Cannes, May 14.

Critics Section, officially-encouraged adjunct of the Cannes Film Festival is presenting seven features and a coupling of two documentaries in the 25-cent 300-seat theatre in the Film Palace here. They were selected by a committee of the French Film & Television Critics Assn. including foreigners resident in Paris. Critics section is an outgrowth of the attention created when "The Connection" showed here a couple of years ago, attracting "progressive" enthusiasm for the American junkies and their vocabulary.

Thus the Critics Section is a sort of "week" within the fortnight of the festival proper. The films are separately reviewed in this issue of VARIETY.

Boston, May 14.

Plans for the third Boston International Film Festival, June 13-23, are being set to include a Telstar telecast, George Papadopoulo, festival director, said this week.

The Telstar coverage of opening festivities is being arranged through New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., he said, beamed to foreign countries whose films will be shown in the festival to be held at Massachusetts Institute of Technology (Kresge) Auditorium in Cambridge.

There will be entries from 22 countries, France, Germany, Italy, England, Russia, Yugoslavia, Greece, Hungary, United Arab Republic, Canada, Australia, Argentina, Brazil, Israel, Mexico, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Poland, India, Pakistan, Netherlands, Sweden.

Papadopoulo said he is trying to get Cantinflas from Mexico to be master of ceremonies and present the citations to the film winners.

There will be three categories in the third annual festival: International Cinema, feature films, defined as any film of more than 90 mins.; short features—defined as any film of 40-90 mins.; c., shorts—defined as any film under 40 mins. New American Cinema. Defined as any feature film made by indie directors and-or producer of the nouveau garde of American art film. Film Maker's Showcase. Defined as any film made by independent directors and-or producers.

"The festival is not a contest," the director said. "Films do not compete with each other, but are awarded Citations for Specific Excellence in recognition of outstanding film achievement. Every film shown in the festival will have received at least two of these citations, but an exceptional film may receive several for special quality in any of the various aspects of film making."

The festival has two selection committees, one for features and one for short features. In addition to these, the festival awards jury will give the Paul Revere silver bowl for "general excellence."

ances. James Robertson Justice, a British actor, turns in a memorable performance as the captain who sticks to his duty. Helmut Wildt portrays the intellectual gangster boss in an impressive manner. Members of the crew are well chosen as to type.

Hungarian-born Spanish director Ladislao Vajda, who's been making mostly comedies and family-type pix in recent years, proves that he's able to create hard-hitting stuff too. This one is often remarkably brutal but the brutality is never out of place. The womanless pic keeps one spellbound. This German pic may easily sled into foreign markets, the more so as the Columbia has it for release.

Venusberg (GERMAN)

Berlin, May 7.

[illegible]

This one may be given a number of superlatives: It's the most unusual but also most confusing and —more or less—most ridiculous German film of the season. Film is unusual inasmuch as no man appears in it. It's also unusual, subjectwise. The seven pretty girls that get together in a lonely holiday house up in the snowy mountains talk about what they think of love and men and whether they are happy. The talks are remarkably frank and very intimate, and often very suggestive.

The pic is confusing inasmuch as the viewer is never quite certain whether Rolf Thiele, the director, means it all seriously or is just trying to pull his (the viewer's) leg. Both is possible and much is involuntarily funny. Thiele has definitely gone overboard with his predilection for erotical themes. Most of the cinemagoers will find his latest creation ridiculous. Moreover, it's a rather dull picture.

Although "Venusberg" has received "valuable publicity" via the trouble it had with the domestic Censorship Board (many suggestive dialog scenes and nude sequences had to be cut before it was given the greenlight), its commercial prospects appear rather doubtful. Pic is too blase to make an impression and may only interest the curio-seekers. Some export chances may be granted.

What goes for Thiele applies to his cameraman, Wolf Wirth. He too went overboard and lost control. Too much fancy work along the lensing line.

It may be interesting to add that none of the seven girls are of German nationality. Thiele picked Jane Axel, Monica Flodquist and Christina Granberg in Sweden. Marisa Mell and Ina Duscha are Austrians. Claudia Marus hails from Italy while Nicole Badal, who has already appeared in some Thiele films, comes from Holland. All seven girls, incidentally, are lookers. And that's one of the few assets about this film.

Ambitious but only sometimes intriguing psychological study set in African Somaliland. Exotic setting and some exploitable angles are a help, but pic will need plenty of sales assistance for interesting returns. Chancy export quantity.

A successful monkey trader, Enrico Mainardi, becomes involved with two women, a frigid black beauty and an equally unresponding white girl while being equally thrown off balance by the behavior of two male pals both abnormal in different ways. The resultant clash in standards and thoughts throws the hero off his path until a final shock throws some sense into him. This seems to define a new hope in life.

Saddled with a very literary script and uninventive direction, even such able thesps as Salerno and Albertazzi fail to give their best. But one senses intelligent dedication on the part of all involved, working as they did under trying on-the-spot African conditions. There is also too much off-screen commentary by the brooding hero. Technical credits are excellent.

Cannes, May 14.

Wilfrid Baumgartner, an ex-French Minister of Finance, is enjoying his Cannes Fest jury stint and says he has always been interested in films and, in fact, was the first politico to vote film aid before the war via special credit loans . . . The entries, official and in competition, from Cuba and Rumania were directed by Frenchmen with the latter classified as a Rumanian-French coproduction. Cuban pic "El Otro Cristobal" (The Other Christobal) was written and directed by Armand Gatti, a journalist and playwright who has one French pic "The Enclosure" to his credit. "Enclosure" was a look at a concentration camp and won a prize at the Moscow Festival in 1961. The Rumanian "Codine" was directed by Henri Colpi who shared the Golden Palm in 1961 at the Cannes Fest for his "A Long Absence" and Luis Bunuel's "Viridiana." This is the first time Cuba is repped at Cannes . . . If Cuba is in the fest, Red China and East Germany are still out.

Carlton Hotel exposing a special fest art exhibition culled from paintings of film personalities, Pierre Brasseur, Michele Morgan, Ludmilla Tcherina, Elsa Martinelli and Robert Anderson, all French . . . A side fest unspooled via the Festival of Red Cross Films with 30 nations involved with films from 20 minutes to one hour on Red Cross activities. It ran from May 9-12 with morning showings at the small Film Palace Theatre. Top prize is the Golden Flame, and a special one, the Prize of the French President of the Republic, will be handed out at the end of the fest . . . Lindsay Anderson, director of the official British entry "This Sporting Life" (Rank), used to be a regular visitor at the fest in his capacity as a film critic. He asserted in 1956 that he would no longer attend Cannes except with his first feature. Now he is in with it. Continental has rights for U.S. . . . 100th Anni of the Cannes-Marseille railroad line was worked in with the fest visitors taking part in a trip in an old train for part of the way during the one day off of screenings.

Rene Thevenet replaced the late Emile Natan as head of the Film Market which undertakes showings of features in town hardtops for all prospective buyers and the press. Underwritten by the festival itself and the French Film Producer Syndicate, any filmmaker can have his pic shown for nothing with publicity handed out by the organizers. Films must be less than a year old and be of some intrinsic worth before enjoying these benefits . . . Though there are such pic dubbing experts as Peter Riethof and Leo Lax present, festivals are not so partial to dubbing and any dubbed actor can not get a thesp prize. Thus Burt Lancaster and French thesp Alain Delon are out of the running in the Italo entry "The Leopard." Actually most Italo pix are shot silent and dubbed, but this is acceptable since actors dub themselves.

Add another French-directed pic under other colors via the entry from Gabon, Africa "La Cage" with Marina Vlady and directed by Robert Darene . . . Ben Kadish, Seven Arts producer, feeling proprietary about "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" for he had tried to sell it to Seven Arts some time ago. He even threatened to quit if they did not accept the Robert Aldrich package. All turned out well and he is now here watching his "Baby" compete in an international film fest.

Twist on a familiar gag is going round is about an alcoholic who attends a pic with a strong anti-alcoholic theme. He gets home and tells his wife that he is giving it up. "Drinking?" she asks. "No films," he answers . . . Romy Schneider huddling with director H. G. Clouzot but neither is talking as to whether they have film plans . . . Cannes sought an Israeli pic "The Cellar" but it never showed up. With practically one character in it, Simon Israeli, and also written and directed by him, it seems the theme did not sit right with Tel Aviv officials. About a returning prisoner from a concentration camp after the war who procrastinates in avenging his family on the people who turned them in.

Christiane Rochefort again heading the Cannes Fest press section. Two new jury members appointed to replace Spanish director Edgar Neville who was hurt in an auto accident and Swiss-German filmmaker Bernhard Wicki who can not attend are French femme film director Jacqueline Audry and Japanese foreign film buyer and distrib Kashiko Kawakita. This is the first time two women have served on the Cannes jury . . . Sam Spiegel paid a pre-fest visit on his yacht before going to London to gather British Film Academy Awards for "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) . . . Formosan "The Diabolical Empress" of Far East producer Run Run Shaw full of Oriental taste and tinsel and most arresting. Shaw is in for fest for the first time with his European rep Mattee Sen. Shaw has the top production, distrib and exhib setup in Hong Kong and Formosa . . . Andre Hakim in to ogle pix and talk deals under his new 20th-Fox position.

This beach resort, where "Miss America" was invented, talks now of getting in on the film festival promotion thing. Mal Dodson, director of the city's promotion and advertising bureau, speaks of this as "first ever staged in the United States," totally ignoring San Francisco (sixth year), Boston (third year), the Lincoln Center Film Festival (this fall) and the Motion Picture Assn. event for 1965 in Washington, mentioned several times in VARIETY stories.

Dodson said there is a 50-50 chance that a festival will be located here. It would be similar to festivals staged in Europe and would feature film both from Hollywood and Europe. He does not explain how Atlantic City would secure sanction of the International Federation of Film Producers Assn.

It would be conducted over a period of 10 days or two weeks and would be scheduled either before or after European festivals. A minimum of 10 theatres is required for such a festival, he reported.

Dodson said that a minimum of $50,000 minimum will be needed to "get the project off the ground." He would tie in the festival with New Jersey's Tercentenary Celebration and will discuss the matter with David Davies, its executive director, during a meeting later this month.

gentle but callow rock-and-roll singer.

Into her life comes a more complicated boy who ruins a growing lout by his own problems. The girl is somewhat naive but grows in stature as she follows her emotions which allow her to break with her unbending family and go on her own.

Thesping of the young players is light and unaffected. Inger Taube has beauty, grace and presence as the girl while Tommy Berggren displays a depth and charm as the mixed-up boy. Lars Passgaard is right as the more direct, instinctive lad. Lensing has crystal sharpness while the editing keeps these series of incidents coherent and progressive.

Director Bo Widerberg has a knowing control of the symbols and undeclared plus an insight into youthful mores. In just outlining the emotional problems and escapades of these three people the pic gives a discerning look at Swedish youth in particular and young people in general. Last-minute arrival for the Cannes Critic's Section was put in as a double feature because of its value.

Adams Filmi Oy release of Kurkvaara Film Oy production. With Jarno Hiilloskorpi, Saara Angerva, Seikka Hannula, Kalerva Nissila. Written, directed and photographed by Maunu Kurkvaara. Editor, Tuomo Kattilakoski. In Critics Section, Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 75 MINS.

Boy	Jarno Hiilloskorpi
Architect	Saara Angerva
Secretary	Seikka Hannula
Girl	Kalerva Nissila

Film is a simple, well-told tale of a young man's first dramatic coping with life when he investigates the suicide of his boss, a noted architect and a man he had admired. Told with insight, this still lacks the size and dramatic pitch to make it more than a lingo item abroad. Pic has a worthy intensity in the unfolding.

A middle-aged architect is found dead by his assistant who then unravels what happened via meetings the several people in his life. It seems the man's selling out for commercial purposes, an unfeeling wife, and a general dissatisfaction and melancholy have all combined to cause him to take his own life.

It shows a flair for visual storytelling by young Finnish director Maunu Kurkvaara, plus a sure hand with actors. This is an intimate, personal pic, with familiar ingredients. It is technically good, and Kurkvaara should be heard from with more emphasis soon.

The Finnish cinema has made rare dents on the international scene (notably with Edvin Laine's "The Unknown Soldier" some years ago) so this could mean that more knowing filmmakers are now beginning to practice in that country.

Cannes, May 14.

Sofracima release of Sofracima production. Directed by Chris Marker. Screenplay, Marker, Catherine Varlin; commentary spoken by Yves Montand; camera, Pierre Lhomme; editor, Eva Zora. In Critics Section, Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 160 MINS.

This film combines essay technique and the current interest in the so-called "Cinema Truth" movement which looks at life on-the-spot so to speak. Film details a series of happenings, street and home interviews plus a general panorama of Paris in May last year. It gives this oo-la-la capital a new look and brings it down out of the frou-frou to reality. On this alone, it might be arty and specialized fodder abroad as well as heady telefare.

Chris Marker has taken his camera out into the streets and also has interviewed people at length indoors. It seems he had several cameras in operation to take interest away from those queried so they finally wound up talking freely.

Via intensive editing, people reveal themselves. Pettiness, common sense, posturing, guile, generosity, wit and meanness all come floating out to give a neat look at human foibles. There are shots of riots during the recent Algerian fracas, an African's attitudes towards the French, stock market worker outlooks and many others.

There is also an intensive searching out of the underside of the city, housing problems, displaced persons, a worker priest who has turned leftist, and a fine envelope of well-shot scenes of the city and terse statistics on its overcrowding, arts, etc.

None of the usual Paris cliches are here. It is an absorbing piece of filming and does not seem as long as its three hours. It can be cut if needed which is likely for many playdates. In fact there is already a two hour version. Marker, besides his wry wit and insight in the commentary, well delivered by Yves Montand, also has a flair for getting fine visual setups despite the heat of improvisation.

The lensing is also of top quality while the editing helps keep the film's motives always crisp. In short, a revealing look at Paris, and the Parisians and Parisiennes.

Film naturally would need specialized handling abroad but could pay off on the Paris tag, its unique outlook and probing, combined with good technical qualities. It appears one of the most interesting and inspired of these "Cinema Truth" pix that are springing up.

Association Generale Des Etudiants De Montreal production and release. With Nicole Braun, Pierre Letourneau, Marie-Jose Raymond, Michel Boulizon. Written and directed by Denys Arcand and Stephen Venne. Camera, Michel Brault; editor, Gilles Groulx. In Critics Section, Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 64 MINS.

Made in French by a group of university students in Montreal, this pic combines the mood and techniques of the French New Wave and Cinema Truth schools of filmmaking. Because of its length, it looks mainly good as part of a medium length cinema program abroad or for use on tv.

A girl meets a boy and their talks and outings are pictured in improvised scenes or via monologs. Long focal lenses spy on them in various situations. At times, a deep insight into youthful relations is caught. Sometimes a speaker telling about an incident is shown to be rebuilding things via the real happenings on the screen as he or she talks.

There is the jump cutting, free swinging improvising and jangly rhythms dear to the French Wavers as well as long talk sequences stemming from the Gallic Cinema Truth methods. But this film has an individual youthful robustness and directness that gives it a tone of its own.

If it sometimes slips into preciosity, this has a personal note and fetching performances by students playing out little incidents. Pic could make it as an okay supporting entry in foreign arty spots.

Blown up from 16m, this still has good definition and snap in 35m.

Saraceni production and release. With Irma Alvarez, Paulo Padilha, Reginaldo Farias, Sergio Sanz, Joseph Guerreiro, Margarida Rey. Directed and written by Paulo Cesar Saraceni from an idea by Lucio Cardoso. Camera, Mario Carneiro; editor, Nello Melli. In Critics Section, Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 75 MINS.

Wife	Irma Alvarez
Husband	Paulo Padilha
Lover	Reginaldo Farias
Soldier	Sergio Sanz
Barber	Joseph Guerreiro
Woman	Margarida Rey

Obviously made on a shoestring (around $7,000), this drama of poverty and an eerie wife has enough atmospheric feel and dramatic intensity to emerge a biting offbeater. However, it appears limited for foreign chances except in language spots or for specialized use.

The woman in question is married to a cruel, petty railroad worker in a grimy little town. She allows men to get her. Then she tries to goad them into killing her husband and then getting her out of town.

One finally agrees only to renege. She finally does it herself with an axe. She wanders off alone as her accomplice refuses to go with her. Reminiscent of "Double Indemnity," this has an inexorable, tragic quality about it that makes its uneven acting, ordinary technical credits and familiar story acceptable.

Film's length has it lacking a broader scope. But it does create a claustrophobic feeling and manages to make a statement about the defiling aspects of poverty. Irma Alvarez gives the wife a spontaneous sensuality and childish innocence.

In short, a promising first effort by Paulo Cesar Saraceni but without the depth good enough for anything but specialized possibilities, outside of its home grounds.

Cinematografica [illegible] production and release. Stars Elsa Martinelli, Raoul Grassilli; features Franco Sportelli, Lia Rainer, Anna Bevilo. Directed by Giuseppe Fina. Screenplay, Carlo Castellaneta, Fina; camera, Antonio Macasoli; editor, Gabriele Varriale. In Critics Section, Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Film deals with the working class in Milano. There is a rightness in characterization and a depiction of the worker's lot. This is somewhat sketchy but with enough solidity for foreign language houses and specialized bookings abroad.

There is an expert feel here for a group of workers who have to travel a good 20 miles each way to and fro from work every day. The gray morning groggy trips and returns are visually effective. The intrigues also have an incisive flair for the life of one of the young workers and an unwed mother he marries.

The tenderness of their first meeting and the love affair is expertly blocked out. The man's concern with problems of his fellows is also forceful but there is a tendency to be too descriptive about his unwitting troubles with the police and his final loss of nerve.

If some of the points are academic and the pic sometimes lacks the needed deeper insight, film still is one of those rare ones with a good dramatic look at Milan's industrial life.

Elsa Martinelli eschews her usual glamor roles to cut a telling portrait of the girl-mother. Raoul Grassilli has the proper acceptance of her man. It has the right gray hues photographically and expert work by both real actors and nonpros.

Czech State Film production and release. With Marian Bielik, Jana Belakova, Olga Salagova, Eliska Noskova. Directed by Stefan Uher. Screenplay, Alfonz Bednar, Uher; camera, Stanislav Szomolanyi; editor, Bedrich Vodicka. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Fajolo	Marian Bielik
Bela	Jana Belakova
Jana	Olga Salagova
Mother	Eliska Noskova

Extremely artily lensed film takes a look at youthful self orientation in Czechoslavakia today within a simple, almost soapy tale. If mannered, it has a visual flair and intensity that keeps this viewable. Film also points up an individualistic stand for people solving their own emotional problems. However, it looms a very specialized item abroad, at best.

A girl, with a blind mother, drifts uneasily between no comprehension of her family and an inability to find a way with a young boyfriend. Addicted to photography, he also gropes about finding a way in a socialist society.

Direction manages to make its characters fairly full bodied despite doing it as a series of vignettes and types rather than as a narrative. The actors are fresh, and youthful lovemaking is approached without any evasion. In short, this promises well in its direction and conception for a first pic for all concerned. Crisp editing also helps.

'Birds' Both Tepid

Cannes, May 14.

Opening night (9) event of the present, 16th annual, Cannes Film Festival was marked by a strong personal welcome to director Alfred Hitchcock and a lukewarm reaction at conclusion of his latest Universal release, "The Birds."

Tippi Hedren came along for bows and shared the cordiality shown at outset. Critics ranged from mixed to downbeat on the picture. It was showing out of competition, one of two from Universal; its "To Kill A Mockingbird" is the official entry of the U.S. this year.

'David & Lisa' Might Have Won In Walkaway If Not Too Late; Even So, It's Valladolid Hit

By HANK WERBA

Valladolid, May 14.

The United States drew strongly favorable reaction at Valladolid's Eighth Film Week of Religious and Human Values—but apparently only by the merest coincidence. An article carried by VARIETY on April 17, five days before the April 21-28 fest opened in the Spanish city, mentioned that America would go unrepresented because fest organizers had been unable to locate a print of "David and Lisa." Reacting without delay, Continental Distributing cabled fest organizers offering to air express a copy. Nine days later "David and Lisa" was screened at Valladolid and Frank Perry's work received a stronger ovation than any film entered.

Relegated to a noncompetitive status because of last-minute submission, "David and Lisa" received several special mentions and awards. The main award jury even attempted to waive fest rules to give it the Golden Sheaf of Wheat as the best human values pic.

An unofficial census conducted by local newsmen showed "David and Lisa" a head-on favorite among visiting critics, commentators and delegates.

Nicholas Ray, jury member at the fest, found it deplorable that the U.S.A. was without any representation whatsoever either in preparing for this festival or participating in it. "With a minimum of effort and foresight," he commented, "'David and Lisa' could have been entered officially and walked off with one of the two main prizes. This is a small, but extremely active cultural event that will influence millions of film-goers in many parts of the world. The winning entry, in addition, is handed a tax-free import license worth anywhere from $10,000 to $18,000." The Yank film director was at a loss to explain the absence of the Motion Picture Export Assn., U.S.I.S. filmites or even the managers of American distrib companies in Spain."

As examples of what America should be doing to defend its film industry interests, Ray mentioned the presence at Valladolid of Franz Rowas, Film Bureau Chief in Germany's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, who headed a delegation to the Festival that included the German Embassy Cultural Attache in Madrid, Erwin Huesch, and Spanish delegate of the Export Union, Wilhelm Petersen. Their activity was instrumental in part, Ray said, in obtaining the City of Valladolid Award for the German entry, "Father Malachy's Miracle." Unifrance rep in Spain also helped considerably in getting his country the lion's share of official trophies, special awards and key screen time, with Robert Bresson's "The Trial of Joan of Arc" picking up the top religious Golden Labrador Award and "Une si longue Absence" sharing the Golden Sheaf of Wheat for the best in human values with the Italian entry, "The Steppe."

Ray felt "The Steppe" did not measure up as a prize (and license) winner and attributed the award to dynamic Italo participation.

In the short feature selection, France won the small Golden Labrador with "Mass for the World" and Spain received a small Sheaf of Wheat for "Tiempo abierto." France also took the San Gregorio trophy for a comic short, "Happy Birthday."

The festival commission awarded special-mention plaques to "David and Lisa," the Samuel Bronston short feature, "Valley of the Fallen," produced by Ralph Wheelright from a Jim Bishop script and to Orson Welles' "The Trial," which closed the Festival out of competition. "The Trial" also won the Fipresci film critics' garland with honorable mention going to debuting directors Jorge Grau of Spain and Luigi Turolla of Italy. The Institute of Spanish Culture's finely-carved replica of Columbus' sailing ship went to Mexico's "Animas Trujano," as the best Spanish lingual.

Unlike other film fests, Valladolid promoters are primarily interested in melding film culture and Catholic doctrine in a modern world. The time used at other fests to exhibit stars and starlets or in night club round-tabling is dedicated to conferences, seminars, discussions and inter-related film table talk from start to finish. In addition to a series of panels on the aspects of Love in motion pictures, the schedule included a round-table on "Censorship and Liberty of Expression (which will theme panel talks next year) as well as a meeting of Int'l. Catholic Film-writers.

French Cinemas Ask: What's To Do About Video?

Cannes, May 14.

French Film Exhibitor Syndicate, headed by president Jean Rebotier, will meet for three days at the Cannes Fest starting Thurs. (16). Main topic will be spread of features to television and whether a modus vivendi can be set up with theatres before it is too late.

Nothing is expected to be solved but it gives the exhibs an in with the omnipresent distributors and producers at fests, as well as the ears and pens of the great number of attending press, radio and tv news people.

Rebotier has also made it clear that there are no recriminations or attacks planned in this meeting, but rather an attempt to treat constructively the problems still facing film theatre people as well as underscore any gains made since the war.

The main tv discussion meeting will be presided over by film director Rene Clair. Among questions to be handled about, with attempted answers, are the following. Is television really the same as films or a part of it? Under current governmental practices does tv have an advantage over the cinema? Will video eventually replace films? What new steps, agreements and methods should be taken and used to allow both to co-exist?

Above points have been gone over quite thoroughly by producers during their recent strike threats. Nothing new is likely to come out of it unless it does force some needed governmental delaxation of film admission gross since tv is exempt from taxes and underwritten nationally while films get token aid via taxes on admissions funneled back to them.

Many of the other points seem academic. However exhibs will go over still frozen entrance prices and falling filmgoing and other problems facing them today. A big turnout from all over France is expected.

LIGHTSTONE OPENER: $400,000 GUARANTEES

Cannes, May 14.

Embassy Films veepee Leonard Lightstone closed $400,000 in film guarantees the first day (9) of the Fest which could turn into a $1,000,000 net gross. He brought in over $1,000,000 in sales at Cannes last year.

Embassy (Joe Levine) is also buying other than United States territorial rights. After "Boccaccio 70" and "Divorce Italian Style" last year, Embassy has the Italo "The Queen Bee" competing this year with Federico Fellini's "8½" winding the fest out of competition.

Lightstone made a deal with Swedish distrib Sven Nygren for four Carlo Ponti releases from Italy of which three are prepping and one is shooting. Latter is Brigitte Bardot's "Ghost at Noon," now rolling in Rome with Jean-Luc Godard directing. Others are "Casanova," "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow," and "The Empty Canvas." Nygren also took the French "Landru" for Denmark and "Landru" and "Boccaccio 70" for Finland.

Other deals were with Ster Film of South Africa for the same Ponti four and the Italo comedy "The Queen Bee." Portugal took "Boccaccio 70," "Madame" and a Yank indie "The Light Fantastic."

Varied Policies for Bronston's 'Peking': Reserved Seats to Outdoor Premieres

Allied Artists has been developing a varied, regionally-oriented marketing policy for Samuel Bronston's "55 Days at Peking."

Spanish-made action picture opens in 12 key cities May 29 and, on June 26, branches out into over 400 locations ranging from main stem hardtops to rural driveins. "Peking" opened in London last week and bows in Paris this frame, both engagements screened on a roadshow policy. In the States, however, only one location, Chicago, will show the film on such a policy. It will be offered there on a two-a-day basis at a $3.50 top at the Michael Todd Theatre, opening on the May date.

In Los Angeles, where it will be shown at the Beverly Theatre, the policy will be a scheme whereby non-reserved tickets can be purchased in advance. Top here will be about $2.00, with $3 loges. The Saxon Theatre in Boston will show "Peking" at a $2.50 top, using the same ticket-buying plan. In New York, four houses, the Palace, RKO 23rd Street, Trans Lux 85th St and the Albee in Brooklyn will day-date, probably at $2.50 top but details aren't resolved.

And so on. In almost every city there will be a different approach, tailored to the projected needs of that location with the idea of not pricing out any possible markets and thereby getting the most playoff in the fastest manner possible. The policing will also be maintained on a flexible basis, with changes possible in the various spots should some plans not function correctly.

The pic is build on the epic proportions for a roadshowing but, with a summer release schedule and other distribution and exhibition factors taken into account, it was originally decided not to give "Peking" this treatment at all. Now Chicago has been decided upon as a testing ground for such a policy and maybe one other city may run the film roadshow. The theory is to play to the most people in the shortest time, capitalizing on the prime summer time.

It has also been noted that, contrary to some of the complaints from exhib ranks, there is considerable competition this year for summer playtime. In fact it is felt in some distrib quarters that playtime is more guarded this year than ever before. Resultantly, "Peking" will play its firstrun engagements in driveins in some areas, Louisville for one. So far Allied has bookings covering about 2/3 of the country slated by the end of July when the film goes into multiple run. That's fast playoff for a pic of this nature, which will only be making its U.S. debut the end of May.

Titra's Editing In Gotham; Gives Showmen a Check

In an effort to allow U.S. film producers to supervise more closely the dubbing of their product into French, Titra Sound Corp., New York, and its Paris-based affiliate, Titra International, are setting up a new system whereby the pix will be dubbed in Paris, to be followed by editing and mixing in New York. This, of course, applies only to American pix being readied for the French-speaking market. Titra does all its English-language dubbing in New York.

According to Dave Horne, prez of Titra Sound, the new system is designed for the convenience of U.S. producers who are unable to be in Paris to supervise the making of the French versions of their films. One of Titra's principal tenets is that pix should always be dubbed in the country where they will be shown. Because of this, company has no intention of setting up facilities for French dubbing in New York, nor English dubbing in Paris.

Currently at work in Titra's New York studios is the Titanus-20th-Fox production of "The Leopard," being dubbed into English with Burt Lancaster doing his own voice in the film which was shot mainly in Italian. Pic is four weeks along, with another four weeks of work anticipated.

KENMORE, 652-SEATER, BOSTON, OPENS MAY 23

Boston, May 14.

Hub's newest art house, the Kenmore Square Cinema, first actually constructed in the city in some 35 years, is set for opening May 23 with Joseph E. Levine's Embassy production "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

George Kracke, longtime Levine exploitation chief in Hub is handling press and is skedding a screening for local critics at which Levine is expected. Steve Minasian, Bob Bersamian and Phil Scuderi are the owners of the new house, which was built in and around what was once a Cities Service gasoline station.

Seating 652, the new house will have a policy of top domestic and foreign films. Its owners operate driveins in Middleton, Canton, Middletown, Oxford, North Reading, Mass., and Plainville, N.H. They are planning to open two more hardtops in Lawrence and Brocton, Mass.

Convert Balcony Into New Cinema

Louisville, May 14.

In an unusual move, the Fourth Avenue Amusement Co. has converted the balcony of the United Artists Theatre here into the new, 900-seat Penthouse. The United Artists, formerly a 3,000-seat house, has been cut to 1,800 seats. "Lawrence of Arabia" was the opening attraction at the Penthouse, which is expected to put the stress on hardticket pix.

By creating two cinemas where one existed before, Dale H. McFarland, g.m. for Fourth Avenue Amusement Co., believes that the project is of great importance to the industry, pointing to a solution to the problems of the older big capacity theatres in downtown areas of major cities. In ceremonies prior to the showing of "Lawrence," D. Irving Long and his firm were honored for "an outstanding contribution to the growth and improvement of downtown Louisville." A certificate of commendation was presented to Long by Franklin Starks Jr., board chairman of Louisville Central Area, Inc., a group dedicated to the improvement and attractiveness of the central downtown area. Mayor William O. Cowger and County Judge Marlow W. Cook also had laudatory remarks praising Long for developing the Penthouse. Long said the next attraction set for the house was "Cleopatra."

Patrons will be served from the lower lobby by an escalator (not finished in time for the opening). New house has entirely new seating, projection booths and wide screen. Projection booth for the United Artists is located under the Penthouse screen, in what was formerly the front portion of the balcony. The Penthouse-United Artists dual theatre differs from some other twin-theatre operations such as the old Duplex Theatre on East Grand Boulevard in Detroit, and might be termed a "Piggy-back" type of theatre, that is, one on top of the other.

In New York City there is something similar, the Baronet and Coronet, one on top of each other. Another is a twin-theatre arrangement, side-by-side, as represented by Cinema I and Cinema II.

During the era when there was a splurge of big-seaters, Capitol in New York, Capitol in Detroit, and other big houses of 3,000 or more capacity, with stage shows, big name bands, et al, promoters went for the big capacity to fill the mammoth houses at prices of 25c and 50c. With the introduction of higher tariffs and hard ticket policy, large sections of the big houses went unused. It is believed that exhibs from other cities will probably visit Louisville and the Penthouse for a look-see at this latest innovation in the utilizing of space in large seaters.

KIRK DOUGLAS TOURS FOR UNIVERSAL'S 'LIST'

Universal Pictures is bringing newspaper scribes from 20 cities into New York, Detroit and Chicago this week for sessions with Kirk Douglas who last Monday (13) began a week of advance promotional gambits in connection with the Memorial Day openings of "The List of Adrian Messenger," sponsored by Theatre Owners of America via its Hollywood Preview Engagement plan.

Douglas in Gotham through today (Wed.) and goes to Detroit tomorrow (Thurs.) and onto Chi the following day where he'll meet paper reps at a luncheon before the screening of the pic. A luncheon was held in Gotham yesterday (Tues.) and there'll be a dinner tonight (Wed.), both followed by screenings. Scribes from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Albany, Syracuse, New Haven, Hartford, Providence and Portland joined New York writers at these events.

Reps from 13 cities will gather for the Detroit sessions tomorrow and seven other locations will be represented at the Chicago getogether the following day.

A Comic Cancellation

Pittsburgh, May 14.

Kirk Douglas' Universal Pics' press corps felt that Pittsburgh could handle only one celeb at a time so his visit here to exploit "List of Adrian Messenger" was cancelled because Charlton Heston was to be in town the same day (14) on behalf of "55 Days at Peking."

At first it appeared that there would be a traffic jam around the tv stations and newspaper offices but Douglas bowed out when it was learned that Penn manager, Bill Maclair, had Heston booked on all the tv interview shows and had a press conference set for the amusement columnists.

However, some of the drama critics were invited to Detroit today to sit in on a Douglas press conference if they so desired.

But the real payoff came on Thurs. (9) when the Heston tour was re-routed and now he won't be in town until Thurs. May 16, but Douglas will still be in Detroit today.

2D SINATRA-MARTIN FILM WITH WARNERS

Hollywood, May 14.

Warner Bros. has closed second joint production deal in recent weeks with Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin. "Robin and the Seven Hoods" from script by John Fenton Murray based on comedy-satire by Evelyn and Richard Condon is involved.

Film, to roll at WB in October, follows "Four for Texas," in which Sinatra-Martin team starts shortly. Both ventures involve Martin's Claude productions and Sinatra enterprises.

Community Antenna Systems Produce Half of TelePrompter's Revenues

TelePrompter Corp. earnings for 1962 boosted the company's gross revenues to a new high take of $6,431,880. Net earnings were $88,997, equal to seven cents per share of common stock, contrasted with a 1961 loss of $884,694, made up of an operating deficit of $580,341 or 80c per share and a special charge of $308,300. Gross in 1961 was $4,881,310.

Irving B. Kahn, Telepro chairman and prez, in revealing the figures, said that while no audited numbers were available for 1963 as yet, indications are that results so far exceed last year's at a comparable period and that profits for the year are expected to improve strongly.

He noted that the company's community antenna systems accounted for nearly half the company's 1962 gross, weighing in at $1,140,477, and that these are expected to account for greater earnings in '63. Kahn credited the corp's reversal of the previous year to the outstanding growth of this CATV web, more efficient management practices and improving results from other corporate activities.

He added, however, that some areas of the company's business still aren't operating up to par and that, despite long-range promise, Telepro is considering unloading some of 'em in order to concentrate more heavily on the lucrative CATV systems, tollvision, closed-circuit programming and government contracting.

This move will probably mean the selloff of the recently acquired Weathers and Conley Electronics firms and the established plant operations at Cherry Hill, N. J. Such sale would increase cash flow and allow more concentration on CATV, Telepro's 15 systems having registered a 28.3% growth in 1962 without new acquisitions. These systems now serve approximately 40,000 subscribers.

Company will hold its annual meeting in June most likely and Kahn said that a complete annual report will be mailed to stockholders in about three weeks.

MICHAEL RAUMOHL TO SEVEN ARTS JUNE 10

Michael Raumohl has been appointed Seven Arts' ad-pub manager for the United Kingdom and Continental Europe. He'll assume his new duties June 10, at the conclusion of his current assignment as production publicity director for Universal's "The Chalk Garden," now shooting in London.

Raumohl, who'll headquarter in London, will supervise all 7A production publicity abroad, as well as coordinate overseas merchandising campaigns with various distribs releasing 7A product.

Screen Extras In Fouled-Up Voting

Hollywood, May 14.

Complicated Screen Extras Guild election tangle has been tossed into the lap of U. S. Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz. SEG's board voted almost unanimously to ask him to name an impartial referee of national stature to resolve the hassle.

SEG board also voted to postpone the annual Hollywood membership meeting set for June 7, until challenges are disposed of, and the election results certified and new officers and directors installed. Annual Frisco membership meeting to have been held May 24 is also postponed.

Two challenges from each faction, one from an indie slate headed by Tony Regan, the other from the administration ticket headed by SEG prexy Jeffrey Sayre, were made on the eve of the election. In addition to ruling on these, the arbiter will be asked to decide what to do about 80 ballots temporarily "lost."

Regan group was partly successful in its bid to unseat the administration slate, according to the unofficial tally. Regan was named prexy by a margin of about 250 votes. The Regan group, which for a year has had six votes out of 33 on the board, will hike its number to 12 out of 34 if the challenges by both factions and the disposition of the 80 uncounted ballots fail to alter the uncertified vote.

One of the administration ticket's challenges alleges the Regan group took financial support in the election campaign from sources outside guild membership. If this allegation is upheld, SEG bylaws make it mandatory any candidate or slate of candidates accepting outside financial help be disqualified. Incumbent ticket also alleges the Regan slate put out campaign literature which "misled" membership.

Regan ticket challenges the administration on grounds SEG's official election notice was "faulty," and that the vote of the Frisco and Hawaiian branch members shouldn't be counted.

Sayre, who lost to Regan in the unofficial vote, has been a SEG officer for 17 years, as treasurer, veepee and as prexy for just under four years.

If Secretary Wirtz declines to name a single ref, he is being asked to name five in order of preference, from which the SEG board hopes to land a nationally known arbitrator to decide the election issues.

If any candidate disagrees with the ref's decisions, under SEG bylaws, he has the right of appeal to the entire guild membership, and, after that, to the Associated Actors & Artistes of America, parent of all performers' unions in the U.S.

Four Share 'The Birds'

Honolulu, May 14.

Consolidated circuit launched "The Birds" (U) in four theatres—the Waikiki, where it followed "To Kill a Mockingbird," and the nominal three-theatre unit, consisting of the downtown Hawaii, nabe Kaimuki and suburban Kam Hi-Way drive-in.

It's the single attraction at the Waikiki, which has never had a double-bill policy, but dualed in the other outlets.

Hollywood, May 14.

Weaver and his aides on possible measures to relieve unemployment and economic distress in Hollywood, blamed on "runaway" American producers.

Sidewalk-Sitting by Negroes

Knoxville Protest Uses 'Limp' Technique — Cops Lug Deadweight Demonstrators Off Premises

Knoxville, May 14.

Racial demonstrations were continued this week at the segregated Tennessee and Bijou Theatres in downtown Knoxville. Both are Wilby-Kincey houses.

The latest demonstration was believed sparked by the demonstrations in Birmingham. This time the Negroes sat down in a body across the entrance of the Tennessee Theatre, a new technique.

Police officers arrested 45. As police moved in on sidewalk sitters, they went limp and had to be carried away by the officers.

Political pickets arrested were charged with "interfering with trade and commerce."

'Fail-Safe' Makes Haste, Might Beat Kubrick Pic To Market Via Columbia

Max E. Youngstein states he's "on the button" in terms of both time and money in serving for the first time as exec producer on a feature production, this being "Fail-Safe," now for Columbia.

Other sources considered it possible that "Fail-Safe" might be released ahead of "Dr. Strangelove," Stanley Kubrick production, also for Columbia, dealing with thermonuclear warfare. Kubrick, the distributor and others earlier filed suit against Youngstein seeking restraints upon "Fail-Safe" when this picture was earmarked initially for the now-defunct Entertainment Corp. of America.

With the former prospective rival releases set under the same banner and the Kubrick entry subjected to certain delays, the twist may send "Strangelove" second to market, whereas it had been slated to be the first.

Youngstein declared in New York this week that "Fail-Safe" will be brought in on the originally-plotted 30-day shooting schedule at a cost of $1,300,000. Henry Fonda is star. Feature is shooting at the Fox studio on 11th Avenue in Gotham.

Philosophical Judge Sez Negroes Only Seek Status By Film House Ingress

Raleigh, N.C., May 14.

A young Negro couple was convicted in City Court here on trespass charges brought April 7 during an attempt to integrate the white seating areas at the Ambassador Theatre.

"What they are really guilty of," said Judge Pretlow Winborne, "is trying to be somebody, and who should deny them that right?"

Warren L. Veasey and Ruby Mae Lawhorn, a Shaw U. student, were ordered to pay the costs of court. They gave notice of appeal to Superior Court and bond was set at $50 each.

"I think wisdom in this case would be to say 'guilty' and stop there," Judge Winborne declared. "But I usually open my mouth when I should keep it closed."

Judge Winborne said that "when one sets about to do this, can it be done by intimidation, force, economic pressure . . .?

"As I understand it, no . . . it cannot be bought . . . nor can they be forced on someone else.

"On the other side of the coin, the question would well be asked, 'Where someone waits and desires earnestly to have respect . . . dignity, live with esteem in his community . . . should not everything be done to give him that atmosphere and that climate wherein he can achieve his goals?'"

Harvey Huddles With Maugham on 'Bondage'

Nice, May 7.

Laurence Harvey, now at work in the Seven Arts Productions "Human Bondage," flew from Dublin to the French Riviera to see Somerset Maugham, author of "Bondage." Discussing "Bondage" with Harvey, Maugham admitted the story was that of his own youth when he was a medical student over 65 years ago. Although he himself when young had a speech defect, in the book Philip Carey has a club foot. This detail had been changed to avoid too close a resemblance to Maugham.

Harvey explained to Maugham the difficulties that had arisen during the filming of "Bondage" and about the controversy which resulted in Henry Hathaway leaving as director. He has been replaced by Ken Hughes.

Harvey, in addition to playing in "Bondage," is also finishing off the cutting and montage of his own picture, "The Ceremony," the pic he made in Spain. It is an indictment of capital punishment. In the fall, he is due to open in the Broadway play, "The Time of the Barracuda." In 1964, he will go to the Bahamas to direct and coproduce with Danny Angel a screen adaptation of Alistair MacLean's story, "The Golden Rendezvous."

New Albuquerque House An 'Art' Run for Only 83

Albuquerque, May 14.

A peewee picture house—seating only 83 persons—and modeled after the miniature cinemas of Paris opened recently near the U. of New Mexico campus in Albuquerque with what the owners call an "art" policy. First booking, set for three frames, is the nudie film "Eve and The Handyman" which got a strong plug via Playboy Magazine few months back.

Proprietors of the house are Thomas Coleman and Donald Dunham, both former students. The two men were instrumental in starting another—and larger, 250 seats—art house here about two years ago. That was Don Pancho's Art Theatre, now a part of the Art Theatre Guild.

Coleman said the hardtopper would cater primarily to dorm students at UNM. He noted that if this one works out, the pair may plan a similar one near New Mexico State U. campus in Las Cruces.

Mann-Laurence-Writer Link for Six Features; Photog & Banker Scripts

Director Delbert Mann, producer Douglas Laurence and writer Dale Wasserman have pooled to independently producer and market a minimum of six features. The move resulted from the signing of a joint production venture pact between Mann's Biography Productions and Laurence's New Dimensions which, with the producer as prez, has been a purchaser and developer of properties for picture production.

Two properties have already been optioned. One is "Quick Before It Melts," a farce comedy by N.Y. Times scribe Phillip Benjamin. It's slated for publication by Random House and deals with a reporter-photog team covering the U.S. naval station at the Antarctic. The other is "The Banker," a story dealing with the New York banking biz, whitten by Leslie Waller and to be published this August by Doubleday.

Mann, who recently completed "Gathering of Eagles" for Universal, will personally direct the pix on the company's slate. Wasserman will, in addition to scripting projects for the outfit, function as story head for the new org. Latter has two Broadway productions projected for the coming season: "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" to star Kirk Douglas and a musical, "Man of La Mancha," to be staged by Albert Marre.

Not in Gawjah: Put Slide Rule To 'Cleo' Exposure

Atlanta, May 14.

Initial five-column advertisement for mailorder ticket sale on "Cleopatra" due June 26 at Wilby-Kincey's Roxy (1,500 seats) ran afoul of bosom slide-rules at Atlanta Journal (afternoon) and Atlanta Constitution (morning). The visibility of Liz Taylor's upper anatomy under her matinee crepe de chine was covered over by the art department, and not 20th's.

Ralph Buring, newly arrived southeastern adv and exploitation rep for 20th-Fox protested vehemently to advertising powers-that-be at Atlanta Newspapers Inc. but to no avail.

Buring thereupon revised his ad schedule and Sunday (12) paper carried a somewhat miniscule 2-col x 5" ad with offending pic (undoctored) at the top.

Meanwhile, "Cleo" is racking up a good advance. Scale is: all nights—Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, $3.30 main floor, $2.80 Balcony. Matinees, Mondays through Fridays, $2.30 main floor, balcony $1.80.

Roxy will go out of the road show field (until "Cleo" opens) Thursday (16) when Metro's "Mutiny on the Bounty" will weigh anchor after 10-week run. They plan to piece out the interim with "The Yellow Canary," which opens Friday (17), "Nine Hours to Rama," "The Stripper" and "A New Kind of Love."

Meanwhile, Metro's "How the West Was Won" is in its 10th road show week at 800-seat Martin Cinerama Theatre and hard ticket engagement of Oscar-splattered "Lawrence of Arabia" is in its sixth week at Storey's 800-seat Rhodes Theatre.

In eighth week of a grind engagement is Universal's "To Kill a Mockingbird," which got a big lift when Greg Peck knocked off Best Actor Oscar.

ALLIED BOARD MEETING

Detroit, May 14.

Summer meeting of the National Allied States Assn. board of directors will be held at the Sheraton-Cadillac Hotel, Detroit, June 26-27.

The board meetings will be preceded the day before by a reception and dinner at the private Standard Club. On the afternoon of June 26, the directors and guests will be motored on a three-hour cruise aboard Allied prez Jack Armstrong's 53-foot cabin cruiser, capped by dinner at the St. Clair Inn. The directors have also been invited to attend the annual golf outing of Variety Club Tent No. 5

Citizen Objection Develops to Revision Of Tax-on-Negatives in California

Hollywood, May 14.

Considerable citizen objection has arisen over a bill introduced in the California State Legislature which would alter the present annual March film tax structure from assessing the intrinsic value of all exposed footage to actual cost of the raw stock. Last year, tax cost the motion picture and television industry slightly in excess of $2,500,000, which would be reduced to a minimal amount under the proposed change.

Bill which went to State Senate May 1 after receiving recommendation by Senate Committee on Revenue and Taxation and was approved by a vote of 36-0, is due to hit the Assembly this week for vote after a similar Assembly committee gave it a do-pass recommendation last week.

County, city and school authorities are up in arms over the matter because final passage of bill would means the loss of approximately $2,500,000, based upon last year's taxation, repping about 10% of total tax revenue of L.A. County for the year. After hearing L.A. County Assessor Philip Watson last Thursday (9), the L.A. County Board of Supervisors unanimously went on record as opposing the bill and voted to send telegrams to the L.A. County delegation at the Assembly in Sacramento advising of its stand.

Datson appeared before the Supervisors after testifying before the Assembly Revenue and Taxation Committee the evening previous in Sacramento on effect of the bill if it were passed. Various reps of City of Los Angeles, Culver City and Burbank, whose districts would be affected by the threatened tax loss, also junketed to state capital to appear before the committee and pitch for its non-passage.

While the committee gave bill a do-pass recommendation it tacked on an amendment. This provided for an automatic tax override for those districts affected to an amount lost to those districts by effect of the bill. This, of course, means that if the bill passes the citizens of various communities affected would be liable to upped taxes.

New amendment to bill is understood to nullify the Senate's previous approval of the original bill, which must now vote again on the new provisions.

For year 1962, total assessed valuation of film to be taxed first Monday in March amounted to $29,097,050, plus $417,000 in film libraries. New tax if passed would be based upon assessment of only a few thousands of dollars of raw stock.

Embassy Recruiting Artists With Notions To Bait Public Fancy

Embassy Pictures is mapping an "experimental" plan for the setting of its art campaign for the upcoming release of the upcoming documentary "Women of the World." The distrib will commission around 20 artists who will see separate screenings of the film and then independently develop their own concepts for the pic's campaign.

This procedure was tried before by Embassy in the formulating of the drive for "The Sky Above—the Mud Below," another documentary. In this latter case, as in the case of "Women," the distrib wanted several different campaign ideas so that varied programs could be mapped for the pic, some for the art market and others for the strictly commercial situations.

Preliminary cost for such an "experiment" could run to about $20,000, but whether the distrib will go that far depends on how things develop. Embassy doesn't have a resident art staff because prez Joseph E. Levine believes in tapping the vast market of freelance talent and drawing upon the various "specialists" who work in the art pix field. Ed Apfel is the distrib's ad chief, working under Robert Weston, the company's global ad-pub veep.

When all the indie thinking is submitted, they will look it over and select and adapt the ideas into several campaigns, different ones for different markets.

Stanley Warner Chain Donates Scholarships

Stanley Warner Theatres is sponsoring two scholarships at the University of Connecticut, Storrs, beginning September, 1963. The grants will be offered annually, one for a boy and one for a girl, and will be given to deserving Connecticut students at the discretion of the University.

This "token of our desire to serve this community" was bestowed last week by S. H. Fabian, SW prez, at the dedication of the new Campus Theatre on the quadrangle. Fabian also commented on the policy of the new house, noting that special consideration would be given the requirements of a university community in its booking procedures.

"The motion picture has become an indispensable instrument of contemporary life," he told those present. "It is serving mankind as a teaching aid, as a source of information and as the world's most popular entertainment. Our technicians, craftsmen and creative artists are constantly striving to advance the art of storytelling," he opined.

A gathering of SW execs, Boston and New York filmsen and politicos were present at the dedication of the College Theatre, the first attraction at which is "To Kill a Mockingbird."

Rugoff's New Treasurer

Stanley N. Silverman has been elected treasurer of Rugoff Theatres, chain of 13 arties in the New York and Philadelphia areas.

Silverman, who joined the circuit in 1954, was formerly in charge of operations and most recently supervised construction of Cinema I and Cinema II, company's side-by-side eastside Manhattan deluxers.

British Film Prods. Hint 2d-Feature Film Problem Nearer to Solution

London, May 14.

There are strong hints from the direction of the British Film Producers Assn. that it believes it has found the solution to the problem of the ailing second-feature business via a three-pronged idea tabled by its prexy Robert Clark. It's special Second Features Committee is now giving the idea a thorough sifting for bugs but few that can't be surmounted are expected.

At the same time the other producer group, the Federation of British Film Makers, also suggests that it has something to contribute to the subject which it has covered in a supplementary submission on supporting feature pix just sent to the relevant sub-committee of the Central Films' Council. But the FBFM just isn't saying yet what its ideas are.

Root of the problem is a simple one: money. Exhibs do not want to shell out for program fillers and main feature producers point blank refuse to finance them or produce their own and so supply package bills. At the same time, there is a widely-held view here that when admitting the generally poor quality of support pics going the UK rounds, British product has to be exonerated as "on the whole not bad at all."

There is a small but strong school of thought among producers here that automatically ruling out the home product and blaming bad second-feature films on foreign imports is no way of tackling a problem that is hurting picture business.

Franco Cristaldi's 12; For Vides or With Other Italian Producer Firms

Rome, May 14.

Crisis or no crisis, Franco Cristaldi's Vides Films of Rome is heading for one of its biggest years—though Cristaldi is most likely to consider the fortunate one in which he packaged Pietro Germi's "Divorce, Italian Style" the "biggest".

Never one for figures, he will cite no production ciphers for his 1963 slate, but reveals it will comprise at least 12 features made by Vides alone or in association with such Italo outfits as Lux Film, Dear Film, Ultra Film, and others.

Two of these, "Mare Matto" (Crazy Sea) with Gina Lollobrigida, J. P. Belmondo, directed by Renato Castellani, and "I Compagni" (The Strikers), in which Mario Monicelli directs Marcello Mastroianni, are practically in the can as of now, though some wrap-up shots remain on the latter. Early comments on "Mare Matto" are high, and Gina Lollobrigida's performance is already being tipped as a "surprise".

"Bebo's Girl" (from the Carlo Cassola book, "La Ragazza di Bube", has just started with George Chakiris the new partner for Italy's Claudia Cardinale. This one is on locations in Tuscany, with initial work in the Siena area. Luigi Comencini directs. Also started is an episoder, "The World's Most Memorable Swindles", with "Landru's" Charles Denner, Jean Seberg, and others being directed by Jean Luc Godard, Roman Polanski, Claude Chabrol, Horikawa, and Ugo Gregoretti. Ulysse (Paris) is coproducer with Vides on this one.

On the upcoming roster for the busy Vides outfit this year are "Omicron", likewise directed by Ugo Gregoretti, "Time of Indifference", from the Alberto Moravia novel; "Paro", which marks return of "Kapo" director Gillo Pontecorvo to direction; and "The Future has Begun", to be directed by Virgilio Sabel.

Two offsprings of "Divorce, Italian Style"—though Cristaldi dislikes the term "sequel" which at least in one case doesn't apply at all—are Pietro Germi's "Seduced and Abandoned" and Alfredo Giannetti's "Baron Fete". The latter stars Marcello Mastroianni under the direction of one of Germi's Oscar-sharing colleagues of "Divorce", and should start this fall.

Finally, two other items on the Vides agenda for the year: "Adventures of a Chinaman in China", which Duccio Tessari will direct with tongue in cheek and J. P. Belmondo in the key role, and "The Phony Boom", a first film by a new director.

Edinburgh Film Fest Aug. 17-Sept. 1 This Year

Edinburgh, May 14.

Theme for the upcoming International Edinburgh Film Fest (Aug. 18-Sept. 1) is to be "the Film and Drama." It will be the 17th fest junket. During the two weeks, films on the theme of drama from many countries will be shown. Some of the world's best documentary and experimental films are also due for screening.

Also included will be standout examples of tele film art, while leading tv filmmakers will discuss the techniques of creating film specially for the small image. Gala film performances are set for Aug. 18 and 25, and Sept. 1.

Glasgow May OK Sun. Dancehalls

Glasgow, May 7.

Glasgow, a city which frowns on eateries and late-night entertainment as well as stageshows on Sundays, is relaxing its attitude on dancing. The city magistrates have unanimously okayed a plea by the Scottish Ballroom Assn. to open dancehalls in the city on Sundays on a rota basis. The application has been granted for an experimental period of one year, at the end of which the magistrates will review the position.

The association claims there is a demand for Sunday dancing. But they feel it unfair that about 35 private clubs, who are not under police supervision, should be allowed to open on Sundays for dancing. Protests against the application have come from church groups.

Some hotels in Scotland are now running Sunday night dances with a drink license.

A city minister, Rev. John R. Gray, said: "I simply can't understand it. I'm quite sure there is no demand on the part of the citizens for Sunday dancing. Only a tiny minority of people want to go dancing seven nights in the week."

Pic Actor Tied in With Hotel Outfit Planning 22 Luxury Hostelries

Tokyo, May 14.

Chinese-American actor Benson Fong is now tied in with an organization that plans to build 22 hotels around the world. Fong is in charge of sales and public relations for the Far East division of the recently-formed International Club Hotels, Inc., and a director of the parent company, Seaboard International Investors Corp. He is meeting with associates in Taipei, Hong Kong, Singapore, Kuala Lumpur and Manila during this trip.

Of the first six luxury club-hotels already contracted by the organization, five will be in the Far East. Later this year, ground will be broken in Manila for a 400-room International Club Hotel, which will be built in tandem with the Hotel Development Corp. Also on the boards are hostelries for Singapore, Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur and Malacca, all joint ventures with local investors.

This is not the first biz venture for the actor. He is already busy in real estate, stocks and bonds, the operation of his Ah Fong restaurants in Beverly Hills and Hollywood, and shopping centers. Now wrapped up in the International Club Hotels project, Fong, who has appeared in about 85 feature pix and many telefilms, will have no time for acting this year.

Discussing the new venture, Fong noted "A lot of people like to come to the Far East, but it's getting so expensive." He explained that International Club Hotels will be able to offer first-class accommodations at moderate rates. The exclusive group would include 2,000 charter members, who pay $2,000 and receive a 20% discount on all accommodations, and also receive an expenses-paid invite to an International Club Hotel opening of their choice. Memberships with lesser benefits are available at smaller fees.

Rome, May 14.

Director General for the Italian Entertainment Sector Nicola de Pirro this week retired from his post, which he has held since 1947, having reached the retirement age of 65.

De Pirro, who was recently tendered a testimonial dinner by his industry contacts, will be replaced, for what is described here as an interim period, by Franz de Biase, who will have the collaboration, for the film field, of Annibale Scicluna Sorge. Both Sorge and De Biase are longtime Entertainment Office officials.

"Regency" formula is felt to have been adopted for several reasons, primary among them the fact that the recent Italo elections have resulted in a stall of government activity. Definitive successor to De Pirro probably will be named when new Minister of Entertainment is designated. Though his official post has been held since 1947, De Pirro actually has been one of top film industry contacts in the various Italian governments since 1937.

Habimah Dicker On '64 U.S. Tour

Tel Aviv, May 7.

"Habimah," Israel's National Theatre, was invited for a three-month tour of the U. S. starting next January or February. Source of the invitation is The Little Theatre of New York, with the America-Israel Cultural Foundation acting as intermediary. The invitation was accepted in principle, but no decision has been made as to the repertory. Habimah will probably take along its classic play, "The Dybbuk," and a modern Israeli work.

Habimah was founded by Jewish actors in Moscow, right after the first World War. It is a repertoire theatre, with a permanent building in Tel Aviv, which includes a big 1,000 seat hall and a smaller one. The repertoire consists of four or five plays. Currently, for instance, the theatre presents Piscator's version of "War and Peace," Duerrenmatt's "The Physicysts," two original Hebrew plays and also "Irma La Duce."

Though partly subsidized by the government and the Tel Aviv municipality, Habimah is perpetually condemned to financial difficulties, since 30 odd actors and an equal number of technicians receive monthly salaries, whether they work or are idle.

Cinespana Not Merging With Mex Distrib Setup For Latin Am. Market

Madrid, May 7.

Cinespana, distribution wing of the Spanish film industry, will not merge with Peli-Mex of Mexico to distribute Spanish language product in the Latin American market. This decision was reached by Cinespana toppers after an extended period of possible unification talks in the Spanish capital city attended by a delegation of leading Mexican film industry figures.

Cinespana negotiators decided that the Peli-Mex distrib overboard with its 12% interest rate on investment coin and the Peli-Mex obligation to priority release of Mex pix were decisive factors discouraging merger operations at this time.

Although Peli-Mex will continue to distribute Spanish product, Cinespana will create its own distrib setup in Mexico on equal partnership terms with an independent Mexican distributor. This is the formula Cinespana has established in many regions of South and Central America. Blas Lopez Fandiño, former general manager of Mexico's Peliculas Nacionales, is being groomed to head up Cinespana entry into the Mexican market. His organization will, in addition, encourage co-production between the two countries.

Frankfurt, May 14.

Probably the most ambitious and unusual film festival ever put on by a city was the Second Asiatic Film Week which just wound up its eight-day run here recently. During that brief period, with two years of intensive preparation, the Frankfurt Assn. for Developing the People presented an astounding selection of 30 long and short films from 12 Asiatic lands.

The event, co-financed by the state of Hesse and the City of Frankfurt, attracted delegations of producers, actors, directors from the Red and non-Red lands of the Asiatic world.

And to a viewer, offered a selection of some of the most offbeat and different films ever to be presented to the West German public, the ticket price of just one mark (25c) a seat in the handsome modern 900-seat theatre was another plus attraction. (In addition, a "season ticket" for the whole event cost only $1.50). But there was one great void. Either the event was badly publicized or the local public was just plain apathetic to the cultural wonder in its midst. Most of the films played before a half-empty house.

However, to those who did attend, the work and worry of the city officials certainly was justified. It was a chance-of-a-lifetime to garner a glimpse of what the filmmakers in the Asiatic world are producing as each country tried to present its best or most appealing or even highest propaganda efforts.

There was one flaw, which turned out to be, apparently, a bad decision on the part of the West German Foreign Office. The non-Communistic countries were permitted to show films that were of such a violently non-Red nature that, as one West German film critic commented: "Even Joseph McCarthy would have cringed in a corner, covered his face with his hands and yelled 'That's enough'."

However, the short-sighted German Foreign Office prevented North Vietnam from presenting three films that the German officials decided were too heavy-handed Commie titled propaganda. The pictures, "Two Soldiers," "The Peace King" and "You Are the Winners," were turned down for entry at the fest. The South Viets, though, presented a film from the National Film Production Center titled "Que Me" (translated as "My Village") which presented the anti-Commie picture very broadly, telling the story of vicious Red partisans attacking the village and shooting at the women and children.

Many Nations Sent Films

Included on the schedule were films from Ceylon and Pakistan, Red China, South Vietnam and Indonesia, Korea, Afghanistan and India, the Philippines, and from five different provinces of Russia, along with 10 long feature pix and shorts from Japan.

Delegates from Red China and from North Vietnam who had expected to attend the event were likewise not given the necessary visas, but the Russians sent a crew as did the Japanese and the Koreans.

Right now, about six Japanese films and one Indian picture generally are played annually in the German cinemas—but this was a chance to see a group of Asiatic films played condensed at the same center.

The Japanese showed the highest quality and best camera techniques. But one interesting theme was revealed throughout—generally, through almost all the pictures, the main topic was the family and problems of raising the young people. And in this contemporary subject, portrayed with various means throughout the Asiatic world, one felt that the filmmakers were all trying to keep abreast of the times and to present their country in a light that would make it more sympathetic and understandable to the rest of the world.

So for instance the Japanese showed "Don't Die, Mother," the tale of an eight-year-old boy faced with the desperate poverty of his family.

A South Korean film, "My Mother and the Rooter" was likewise told by a child, the appealing five-year-old daughter of a widow who tried unsuccessfully to pair her mother off with the young painter renting their spare room. It showed the ancient mores of Korea, that a widow should not re-marry, comparing her sad lot with that of her ignorant but happy maid, also a widow, who managed to become pregnant and marry by the end of film.

The Soviet pic, "Samurai," presented the possibilities of divorce, and an outspoken Pakistani film titled, "The Only Way," directed by Farid W. Ahmad, showed the country's desperate need for birth control.

One of the most touching films was the Uzbekian film offered by the Russians, "You Are Not an Orphan," made by Uzbekfilm. The Russians seemed to bend over backward to win favor with this one, as they showed the story of a simple Uzbekian family who during the war collected 14 orphan children from various nations. At the end, a German child entered the group, was at first rejected, then became a happy part of the foster family.

"Protect Your Son," a Japanese film directed by Mitsusabu Gosho, showed problems of the father-son relationship, and another film, "Our Luck" directed by Zenzo Matsuyama, was the story of a family in which both parents were dumb. "Run, Genta, Run," another Japanese film directed by Tomotaka Tasaka, showed how a motherless lad found refuge in a UNESCO children's village, and another Japanese entry, "Cupola Where the Oven Meets," told of a family forced into poverty through the father's drunkenness.

Argentina Muscles Aid for Native Pix Via Yank Ratio'

According to word received in New York from Buenos Aires, the head of the Argentine Film Institute has signed a decree which would require foreign distribs in Argentina to handle one domestic pic for every six imports. Move is seen as part of a growing effort on the part of the Argentine industry to enlist aid (one U.S. exec put it as "blackmail") in supporting the sagging Argentine film fortunes.

The Motion Picture Assn. of America is fighting moves to require that all film imports in Argentina be subtitled in Argentine laboratories. During the recent Mar Del Plata film fest there were recurrent rumors that the Argentine Film Institute was considering putting pressure on U.S. distribs to shift all their operations to local distributors.

Everyone Dressing Up For Those 'Cleo' Preems

"Cleopatra" is becoming a honeA" natural, as have several epics before it. Add to the large list of such performances already set for the pic's various local preems, showings June 26 in American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres houses in Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Des Moines and Phoenix on behalf of the fight against Cerebral Palsy.

The circuit, which paid upwards of $2,400,000 in front to 20th-Fox for bookings on the pic, is also plotting other such benefits for the anti-CP fight. Edward L. Hyman, AB-PT v.p., is pushing the CP benefits and Leonard H. Goldenson, pres of the broadcasting exhibition company, has long been a supporter of CP.

German Pix Crix Pick 'Nobi' As Year's Top Film

Berlin, May 7.

The German Film Critics (for the 1958-'59 season) voted the Japanese pic, "Nobi," as the best film. French Jean-Luc Godard received the prize for the best direction for his film, "Kone S." Luis Bunuel won the prize for the best script ("Viridiana").

Harriet Andersson, Swedish actress, received the award for the best actress for her work in "Through a Glass, Darkly" while Italian Marcello Mastroianni was given the acting award for his roles in "Italian Divorce" and "The Assassin."

German Will Tremper received a prize for his direction of his second feature pic, "Die endlose Nacht." (The Endless Night). Karl Michael Vogler, young actor, was the second German to get a prize from the German film crix, for his role in "Confessions of a Man Living in a Furnished Room."

Producers Differ On Brit. 'X' Pix

London, May 14.

While both the producers' associations here apparently have come to the same conclusion, namely that there is not really a surplus of hot "X" films on the general release circuits, there is still a difference between them.

The British Film Producers Assn. still nurses a spluttering hope of sometime (in the not too distant future) securing an added category "AA" for the adult themes as distinct from the sensational thrillers. The Federation of British Film Makers on the contrary, has finally dug this hope into the ground.

The BFPA had recent discussions with John Trevelyan, secretary of the British Board of Film Censors and once again, apparently, pressed its hopes for a new "AA" or similar extra adult category for sometime in the near future. Trevelyan was not hopeful and out of the informal meeting came a suggestion that at the moment, in any event, no more than 10% of general releases were "X" certificate pictures.

This figure does not, of course, take into consideration the "gimmick pix" imported, generally, for use in specialized club houses and for nonpublic exhibition. In the meantime, both organizations accepted invitations to be repped on a confab of representatives of all licensing authorities in the UK, scheduled for May 20.

Star's Illness Halts Shooting on 'Summer'

London, May 14.

Work on "Once Upon A Summer," the Woodfall Film for Bryanston, shooting on location in County Wicklow, Ireland, has been stopped because of the illness of Rita Tushingham.

It is hoped that she will be able to resume shooting in about 10 days.

Rossellini Raps New 'Cinema Truth' Film Prod.; Like Trying Out Camera, Showing Creative Laziness, He Sez

Paris, May 7.

Italo filmmaker Roberto Rossellini took a swipe at the so-called "Cinema Truth" school of filmmaking at a showing of some of these films at UNESCO here recently. Rossellini referred to such producers as "peeping toms." He said he got nothing from these films and the producers seemed like Martians with their first try at using a film camera. A leader of this group, Jean Rouch, answered Rossellini that he, and others, were experimenting and trying to add a new dimension to filmmaking, that is almost spontaneous creation.

"Cinema Truth" pix are a return to on-the-spot abilities of cameras, not used much since silent film days.

Rossellini maintained that it was not alone the tools that counted. He claimed that films were a mode of expression and not just a technical means recording so-called reality. Rossellini stated that the C-T people had just exposed negative. He contended that it showed creative laziness.

Rouch, an anthropologist, brought back some pix from Africa which excited some comment but limited distribution. Francois Reichenbach used his camera to follow a character about and sometime spy on him when not aware of it. Chris Marker did essays via interviews.

New Wavers also used some of these techniques in following their actors about. U.S. teams, mainly for tv, such as Richard Leacock and Robert Drew as well as Albert and David Maysles, were content with just filming their personages in various activities.

In the U.S., Lionel Rogosin went into the Bowery with his "On the Bowery" to create a story around direct observation of its inhabitants.

The Cannes Film Fest will have several films of this kind in the Critic's Section, devoted to promising first films.

Olivier Wins Libel Suit Vs. Publication

London, May 14.

Sir Laurence Olivier will receive an agreed sum of damages for libel, it was announced in the High Court (9). The money will be donated to charity. Olivier had sued the owners of the literary review, Time and Tide, following an article that appeared last month.

This stated that the actor-manager was consulting a hypnotist twice a week and that as a result he was claiming that his marriage (to actress Joan Plowright) had improved. Oliver claimed this was not only an untruth and a wounding reflection on his marriage but also raised doubt as to his ability to follow his profession of actor and theatre administrator. Time and Tide agreed that the report was untrue and had published an apology and correction.

Prior Milan Takes Tumble As Cinema 'West' Smackeroo

Milan, May 14.

"How the West Was Won" (Cinerama-Metro) is likely by local estimates to break most if not all existing boxoffice records at Milan's Manzoni Theatre when it winds up its current run sometime in July.

Pic has been averaging over 2,500 customers per day at the Milan showcase since its Feb. 21 opener. House is a 1,200-seater and prices are pegged at Lire 1,200 weekdays (some $2.15) and Lire 1,500 ($2.50) on Sundays and holidays. 56,721 customers filed through the turnstiles during pic's first month at house, during which time daily average held at a stout $2,900. After 54 days, this total has dropped to only about $2,200 per day.

Staying power of "West" is further shown by fact that while for first three weeks, the total dropped slowly but steadily, the fourth saw it rise again.

Records set so far by Cinerama spectacle are: all-time daily high for single house in Italian pic history, when 4,864 admissions brought in about $11,000 on a single Sunday; and the all-time monthly high for a pichouse, the highest daily average for a whole month; as well as the all-time high for the city of Milan, previously held by "La Dolce Vita": $286,000. The Fellini pic set this mark with 169 days. "West" passed it on its 53th. Next record is expected to be that for the longest single run for a pic in an Italian house.

Quota System for Tele Film Prod. in Britain Backed by FBFM Unit

London, May 14.

Program company tuppers like Lew Grade of Associated Television get up-to-the-neck support from the British Film Producers Assn. for their claim that the proposed government and revenue tax will kill vidpix production in the UK. But for the time being, it is going to have to be purely moral support.

The BFPA at its latest council meeting decided that the association should do "nothing . . . for the moment" concerning the financial proposals in the now debated TV Bill. It knows that it ought to do something to back the program contractors in its role of representative of vidpix producers. But after lenthy discussion, there was a strong school for "biding time" and making a move only when it was possible to pressure for a change in the size of the tax percentage.

At the same time, the Federation of British Film Makers stabs away at the same problem, the same threat of production wilting, from a different angle. Its reps have again warned the Postmaster General that there must be some provision for a quota system for vidpix.

This is reiterating an idea it propounded nearly three years ago because it believed then, and does so more than ever now, that local tv film production will never be launched successfully until some kind of quota system guaranteeing exposure and fiscal returns encourages the program contractors and the BBC to make, finance or buy British pictures for tv.

Where the Federation differs from the BFPA in its approach to the question of bolstering up vidpix chances for local producers, is that it does not insist that these quota provisions need be included in the TV Bill itself provided the government, the Independent TV Authority and the BBC all agree towards the same end.

'Leopard,' 'Devil,' 'Bee' Rack Up New Marks in Italy; U.S. Tops in Keys

Rome, May 14.

Three Italian-made pix, "The Leopard," "The Devil" and "Queen Bee,' have made boxoffice news this week. The costly Titanus pic, "Leopard," moved ahead of "Mutiny on the Bounty" (MGM) in national key city firstrun ratings on the basis of an exceptional showing in 330 days in 12 keys. If the current pace continues, "Leopard" possibly could top the current leader, "The Longest Day," (20th) as well. Incidentally, it has 20th-Fox release outside of Italy.

Runnerup status for the stanza was earned by Dino DeLaurentiis' Alberto Sordi starrer, "The Devil," very strong in most Italian situations, and headed for higher levels. Sleeper status, despite a censorship fracas recently stirred up, must be accorded to "Queen Bee." This Sancro production (which Embassy Picture's releases in many world areas) has proven special strength in hinterland situations although originally tabbed an arty item.

Titanus, on strength of its "Leopard" showing, has now further strengthened its first place among local distribs, followed by Metro, Dear (UA), DeLaurentiis, Paramount, Cineriz, 20th-Fox and others. On percentage-per-pic, its Ineel, first, followed by DeLaurentiis, Titanus, Euro, Dear (UA) and 20th-Fox.

Yanks still hold the key-city lead, percentagewise on the Italian b.o., with 43.3% of market vs. 41.6% for Italo-mades. The Italian position is boosted, however, by coproductions, which brings technically Italian total percentage up to a dominant 48.3%.

Runner-ups are French, with 4.6%, other nationalities, with 1.8%; British-mades, with 1.5%, Germans with 0.5%.

Italo seasonal totals (key-city firstrun only) to April 28 were in vicinity of $26,084,000.

ABC-TV Converts Regular Shows Into 'Specials' for 1-Shot Sponsors

ABC-TV is stimulating some business activity with a new prime-time sales plan which permits advertisers to bankroll "specials" that really are regularly scheduled shows tailored to a sponsor's needs. Under the plan, individual programs of series, such as the new Jimmy Dean and Jerry Lewis variety layouts that have sufficient flexibility in formats, are being sold under full sponsorship on specific nights. The web has at least two such deals stashed with two advertisers planning to launch their fall blitz via this route.

Since ABC-TV is not to be interrupting its regular schedule for the conventional specials, it's figured these quasi-specials will take care of this problem. For the advertiser, it's a chance to get a one-hour full sponsorship identification for about $200,000, time and talent, which is considerably under the cost of the usual run of big-time specials. Much lower rates are possible under the ABC-TV plan since the hour-to-the-min costs are amortized over the full season's run while the above-the-line costs will hinge on the caliber of the guests on the particular show.

ABC-TV execs are also pushing the idea that the conventional specials are frequently overblown hour whereas having a hour on a regular selling schedule, a happy combo of predictable size. The possibility of overshooting costs figures on the down level will be the same as if it were a usual type of special.

The only headache for the web is the difficulty of scheduling such full sponsorships which will necessitate juggling of other programs who are in a weekly or alternate week basis.

Howard K's ABC Slot, Same Client

Howard K. Smith will be back on the ABC-TV network next fall in a new time and format but under the banner of his current sponsor, Nationwide Insurance of Columbus. Smith is taking over the assignment for "Issues and Answers" on Sunday afternoon. Precise time has not yet been set due to the American Football League schedule which ABC-TV carries. Nationwide is broadcasting "Issues and Answers" on alternate weeks.

In addition to Smith, Nationwide has also bought into "The Travels of Jaimie McPheeters," "Wagon Train" and "Stanley's Navy" on ABC-TV. Nationwide was repped by Joe Battaglia, of Ben Sackheim agency, in the deal with ABC.

Smith's return to ABC had been in doubt since Nationwide indicated that it would pull out of the commentator's Sunday night at 10 p.m. "News and Comment" show at the end of this season's run in June.

'Thunderhead' Vidpix Pilot, Which Scratched, To Become Theatrical

Hollywood, May 14.

A high-budgeted, hourlong vidpix pilot which did not find a buyer is now headed for theatrical release.

Selmur Productions proxy Selig Seligman disclosed that "Thunderhead," hour telefilm pilot starring George Montgomery, is now being readied as a 70-min. theatrical feature.

Seligman explained while they were developing the pilot, they thought it had possibilities as a feature film, so decided to shoot it in color, and overlength, hiking the budget from the originally planned $225-250,000 to $400,000. "In effect, we were shooting a motion picture," he remarked. Film was lensed in Arizona.

It's now being edited, and Seligman plans to take the negative to N. Y. in about a month to seek a distribution deal. Larry Lansburgh produced.

Sunskind's S.F. Nix

San Francisco, May 14.

Embattled David Sunskind has politely declined KQED's invitation to tape his "Open End" show at the non-profit station's studios here, preferring to stay in New York.

Station manager James Day made the offer by telegram after Sunskind trimmed WNEW-TV in N. Y.

Bitterness Behind Philco, NBC Feud Out in Open Again

Washington, May 14.

With the enthusiasm of a pistol shot, the two-annual feuds of the NBC-Philco contest for WRCV-TV in Philadelphia collapsed Friday revealing the brine of the intense struggle that is really going on.

David D. Smith, vice president of Philco Broadcasting Co., left the strong impression under questioning by Emest Rank of the FCC's Broadcast Bureau that Philco agreed to drop its WRCV permit as part of a patent settlement deal with RCA.

As Smith was trying rather desperately to recover from the stinging cross-examination brought by Rankin Attorney James D. Cunningham had presented for the defense.

Smith wasn't visibly cowed by the hot, but the proxy came at an awfully convenient time.

Philco proved unable to extricate itself from last-hour Monday (13) on the end of the channel 3 hearing move into high.

David D. Smith and Joseph H. Gillen, v.p. and president respectively, of the Philco Broadcasting Corp., both proved unlikely under cross-examination by FCC counsel Irving Segal.

Gillen, who will be general manager of the Philly station if Philco succeeds in getting the site away from RKO, was thrown for several loops by Segal's technical and programming questions.

Smith, brighter motivating force behind Philco's drive for the station, took up where he left off Friday by bringing testimony last January to which must be mixed with Philco efforts the company's application for the channel.

He said Segal he voted that way "in the public interest" as had been determined by company attorneys.

This, atop his Friday slip that Philco's abortive attempt to withdraw in return for a $500,000 loan from NBC may very well have been part of a patent deal with RCA, could make Smith the goat of the hearing.

Smith's intimation of the deal behind the deal was the first open introduction of the subject into

Nichaels' TV Coup With Hour Tito Interview

By JACK PILER

London, May 14.

Professor Arnold Nichaels has pulled off another globe-girdling scoop in booking interview with Tito, the president. The dickers for the NBC-TV program, "Meet Prime Time Top" around Labor Day. He is the seven days while he was here for a five days hanging with head to wife of John F. Kennedy.

He's due back in New York this week to prep the Tito trip with his director Frank Zachy. They fly to Belgrade in the last week of July. Nichaels has been preliminary meeting with Tito spread over a period of two weeks while the publicity aspect of his Adriatic coast contact with.

Nichaels is one of just three Western reporters granted audience with the Yugoslav leader during his summer vacation and the only TV or film journalist. The success is proof of the old saw that it is

NBC-TV DICKERS UA 'MAGNIFICENT 7'

"Magnificent Seven" might yet make it as a television series. NBC-TV, which almost bought the United Artists property as the 90-minute entry Wednesdays in the time now given "The Virginian," is near a new deal with UA-TV.

Leslie Stevens was offered as producer of the "Seven" pilot. Stevens' Daystar is producing "Stoney Burke," but ABC-TV has cancelled it for next season, leaving Stevens free for NBC.

John Sturges and Walter Mirisch own rights in this country to "Seven," which they made into a western feature remake of the Japanese original. They were the first to propose a 90-minute series to NBC, but there was no pilot. NBC finally turned to Bevos for "Virginian."

Pilot will be for '64-'65 sale.

A Memo To Linda's Friends'

Hollywood, May 14.

"If you were with us during the end of last week, we suggest that you call on your nearest doctor.

"Linda has the mumps and so, probably, will I within the next 21 days. How about you?

"Regretfully, Dan."

The above ad, in last Tuesday's (7) DAILY VARIETY, has a sad story behind it—and made a good segment of Hollywood nervous, because Linda's and Dan's friends are legion.

Dan is Dan Melnick, ABC-TV v.p. in charge of nighttime programming, and Linda is his wife, daughter of composer Richard Rodgers. Back in New York from a Coast trip, the Melnicks found that Linda had the mumps—and decided on the ad as the best way to warn the people she had come in contact with and possibly infected.

Those included: 1) Peter Sellers, Vincent Minelli, Dick Dana, Ann and Bill Dozier and a few hundred others who were present at a big bash given for the Melnicks by Bob Rafelson; and 2) Steve Allen, Jayne Meadows, Allen Sherman and a few hundred others at a party given for Sherman by the Allens, at which the Melnicks were guests.

Melnick, back in New York, is conducting most of his business by phone until the incubation period is over.

Peter Dehmel's Private Airlift

News photographer Peter Dehmel has an unusual transportation arrangement with NBC-TV. The network will "pay indefinitely" to send him to and from West Berlin by airplane.

In other words, he never again has to set foot inside East Germany. The reason is his own safety. Since making NBC-TV's "The Tunnel," of East Germans escaping to the West, he has allegedly been put on the "unknown list" by East Germany's Volpos (police), and therefore the network figures it probably isn't safe for Dehmel to travel the Autobahn through East Germany to assignments in the West. Ditto holds for Dehmel's brother, Klaus, who worked on the show also. Both Dehmels are German nationals.

NBC has extended the same flying privileges to Gary Shindt, NBC Bonn' roundtrip chieftain in Central Europe. Shindt is an American citizen, but the network isn't taking any chances on him either.

'Harry's Girls' Beset by Actor Problems on Minimums, Residuals

Hollywood, May 14.

An unprecedented, international crackdown against an American vidpix series which is to be lensed abroad is underway, as British, French and Irish actors' unions here assured the Screen Actors Guild they will insist SAG-pact minimums and residuals be met on the series if it's shot in those countries. Series in question is NBC-TV's "Harry's Girls," half-hour show slated for airing on NBC-TV next season, with Odgen spearheading.

Major studio moguls in London denied that the series comes under the definition of "runaway" production, and said therefore the agreement reached by a number of international performers' unions including SAG at Toronto last year doesn't apply to this series.

However, the unions involved evidently take a different view, and have given an ultimatum to NBC-TV that unless all demands of SAG-TV for actors' minimums and residuals along as provided for in SAG's basic pact, all the way down, it may boycott and the Hollywood AFL Film Council of which SAG is a part, is planning to organize a sympathetic campaign against the series here. Several unions abroad, with membership including thespians willing for a one-time boycott.

Action against "Harry's Girls" actually began when British Equity and recently it would demand that all performers and producers be paid the minimum wages in the series. British Equity does look the lesser up with the International Federation of Actors.

A SAG spokesman said the guild has a "strong indication" NBC-TV was trying to score loop of the series from England to France. It was revealed at the same time that the guild has received a letter from Pierre Chemin, agent general of Syndicat Francais des Artistes de Paris, assuring SAG that SFA will do its best to impose SAG minimums and residuals on the company if it shoots in France. At the same time SFA requested a copy of SAG's basic pact, and this was dispatched immediately to the French union. The French union said it understood there were plans to shoot some segs at Nice, on the Riviera.

At the same time, Irish Actors Equity Assn. of Dublin informed SAG if the series shoots in Ireland, it will be required to comply with SAG's basic terms. Dermot E. Doyle, general secretary of IAEA, wrote SAG it had been informed

Goldenson's AIC Award

AB-PT prexy Leonard H. Goldenson has been named to receive the 1963 Institute of Human Relations Award of the American Jewish Committee for "outstanding public service in the field of mass communications."

Goldenson will accept the award at the AJC annual dinner Saturday night (18) at the Hotel Commodore, N.Y., in behalf of the ABC News and Public Affairs division.

Digs British TV, Sammy Davis In BBC 3-Yr. Deal

London, May 14.

Following the rave notices received by Sammy Davis Jr. on his one show on BBC-TV last week and the profession has just posted exclusively with the corporation for the next three years and will do a minimum of six 60 or 90-min. shows, all live, at least one of them a production with Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin producing.

Deal is figured to be worth around $500,000, about how Davis makes dish he is "not interested" in the money. "I'm doing it because I've never felt so right with my act as I did last Sunday night," he said when he broke the news here. "I regard that show on Sunday night as the best TV work I've ever done here or anywhere else—and that includes both home ties.

"There was a tremendous spirit of cooperation and warmth and sympathy between every single member of the crew and it gave me the kind of inspiration—I kind of felt—that I've never experi-

Iron Curtain TV Web Asks U.S. for Picture Of Cooper Space Shoot

Intervision, the Iron Curtain tv network, has asked for a summary of the Gordon Cooper 22-orbit space shot from the American tv networks. If the Soviets use the flight coverage, it will mark the first time that the Russians have joined in the use of the U.S. communications satellites since Intervision will be fed via Telstar II or Relay or both.

Under the planned feed, the vidtape summaries of the U.S. networks' pool will be sent to the Eurovision network of the European Broadcasting Union via the satellites. They then will be passed on to Intervision through an eastern European country — probably Poland.

Gottfried to UA-TV

Howard K. Gottfried, N. Y. theatrical attorney and stage producer, has joined United Artists Television as production administration v.p.

Newly created post was said to have grown out of UA-TV growing activity in the network program field, with four and a half hours of weekly network programs slated for next season.

Gottfried will headquarter in N. Y. and will report to Richard Dorso, exec v.p. in charge of programs.

HOW TO SAVE $6,000 A MINUTE

Minow Quits; Henry New Chairman

Washington, May 14.

President Kennedy today (Tues.) accepted the resignation of FCC chairman Newton N. Minow and named Comr. E. William Henry as chairman of the agency.

The President also disclosed he will nominate Lee Loevinger, assistant Attorney General in charge of the Anti-Trust Division, as a FCC commissioner to serve out Minow's term, which runs into 1967.

William M. Orrick Jr., now deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration, was named to replace Loevinger as head of Anti-Trust. Minow's letter of resignation was dated May 1. Kennedy's acceptance was dated today (Tues.) with the understanding Minow will stick with the FCC until June 1.

Loevinger, 50, was born in St. Paul and now has Minneapolis as his legal residence. He is a former associate justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court. He has headed the anti-trust division in D.C. since March 16, 1961.

No mention was made of the job Minow will take afterwards, but it is known he will join Encyclopaedia Britannica as general counsel.

President Kennedy wrote Minow a letter in which he praised Minow for having provided "effective leadership," and having achieved "indeed impressive results."

"I trust that the service which you have rendered to your fellow citizens will in the years ahead continue to be a source of the deepest personal satisfaction," the President wrote.

It is know authoritatively that Kennedy's original intention was to bring in a new man from the outside for the FCC chairmanship. However, it is also known that Minow strongly recommended upgrading Henry, who joined the FCC in October, 1962. He is 34 and is a Democratic from Memphis. Since coming to D.C. as a commissioner, he has strongly indicated that he is for a tough attitude on virtually all broadcasting issues.

Industry circles figure Henry'll be harder even than Minow. Loevinger's appointment requires Senate confirmation, Henry's, as chairman, does not.

From the Method to 'Bonanza,' For Lorne It's Green Pastures

By HERM SCHOENFELD

How does an actor who has savored the poetry of "Othello" feel about doing a single role week in and week out in a show like NBC-TV's chick "Bonanza" series? For Lorne Greene, playing the role of Ben Cartwright, father of the "Bonanza" trilo of Cartwrights, has brought him international renown, steady work and the possibility of developing his craft.

"When you sign up for a television series," Greene said, "you either hope it's going to be successful or you're not being serious. Of course, there is a problem in doing the same role in a tv series, but that problem can be met constructively and creatively by an actor." Greene said that he was a thespic advocate of The Method and uses memories of his own father in his tv portrayal.

Now going into his fifth year in his "Bonanza" character, Greene does occasionally ask himself whether he can play another role. To prove that he can, he has appeared in the Dublin Workshop on the Coast in Christopher Fry's "The First Born" in the part of Moses. "An actor," Greene said, "has no trouble finding all the variety he wants."

Greene himself harbors ambitions as a singer. He's done some guest shots on the Perry Como and Andy Williams show and, most recently, has cut an album for

P&G's $3,000,000 Summer Spread

Procter & Gamble last week found close to $3,000,000 to spread among the three networks for third quarter (summer months) sponsorship on minutes buys in programming.

Biggest sum (about $1,750,000) was allocated to NBC-TV. Next highest amount ($800,000) went to CBS-TV while ABC-TV picked up $500,000.

At the same time, P&G which exited from ABC-TV's "Wagon Train" next season, has come onto the web with participations in four shows next season.

In addition to early buys on "The Fugitive" and "Ben Casey," P&G extended its commitments to "The Outer Limits" and "Amos Burke," both one-hour dramatic shows bowling on ABC-TV this 'all.

Emmy Show's $80

Procter & Gamble has been creeping up on the Emmy Awards telecast, so to speak.

Sponsor slowly worked its way up to ownership of two-thirds of the 90-minute special set on NBC-TV for May 26.

Several days ago, it inked a third of the show, then last week for an additional sixth and a few days later for still another sixth. Total: two-thirds.

Shows is then $80. Libby, McNeill & Libby owns the remaining third, which was bought all at once.

Coast Food Firms Yen Network TV; Hunt's $3,000,000

Coast-based food companies are discovering network television in a big way. Sparked by the phenomenal success story of Golden Grain Macaroni's selling campaign on tv, a flock of other food companies are surging into the network picture next fall. Golden Macaroni more than tripled its volume since hitting the daytime screens last year.

Hunt Foods is coming into primetime tv for the first time next season with a near $3,000,000 buy on ABC-TV's "My Three Sons." California Packing, for its Delmonte canned foods, spent over $2,000,000 last year on tv and is due to be back again.

Other Coast-based food companies coming in for network or major regional buys are Safeway Stores and Hills Bros. coffee.

BING'S FIRST CBS SPECIAL NOV. 7

First Bing Crosby special has been sold out to Pontiac (along with Lever Bros. for Pepsodent) and is scheduled to preempt the "Perry Mason" hour Thursday, Nov. 7, from 9 to 10 p.m.

Pontiac, Cone & Belding program execs are now on the Coast to make final arrangements with Crosby. Bopping Lever Bros., the agency hopes to take half sponsorship of four Crosby specials this coming season. Pontiac has come in for the other half.

THE LATE BIRD GETS TV WORM

By GEORGE ROSEN

Today, unlike yesterday when the tv loot of an agency was what programs it bought for its clients, the definitive service lies in how much under the network rate card it can buy them.

As of last week, one of the more skilled of the Madison Ave. agencies not only shaved the rate card of one network, it decidedly clipped it.

The $1,200,000 of fourth-quarter ABC-TV network spots bought last week by Young & Rubicam for Remington Electric Shavers throws into sharp relief the essential nature of the '63-'64 tv buying of minutes and how in vital, salient respects it provides a dramatic contrast to the past.

For in one handshake, Y & R bought for Remington Shavers not only 40 pre-Xmas network minutes many of which are in identical shows purchased by Schick Electric Razors (Norman, Craig & Kummel) some weeks ago, but (if you please) at $6,000 per minute less than the price paid by Schick.

In early April, Schick bought a bundle of ABC-TV minutes (for about $60,000 per) in a scatter plan composed of such programs as "Arrest and Trial," "Wagon Train," "77 Sunset Strip," "Outer Limits," "McHale's Navy" and Ron Cochrane news.

Now, before the middle of May, Remington—by bidding back for released prices which have now dropped to the scatter plan average of about $30,000 per minute—has bought into each of the above identical Xmas buying season for campaigns which both Remington and Schick will promote and merchandise to the same channels of trade and to the same retail outlets, distributors, etc.

Not only does the sharp price drop of $6,000 per minute in six weeks point up the advantage of late buying in today's network tv market whose prices continually decline as the new season nears, the significant difference in price (now that the networks no longer extend favorite nation price guarantees) paid by two direct competitors for the same programs in the same fall season underscores the new tv facts of life. The agency role is oriented less and less toward program selection and more and more toward sharp, shrewd buying to give its client that all important and often decisive profit-making edge on the tv advertising front.

Quite obviously, the agency, whose sense of timing and buying skill can secure for a client the same tv program minutes—on adjacent weeks of the same season—for which a leading competitor pays 20% more, hands its client the kind of decisively competitive advantage as would be occasioned by its hiring factory workers or buying the same raw materials for one ninth less than that paid by competitors.

Barnum Out, Marum In

That's why a Bud Barry, Y & R's tv factotum, who engineered the Remington vs Schick coup, the Dick Pinkhams at Ted Bates, etc., are now riding high in their agency saddles. While yesterday's successful tv agency head was a latter day P. T. Barnum, today's model is more in the tradition of a David Marum.

Barry's buying prowess in negotiating network sponsorship for next season has been by no means confined to the Remington deal. A few weeks ago he purchased for Hunt Food half-sponsorship of "My Three Sons" starring Fred MacMurray at a time discount of 60%. This season as in the past two years ABC-TV had sold full sponsorship of the same program to Chevrolet at the maximum rate card discount of 25%.

In past seasons, buys comparable to that of Remington at about a 60% discount (on which the web makes no money but does recover

'Victory at Sea' on 10th Birthday Has Racked Up All Kinds Records (It's Had 14-Go-Rounds in Okla.)

"Victory At Sea," which was 10 years old on May 3 last, has undoubtedly established more records than any other public affairs program and probably more than nearly every program of any kind in television.

It has established military, foreign, professional precedents and tv exposure records.

According to Don Hyatt, the executive producer of Project 20, the NBC-TV hit that made the 26 half-hour films that are "Victory at Sea," every navy ship, navy installation and navy substation has at least one copy of "Victory" in stock, to be used "as an educational device." It is otherwise rare indeed that a tv program, put out by a commercial company such as NBC, becomes a permanent training film for sailors.

"The foreign market has been fantastic," said Hyatt. "It has been shown in every country in the world that has television and shown theatrically in some of the countries where there is no television.

"I think we can make the statement that "Victory at Sea" is the granddaddy of all non-fiction programs, too," Hyatt noted that it is still being shown. It's in its 13th run on WPIX, N. Y. It's been seen 11 times in Milwaukee, 13 in Los Angeles, and Oklahoma City holds the record with 14 showings of the series. In all 206 U. S. tv markets have shown "Victory at Sea" in 10 years.

Under these circumstances it's no wonder that the 26 half-hours, which no sponsor considered commercial enough to buy in 1952, have proved to be money makers for NBC. The extent of the film sales was not divulged, but on the other hand, as Hyatt pointed out, $4,000,000 has been grossed in sales of "Victory at Sea" records. (The disk was on VARIETY's best-seller lists until very few months back.) Music was written by Richard Rodgers and conducted and arranged by Robert Russell Bennett, "who are still collecting royalties checks," said Hyatt.

Then of course there are the awards, a source of fulfillment almost as satisfying to network execs as money. "Victory at Sea," among others, has an award from VARIETY, awards from Peabody, Sylvania, the TV Academy, Freedoms Foundation, City of Boston Film Council, American Weekly and The Christopher Society.

Hyatt was assistant to the pre-

HUNTLEY-BRINKLEY NEWS NEARS $80

NBC News is now four-fifths of sellout on the forthcoming half-hour nightly version of the Huntley-Brinkley news program, because Standard Brands has picked up an alternate weekly quarter-hour of the revised stanza.

Standard Brands has been out of nighttime NBC-TV since 1960. Bankroller joins R. J. Reynolds, American Home Products, American Chicle and Alcoa as a Huntley-Brinkley newsstrip sponsor. There are still four months before the stanza shifts from 15 minutes nightly to a half-hour.

Looks Like NBC, WB May Be Going Steady in '64-'65

Warner Bros., which for years couldn't find comfort any where but ABC-TV, is very close to making NBC-TV its new home.

The production company and the network are now dickering two properties for the '64-'65 season, one based on "Around the World In 80 Days" and the other based on a Warner feature film not yet released theatrically called "Temple Houston."

Said to be one of the reasons behind the increase of affection at NBC for Warner's tv properties is that WB's new video chief is Jack Webb, who goes back with NBC-TV to his "Dragnet" days. He and NBC-TV program veep Mort Werner have been dickering for some time on the tv properties.

As a sign of how close the two companies are to an arrangement is the appearance of Ben Kalmenson, No. 2 man at Warners hierarchy, in NBC powwow.

"Phineas Fogg" is the name of the half-hour pilot being heard on Jules Verne's public-domained "80 Days." Fogg was the lead in the book and in the recent feature made by the late Mike Todd. Jeff Hunter and James Coburn front the feature "Temple Houston," about a Texas lawyer who was nephew of Sam Houston. There is no pilot. What NBC saw—and evidently liked— was a cut-down version of the unreleased feature.

Warner Bros. was once the heaviest program contributor to ABC-TV. Next season, however, the only WBC-ABC deal will be on the return of "77 Sunset Strip."

'GENERAL HOSPITAL' ABC DAYTIME TONIC

While CBS-TV's lineup of daytime shows continues to float along in a league of its own, the soap opera derby for the runner-up spot between ABC-TV and NBC-TV is generating some interest. At this stage, it looks like ABC-TV's new "General Hospital" entry, at 1 p.m., is giving the web a much-needed lift on the afternoon scene. For the last two weeks, "General Hospital" has been out-pulling both of NBC's soaps, "Ben Jerrod" and "The Doctors" on the multi-market Nielsen report.

For the two weeks ending May 4 "General Hospital" had a 17.2 average share against a 11.3 for "Ben Jerrod" and 15.8 for "The Doctors." It's the first time that ABC-TV has outranked NBC-TV in the daytime race. CBS-TV long-running soap operas, some of which have been on for 10 or more years, rack in powerful shares ranging from the high 30s to the 50s.

ABC, NBC Dicker Allan Sherman

Hollywood, May 14.

ABC-TV and NBC-TV are in negotiations with Allan Sherman, each seeking the comedian to star in a vidseries.

ABC is interested in Sherman starring in a situation comedy or variety show. Situation comedy would be aimed at the 1964-65 season, but the variety format—a live show—would be on next season, if the discussions materialize into a deal. Web still has a time slot open early Saturday night.

NBC is discussing a situation comedy for the 1964-65 season with the comic.

Meanwhile, the Mirisch Co. and 20th-Fox are in discussions with Sherman anent a motion picture vehicle for him. Sherman is in talks with producer Harold Prince anent the possibility of his starring in a filmusical based on Prince's Broadway show of several seasons back, "Fiorello." Sherman has rights to "Where Did You Go? Out? What Did You Do? Nothing," and is in discussions with Edward Padula and Frank Loesser regarding a Broadway presentation of the vehicle. Sherman may do the book, Loesser the songs.

Teleseripters' $15,565,000 Earnings Sets New High; $11,354,450 Theatrical

Hollywood, May 14.

Theatrical and tv film writers earned a record $26,920,100 in Writers Guild of America West's fiscal year ended last March 31. TV writers again raked in the most coin, earning $15,565,600, while the screenwriters earned $11,354,450,000.

Previous high for tv writers was recorded in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, when teleseripters earned $14,777,800. For screenwriters, the previous peak was for the fiscal year ended in 1957, when they earned $11,151,500. Writers give 1% of their earnings to WGAW, so that the guild has an accurate record of the coin taken in by scripters in all areas.

A fiscal report sent members by treasurer John Lee Mahin also shows radio scripter earnings are up, to $177,900 this past year from $156,370 the previous year.

WGAW total revenue of $921,-925 is up from the preceding year's $816,000. However, guild expenses are up to $816,725 from the previous year's $677,720, an increase of $39,000. WGAW reports most of the hiked expenses are due to increased residual department costs, including auditing and legal fees, additional personnel, grievance-filming expenses and negotiation expenses.

About $25,000 of the $39,000 originally logged to members during the 1960 strike is still due the guild. WGAW's emergency fund is $150,000, WGAW's building liabilities were cut about $7,000 during the year, leaving total building liabilities at $156,000. Gross rental income for the year was $14,700, and after rental expenses the guild netted $6,000 from rentals.

At least a partial explanation of the screenwriters' gain lessens in the face of lower Hollywood production is that the writers are probably hurt less than anyone else by so-called "runaway" production. This is because, in most cases, when a producer does film a picture abroad, he employs a Hollywood screenwriter to knock out the script. Thus WGAW probably suffers less damage than any guild or union from the exodus of production to foreign lands.

WICC's 'Hey, Look, No Rating Pitches'

Fairfield, Conn., May 14.

Radio station WICC here, one of the northeast's strong outlets both in coverage and billings, has dropped all rating services in the sale of both retail and national advertising.

Kenneth M. Cooper, prexy of Connecticut-Newark Broadcasters (owners of WICC) says that over the last several years, ratings have had "less and less influence in the sale of time." He says emphasis is swinging more toward actual sales results of leading advertisers.

"The extent of radio listening has become so vast that it is physically impossible for present rating services to measure audiences," says Cooper. "The use of any available ratings only detracts from the selling power of the medium."

Cooper made known his plan to drop the ratings at a meeting in New York last week CNB's board of directors. Rating reports have been withdrawn from WICC's local salesmen and from Adam Young rep offices throughout the country.

WLOL 'Savings Jamboree'

Minneapolis, May 14.

Biggest promotions ever staged by any of the 19 Twin Cities' radio stations has non-affiliated WLOL here starting a six-week "Savings Jamboree" that offers $12,000 worth of "fabulous prizes" including 2,000,000 S. & H. Green Trading Stamps.

First prize is 1,000,000 stamps plus a week in Las Vegas for two. There are hundreds of other prizes among them 1,00,000 S. & H. stamps given away on the air, 100 Sylvania transistor radios and 50 Bulova watches.

Could Be Red Mueller's Late News Will Stick

Lacking an actual decision, one might say that Merrill (Red) Mueller's 11:15-11:30 p.m. newscrip on WNBC-TV stands "a pretty good" chance of becoming a fixture after its first 13 weeks.

Because of the newspaper strike, NBC News and the N. Y. owned & operated station of NBC-TV jointly decided to extend local news by 15 minutes every weeknight and the chore was given Mueller. In the past few weeks, the 11:15 rating has climbed to where, at one point, it was higher than the former 11:15 occupant in N. Y.—"Tonight" show, which now begins at 11:30.

There is no decision due actually for several more weeks.

Storer Stations' Top Cleve. Honors

Cleveland, May 14.

Storer's two outlets won top radio and television honors in the annual awards given by the Radio Television Council of Greater Cleveland.

WJW-TV was cited for its "Adventure Road" with Jim Dewey, and WJW was named for its "Young America Sings and Plays." The top honors, "Tywin M. Conway" citations, were named for the past president of the group who strove for "promotion and encouragement of better programming in the Cleveland area, with commendation, rather than condemnation." In the awards both stations were cited for helping family programming.

"Adventure Road," hosted by Dewey, includes travelogs by area camera enthusiasts interspersed within the evening movie period thus "doing much to bridge the gap of dimensionless programming. It brings dad home from the office eager to sit down with his entire family to enjoy adventure and education."

As to radio citation, the Council noted spotlighting choral and band groups from area schools was recognition of talent and work by students and educators.

Honorable mentions were given to KYW-TV's Dick Goddard, weather show; WEWS religious programs; WHK's Highlights in Education and WERE's Portrait of Charles Laughton.

In FM programming, WCLV was named for its fine arts shows reflecting local cultural programs.

Stan Hubbard Bares Time-Life $18,500,000 Offer for Minn. KSTP

Minneapolis, May 14.

Although Time-Life has owned and operated WTCN television and radio here for many years, it also once—not so long ago—sought to buy another Twin Cities' station, KSTP, the NBC affiliate.

This was revealed by Stan Hubbard, the latter's owner.

Hubbard disclosed Time-Life had offered $18,500,000 for KSTP more than a year ago and was turned down. Since then no further effort to buy has been made, he says.

Rumor is afloat here that Time-Life now was in the market for KSTP and a deal likely would be closed shortly prompted Hubbard to make the facts public upon his return from his annual winter-long Florida visit.

At one time WTCN had the ABC network affiliation for both tv and radio, but now is sans any network lineup whats ever. In the Twin Cities 20th-Fox's KMSP is the ABC-TV affiliate and locally owned KRSI the radio.

All Minnesota Twins American league baseball games that are televised, some 30 of them during the season, go out over WTCN and are understood to be a source of considerable revenue for the station, as are a number of its other tv sports shows.

Central America Web Ups Its TV Coverage

Central American Television Network, a six-nation network associated with ABC International Television and now marking its third anni, is now reaching 131% more tv sets than it did at its outset. In May, 1960, CATVN reached a total in five markets of 63,000 sets with total time cost for a half-hour of prime time at $931. Currently, the circulation is now counted at 111,000 sets in six markets while the half-hour costs have gone up to $988, only a 20% hike.

Don Coyle, ABC International proxy, said the trend will continue. "The rapid emergence of the Central American Common Market, which was given added impetus by President Kennedy's meetings with the Central American Presidents in San Jose in March, has increased CATVN's importance to international advertisers even further.

Nation-by-nation breakdown of set increases is as follows: Costa Rica from 3,000 sets in 1960 to 14,000 currently; Guatemala from 22,000 to 32,000; Honduras from 2,000 to 6,000; El Salvador from 17,000 to 24,000; and Panama, which joined CATVN in April, 1962, with a current count of 26,000 sets.

Ambitious WNDT Drama Segs Hinge On AFTRA & Coin

Precise future of a proposed experimental dramatic series on WNDT, the educational tv station in N.Y., depends on at least two things—the outcome of a vote by many of those appearing on Channel 13 whether to accept the American Federation of TV & Radio Artists as the bargaining agent, and on money.

Jurisdictional vote will be counted by the American Arbitration Assn. next Tues. (21).

Dr. Samuel Gould, the controversial head of WNDT, explained that the experimental dramas would naturally depend on stock or AFTRA-member actors are available for use. Also, whether the series (called "Television 13") is 60 or 90 minutes long and how many there will be depends "on how much we have to spend." This is not a question of shortage so much as it is how to allocate the funds available.

One of Gould's several problems until recently was how much, if any, of the National Educational TV division program supply to take in '63-'64. He figures now that he will continue most season at generally the same pace as now. WNDT is entitled to 10 hours of NET programming, but, Gould noted, that doesn't necessarily mean he'll take it all.

Last week, Gould held a press conference to assert that the cultural aspects of Channel 13 would remain. There previously had been a report that Gould had promised NBC brass he would go in very heavily next season for classroom-type programs. The report, being investigated by the FCC, was vigorously denied by both Gould and NBC.

$24,000,000 U Pix to 7 Arts?

Seven Arts Associated is reportedly close to a deal on acquiring for tv distribution Universal's post-'48 pix library. Deal is said to be for $24,000,000, with no Universal sharing in the gross.

Queries to both companies regarding the reported deal was met by a no comment. 318 pix are involved in the projected deal.

Avert Last-Minute Walkout at WTCN

Minneapolis, May 14.

Compliance with Minnesota Gov. Karl Rolvaag's request for a 30-day "cooling off" period averted at almost the final minute a Time-Life non-network WTCN television and radio union engineers' threatened strike.

The expected strike would have halted the subsidiary WTCN takeout from local Metropolitan Stadium of a New York Yankees-Minnesota Twins American league night baseball game eagerly anticipated and destined by an estimated 1,000,000 audience.

And even though New York's WPIX-TV, owners of the situation here, had sent its own crew to televise the contest to Gotham, the likelihood was that this, too, couldn't have been accomplished if the walkout had occurred.

A fact finding panel appointed by the governor is engaged now in studying the dispute's issues.

Involved are engineers, projectionists, film editors, photo lab and film men and other technical personnel, about 60 in number, all belonging to the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Union, local 292, and employed by the station.

These men's contract expired April 1. What the union wants are a wage increase, additional fringe benefits and a change in control room procedure.

All-Star Ragbead Panel Kicks Off Replacement Program for 'Open End'

"The American Experience," the two-hour talk show which replaces the axed David Susskind "Open End" series on WNEW-TV, N.Y., kicks off with a array of guests including poet Archibald MacLeish, novelist John Dos Passos, Sen. Eugene McCarthy, N.Y. Times Sunday editor Lester Markel, pollsters Lou Harris and Elmo Roper and Columbia U Professor Charles Frankel. Richard Heffner is moderator.

Kickoff subject, to be aired Sunday (19), will be "The American Mind and Mood." The show has been designed as a complex of segments including readings, debates, interviews and discussions. Arthur Barron is producing and Don Moran is directing. The show will be aired on all six tv stations of Metropolitan Broadcasting chain.

Don't Invites': Nielsen & Laurent

Researcher Cancels Out of WGN-TV Panel Because Of Critic's Appearance

Chicago, May 14.

Arthur Nielsen Jr. last week cancelled a May 19 appearance on WGN-TV's "Your Right To Say It" because the producers refused to replace Washington newspaperman Larry Laurent on the interviewing panel. Nielsen told the show's producer that Laurent had been "unfair" in his Washington Post coverage of the House special investigations subcommittee hearings on ratings, and that he (Nielsen) would not appear on the same program with someone so manifestly hostile to his firm.

Bob Thomas, producer of the show, said that Nielsen's public-relations firm called him and asked if the rating company exec could "give his side of the ratings story." Thomas said he rejected Laurent because of his on-the-scene coverage of the D.C. hearings, and that he was unaware that Laurent had been harsh with the Nielsen company in his coverage.

Nielsen has been replaced on the show by Ernest Clay, research director for ARB. He will be interrogated by Laurent, Chicago Daily News television Terry Turner and regular moderator James McSweeney, dean of the Northwestern Univ. speech department.

Show is aired at 8:30 p.m. Sundays on WGN-TV and is re-played on WPIX, New York, the following Saturday morning.

Baldwin Subsid Gets a Chi UHF

Washington, May 14.

FCC rejected a complaint by the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists and awarded UHF television channel 32 in Chicago to Television Chicago, a subsidiary of the H. & E. Balaban Corp.

It was a 4-1 decision, with Commissioner Robert T. Bartley dissenting. Commissioner Kenneth Cox abstaining and Chairman Newton Minow absent.

AFTRA objected because the applicant didn't propose sufficient local live programming.

"Examination of the application," the FCC majority wrote, "discloses the applicant's proposes 10.8% live programs. In view of the fact that the applicant's proposal is for the establishment of a UHF station in a predominantly VHF market, and in view of the percentage of live programming proposed, the Commission has determined that a grant of the application would serve the public interest . . ."

Wm. Warwick Group In Fred Jordan Deal

Hollywood, May 14.

Half of the stock in Producers Studio Inc. was bought by a group headed by William Warwick. He made the deal with Fred Jordan and, in the reorganization, he becomes prexy and Jordan chairman of the Hollywood studio setup.

Warwick was once veep and director of tv for the Warwick & Legler N. Y. ad agency and has lived in California the last two years. He is also prexy of American Entertainment Corp., which recently produced "Lady In A Cage," a feature released through Paramount.

Producers Studio was founded by Jordan two years ago.

PRICE WAR ON OFF-WEB HOURS

Dig Those Crazy Mets

New York's National League Mets, who have topped the league in attendance while struggling along in the lower half of the second division, are also making a sweep of the tv ratings.

New York's ARB and Nielsen baseball fans, who last season gave the Yankees a slight edge in the overall average, last weekend went virtually all out for the Mets.

Faced off against the Yanks (WPIX-TV) in three games over the weekend, the Mets (WOR-TV) pulled an Arbitron of 9.1 (average quarter hour) against a 2.8 Friday night; a 10.7 against a 3.7 Saturday; and a 10.6 against a 6.8 Sunday.

When the Yank's second game (against Baltimore) was rained out, the Mets rating leaped to 12 plus for their 13-12 win over Cincinnati in the second game of a double header that ran for seven hours.

At the outset of the season, Yanks and Mets were averaging out in the ratings much like the previous season.

'Oren's Omen' on Radio Stations Allowing Programming to Atrophy

Washington, May 14.

Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark) gave a subtle but several edged warning to the radio industry to revitalize its unbalanced program of music, news and advertising.

Harris, chairman of the House Commerce Committee responsible for broadcast legislation, said the present radio programming fare "constitutes an unfortunate waste of precious spectrum space."

"In the long run," Harris went on, "some people question whether the continued use of radio frequencies for a daily diet of recorded music with an occasional broadcasting of news and a plentiful gravy of advertising is in the public interest."

"Without question," he said, "... radio today in the United States does not provide service at its full potential."

Harris expressed his concern over the frequent interruptions in programs for advertising and said the average listener "is not favorably inclined towards such excesses in this respect."

He said his committee had received numerous complaints of radio stations refusing to sell time to bona fide political organizations.

"Is the public interest served by such refusals?" Harris asked.

"Oren's Omen" was delivered to the Advertising Club of Metropolitan Washington. Through the third person technique Harris listed his grievances against the industry, leaving the implication that he and his committee are watching on the sidelines.

"Under no circumstances," Harris averred, "should we permit radio programming to atrophy just because television—the newer medi-

Fontaine Footage As Pathe Special

Pathe News, which has 30 half-hour variety films in the vaults featuring Frank Fontaine, plans to put an hour special together on the currently hot video comedian culled from the footage in the old bundle.

Pathe' prexy Joseph P. Smith says, "We have screened each segment carefully and have found enough of Frank's top routines to make several one-hour shows. However, we have decided to concentrate on just one blockbuster—at least for the present." Initialer, he says, will be up for regional sponsorship, or perhaps national.

In answer to the suggestion that Pathe is trying to cash in on Fontaine's current popularity via the Jackie Gleason-CBS variety hour, Smith says, "There is no doubt that Frank is one of the hottest properties on tv today, but he has been a great comic for years."

"Showtime," title of the Pathe' package, features Fontaine as host and performer, including several celeb impreshes, a singing turn and the w.k. John L. C. Sweeney bit. Smith says there's also an impresh of Gleason indicated in the series' scripts, but the film has not yet been located.

Virgil Mitchell Exits Chi WBBM For Coast

Chicago, May 14.

Virgil Mitchell, director of sales promotion and information services at WBBM-TV, has resigned in order to take a similar job with KTLA-TV, Los Angeles. He'll move to the Coast later this month.

Mitchell has been with the CBS o&o since Jan. 1, 1959, and prior to that had been with another CBS station, KMXT, L.A., for four years.

6-Yr.-Old 'Yukon' Segs Switcheroo Syndie-to-NBC

"Sgt. Preston of the Yukon," kidvid series that had a ride on CBS-TV in 1957 and which has been in syndication since, will be slotted on NBC-TV beginning Oct. 5 from 12 to 12:30 p.m. Saturdays.

While the fact that the 78 stanzas of "Yukon" are in color could have been a factor in the NBC buy, Telesynd prexy Mardie Frieberg (the Jack Wrather syndication wing handles the show) sees it as a continuation of the inexhaustible exposure potential of kidvid adventure series.

Frieberg figures shows like "Yukon," "Superman," "Fury," "Lone Ranger," "Lassie and others will be running 10 years from now if there's still such a thing as syndication. Not only is there always a new audience arriving for the kid stuff, but the kids for some reason love to see the same adventure situations over and over again—digging the chance to predict what's coming.

Only a few adult series in memory have had the stamina of kid stuff, says the Telesynd prexy. One was the anti-Communist series, "I Led Three Lives," which was peddled over and over again to local sponsors along with a hard patriotic pitch (latter worked fine, says Frieberg, until salesmen encountered the Dallas banker who said, "Boys, some of my best accounts are Communists, and I don't want to insult them"). Another, he says, was "Dr. Hudson's Journal," which was a constantly solid sales item until the medicos took over primetime.

KECC-TV's ABC TIE

KECC-TV in El Centro, Calif., is joining the ABC-TV network as a primary affiliate. The new station is slated to begin operations Sept. 1, covering the El Centro and Yuma markets.

H. Scott Kilgore is prexy and general manager of Tele-Broadcasters of California, operators of KECC-TV.

50's DIVIDEND

Screen Gems has declared a regular quarterly dividend of 15c per share on its common stock.

Melon is payable June 28 to stockholders of record on May 23.

BUT SYNDICATORS BLAME OTHER GUY

The off-network hours, which had an adventure in paradise, when the product supply was limited, now are taking a price beating in the market place, according to some syndicators.

"There's a price war going on," according to one key exec, "and the hours are being dumped without regard to price structure." The sentiments of this key exec wasn't shared by all syndicators. Some admitted that the markets of Los Angeles and Chicago, for example, have become toughies as far as price is concerned, but for reasons other than the quantity of off-network hourlong series now on the market.

One principal hourlong syndicator made this generalization regarding prices: Where the off-network hours have done well locally the prices either have remained stable or have gone up; where the rating situation proved out poor for the hours, selling new hours is difficult and prices have gone down. This syndicator, who has been in the hourlong field for some time now, claimed that in 80% of his markets, he currently is securing better prices.

It's almost axiomatic when seeking out the price picture, one syndicator blames the other for cutting prices. Most every syndicator contends that he will not liquidate his property, he would rather stay out of the market than sell at a loss. Matching notes on many key syndie houses, it's apparent that the hourlong price structure is being pinched by the quantity of product. The pinch may be felt because of the type of product, the experience in the market, the quality of the product, or other factors. It's there nevertheless.

The syndication exec who stated that there is a price war going on in today's market place, warned that the present climate is similar to the half-hour syndication market of years back, when in the words of one hurt syndicator then, "syndicators stoned themselves to death" in price cutting.

It's understood the properties meeting the stiffest price competition are those in the strictly-adult field, the properties which cannot be played with ease in the early evening, or even a daytime strip. There are a number of such properties around, all vieing for a late evening time period.

Contributing factors to price slashing is the need for grossing results of certain companies, firms which cannot wait for a slow selloff at upped prices.

COLUMBUS WLW-C BUMPS STEVE ALLEN

Columbus, May 14.

The "Steve Allen Show," aired via WTVN-TV here for the past several months, has lost a rating battle with the Johnny Carson "Tonight" telecast via WLW-C and late movies on WBNS-TV. Show was cancelled May 2 to make way for "Surfside Six" reruns.

WTVN-TV spokesman said the Allen show had "a loyal but relatively small audience during its 43-week run and station authorities felt sufficient time had been allowed for the program to attract an adequate audience. At this point, management decided that the Allen show would have to be replaced with a program that would prove of interest to more of the viewing public."

'Dobie Gillis' Sales

"Dobie Gillis," which goes off the CBS-TV network at the end of this season after a four-year run, was sold in four markets by 20th Century-Fox TV in its syndication kickoff last week.

Stations buying the package of 147 half-hours include WGN-TV, Chicago; KMSP-TV, Minneapolis; KOMO-TV, Seattle; and WFLA-TV, Tampa.

Grinberg's 'Battle Line' OF Syndie Entry Restricted to 52-Wk. Buys

'Laramie' as Daytime Strip for Chi, L.A.

Placed in syndication only two weeks ago, according to the distributor, "Laramie" has been sold on a daily strip basis to WNBQ, Chicago, and KABC-TV Los Angeles. In both cases, when the hour goes on next fall, it'll be filling afternoon slots now held by feature films.

The off-network hour, handled via NBC Films, has also been sold to seven other stations — WUSN-TV, Charleston, S.C.; WEAR-TV, Mobile; KXTV, Sacramento; WOI-TV, Ames, Ia.; WTVM, Columbus, Ga.; WTVC, Chattanooga, and WSJV, South Bend.

First-run is now finishing up on NBC-TV. There are 124 films in the "Laramie" package.

25-Market Deal Set by UA-TV On Welper Specials

United Artists Television has kicked off the sale of David Welper's planned series of six syndication hourlong documentary specials, with a 25-market deal with Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. Deal was hailed by UA-TV exec v.p. Bud Rifkin as the largest first-run syndication sponsor order in the past 18 months.

Deal blankets 23 of the top 30 markets.

The six hourlong tv specials for the '63-'64 season will be "Dec. 7—The Day of Infamy," "The Rise and Fall of American Communism," "The Yanks Are Coming," described as nostalgic documentary film about World War I, "Ten Seconds That Shook the Earth," filmed documentary dealing with the creation of America's atom bomb; "Berlin: From Kaiser to Khrushchev;" and "The American Woman in the 20th Century."

Marshall Flaum will be producer-director on all of the six documentaries, four of which are expected to be in work by July. Liberty Mutual deal, set via BBD&O, was negotiated by Robert Reis, special projects manager for UA-TV.

SET FRED ROBBINS WNEW RADIO SHOW

Fred Robbins, veteran disk jockey and radio personality, is joining WNEW Radio, N.Y., May 19 with a four-hour show of music and celebrity interviews each Sunday from 8 p.m. to midnight. Robbins will continue his syndicated show, "Assignment Hollywood," a three-time-a-week five-minute show heard on 200 stations outside of New York and throughout Europe via Radio Luxembourg. Wally King and Billy Taylor, who had shows in the time now taken over by Robbins, will continue with their other assignments on the station.

In another weekend shift, Klavan & Finch are moving from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. on Saturdays to 8 a.m. to noon. The early morning hole will be filled by a two-hour news show, "Saturday Morning Closeup," with Bob Howard and Jack Brandt.

Barry Lawrence Shifts

Barry Lawrence is exiting his job as ad-promo-publicity director for Allied Artists TV to join United Artists TV in the same capacity. Lawrence checks in on his new job next week.

It's a new departure for the John Sinn-Dick Dorso UA operation which previously had used "outside" manpower to exploit shows.

Official Films, high on the prospects for its new archives war series, "Battle Line" (formerly titled 'Men at War"), which shapes as a fitting sequel to the success of "Biography," now in its second year and very close to 200 markets, has extended the package from 26 to 39 half-hours, and will be selling it strictly on a 52-week pact.

With a pilot in the can (on the battle for Iwo Jima), and a deadline of five stanzas completed for a fall start (followed by one a week through the season), producer Sherman Grinberg was in the east last week to wrap up pre-production plans with Official prexy Seymour Reed, and Washington appointments with government and military officials. Depending on confirmation of Soviet appointments (primarily one with the Minister of Culture), Grinberg will be off soon for Moscow and then Germany, England, Italy and Japan on "Battle Line" business.

Series, scored by Nelson Riddle, is formatted to include besides host Jim Bishop (Hearst columnist, author and former Collier's mag war correspondent) a survivor from either side of each show's subject (Iwo Jima pilot features a bronze-starred Marine sergeant now living in California and a Japanese infantry veteran who returned home to find his name on the honor roll of dead on a war monument, seen in the opening moments of the stanza). O'seas, Grinberg will be seeking survivors for use on the show, setting up representatives who will handle dubbing, recording and filming chores for sync of survivors with completed films and ferreting out new film for the series. The producer is head of Sherman Grinberg Libraries Inc. (on the Columbia lot), the largest film library in the world. But via contacts already known to him, he expects to get a lot of special footage on the international swing.

Grinberg produced Official's shorty series, "Greatest Headlines" and "Sports Folio," and was production supervisor on "Biography," actually producing a half-dozen or so in the series. Since he has his own processing setup, the producer figures he can print anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 feet for each series for final selection of the 2,500 feet or so going into each half hour (pilot in its first version ran 53 minutes, and more than 25,000 feet of film was printed for the initialer).

Official prexy Reed, who more than a year ago predicted 200 markets for "Biography," says "Battle Line" will sell as well.

Metromedia's '63 Earning: $2 Share

Metromedia, parent company of the Metropolitan Broadcasting radio-tv chain, estimates its stock will earn about $2 per share in 1963 as against $1.40 last year, according to a report made by chairman and prexy John W. Kluge to the annual meeting of stockholders in New York yesterday (Tues.). The $2 figure is exclusive of earnings from any acquisition, such as Ice Capades made this year. Metromedia's buy of Ice Capades for $3,000,000 is detailed in the Vaude Section.

Kluge reported that all operating facilities are showing a profit this year with earnings running ahead of estimates. He also noted that interest rates on the company's $7,500,000 principal amount of 15-year notes and on the $10,000,000 revolving credit have been reduced to 5¼% and 5⅛%, respectively. Originally, the rates were 6¼% and 6% respectively.

Metromedia reported net income of $703,283 for the first 13 weeks of this year, equal to 40¢ per share. This figure compares with $136,732 for the same period a year ago.

Do You Make These Mistakes In English?

Credible as it may seem to the average reader, all the faces above belong to the same man.

The man is José Jiménez, who's parlayed an unlimitedly expressive visage and a highly limited knowledge of English into one of the most hilarious characters in all show-business.

He's also become the star of the spanking-new "Bill Dana Show," one of many lustrous attractions on NBC-TV's multi-faceted Fall roster.

If José has no objection to the show's title, it's because he and Bill Dana are really closerthanthis. One might say they grew up together.

Most of the growing-up took place in the form of television guest appearances, night-club engagements and record albums, with writer Dana creating the material and performer Jiménez enriching it with his stranger-than-diction delivery.

On the Fall series, Dana's alter-amigo will be playing the role of a crisis-prone bellhop. Who but José could wangle a free hotel suite for a destitute, forlorn-looking old lady, only to find out she's using the premises for a floating poker-game? Who but José could unintentionally upset a reception for an "imported" Caribbean starlet through a casual observation that her accent was phoney? No, life isn't very tranquil for José. But we know this Fall's audiences will find him the warmest, funniest bellhop this side of a hotel register.

"The Bill Dana Show" is, of course, just one temptation in a batch of goodies being whipped up for NBC-TV's 1963-64 schedule. The other delights range from tested favorites like "The Virginian" and "Sing Along with Mitch" to such newcomers as Imogene Coca's "Grindl" and the "Mr. Novak" dramas. It shapes up as a great year.

Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

FIGHT FOR SPORTS SUPREMACY

Stanton: Right Thing at Right Time

CBS corporate proxy Frank Stanton's penchant for saying the right things at the right time was demonstrated anew last week in his luncheon address to the network affiliates at the Waldorf-Astoria. Leaving to Jim Aubrey & Co. the chapter-and-verse recital of the CBS sphere of influence and affluence in the work-aday world of broadcasting, Stanton chose rather to isolate and very pertinent and timely Page One subject of educational tv in relation to commercial tv.

"We in commercial television," said Stanton, "have a very real stake in its (educational tv's) survival and success. It must succeed in its broadest, not its narrowest, concept. It must be independent—independent alike of subsidy by government or subsidy by commercial television."

Thus was summed up the Stanton thesis as, in one fell swoop, he spurred himself and CBS with the FCC or any other interested party of parties who might conceivably have entertained any notions of a "deal" involved in CBS financial gifts to New York's WNDT educational outlet.

Stanton in his address urged the commercial tv industry to take an increasingly active role in establishing and supporting educational television both as a strong adjunct to commercial broadcasting and as a competitive service. "If we honestly believe in free competition, we should welcome educational television into the free competition for the viewer's attention. It is to me overwhelmingly clear that educational television is one additional competitive factor that can give us the kind of prodding anyone needs in order to improve constantly."

CBS, he said, which has donated over $1,000,000 either in equipment or funds to etv stations, welcomes etv not only as supplementary to, but as competitive with, commercial television service. He asked commercial broadcasters to aid etv stations in other areas besides material assistance.

In an unrelated development, John F.W White, proxy of National Educational Television and Radio Center, said he would address etv affils meeting in N. Y. on Friday (17) on the subject of "Exploding the Myths that Surround ETV."

The etv debate was stirred by the firing of Richard Hoffner, as program director of WNDT, N. Y., by the exchange of letters between NBC board chairman Robert Sarnoff and WNDT topper Samuel Gould, and the subsequent announced FCC investigation.

FCC said that it would investigate the etv situation in New York, the influence, if any, that commercial broadcasters may have on the programming schedule of WNDT. Both WNDT topper Samuel Gould and NBC board chairman Robert Sarnoff have denied that NBC's gift of $660,000 to WNDT was predicated on any promised narrowing of WNDT's program schedule in favor of strict teach tv.

CBS Ream's 'Go Slow' Warning To Collins on 'Ban the Butt' Campaign

Joe Ream, CBS-TV program practices v.p., raised the "go slow" flag on any "premature action" in regard to banning, limiting, or altering cigaret advertising on television.

Ream, addressing himself to the cigaret-cancer controversy in his speech to CBS-TV affils, took a tack which is opposite that of LeRoy Collins, NAB prexy. Collins, in the line of wide broadcasting industry opposition, has urged television to take the initiative in limiting and altering cigaret commercials, especially as they influence youngsters. (Cigaret companies spend about $140,000,000 yearly on network advertising).

Ream summed up his attitude on the cigaret-cancer controversy this way: The very troublesome problem to broadcasters stems largely from the fact that broadcasters are asked to take premature action in a field of conflicting opinion where broadcasters do not have expertise. "It is my feeling," he continued, "that we should continue on with cigaret advertising which is honest and truthful and in good taste, as it has been, and should wait the evaluation and probably the recommendations of the Surgeon General's commission

No Pre-Screening

The networks have won their fight with the National Assn. of Broadcasters over NAB's demand for the right to screen programs in advance, Joe Ream, v.p. of program practices, reported to the CBS-TV affils meet.

"The NAB has finally agreed that they do not have that right," he said. Ream noted that the twin bugaboos of critics in the past, excessive violence and excessive sex, seems to have subsided as a tv issue. Network, he added, is on a continued "good taste" alert.

ABC's Jimmy Dean And His All-Youth Impresario Team

Jimmy Dean's one-hour variety show on ABC-TV next season is currently being whipped into shape by a tv youth movement. Although a veteran, Bob Banner, has the ultimate reins as exec producer, he's given all the contributing assignments to personnel in their early and mid-20s. Dean himself is about 28 years old. Production lineup on the show now includes Jules Di Benedetto as producer; Bill Davis, director; John Aylesworth and Frank Peppiatt as head writers of a team of seven scripters; and Peter Matz, musical conductor.

Di Benedetto, who's been working on "Candid Camera," another Banner Associates show, said that the Dean show will attempt a topical approach that will be unusual for variety shows. At this point, it has not been determined whether the Dean show will be telecast live or live-on-tape. If the latter, it will be taped the same day the show is to be aired to achieve maximum timeliness, Di Benedetto

BOTH NBC, CBS, GIRD GRID LOINS

When CBS-TV prexy Jim Aubrey at last week's affiliate confab warned about networks "pricing themselves out of the market" on sports buys, he was obviously alluding to NBC-TV's acquisition of the National Pro Football championship game, which toted up to a flat $615,000. It's not only a record price but probably the biggest chunk of coin ever committed for a one-shot event.

Yet for all his protestations on skyrocketing prices for sports packages, the fact remains that there is now shaping up the biggest battle in network annals for supremacy in the realm of sports. When, a few years back, CBS forked over $9,650,000 to wrap up the pro grid Sunday afternoon schedule for a two-year period, and an additional $10,250,000 for the NCAA Saturday afternoon grid shirmishes, it's recalled that the same hue & cry went up—but with the shoe on the other foot. Yet either network would be lucky to duplicate that feat at those prices, next time up.

What is implicit in the wheeling & dealing among the webs to grab up the best availabilities (and when the showdown comes there won't be any holding back on the bidding, whether it's NBC or CBS) is the undisputed fact that sports has now become the catch-all, the creme de la creme, and the piece de resistance in the whole scheme of network programming. What prexy Bob Kintner has done for NBC news over the past few years he's now determined to achieve in the sports arena (as witness his pro grid championship buy, his Summer Olympics coup and his recent overbanking of the web's sports sector). He knows only too well what it means to the affiliates who don't like to see major sports event flying the coop.

For all of Aubrey's squeamishness about that $16G NBC bid, it's equally as certain that CBS, from Bill Paley on down, has no intention of letting the competition move in on the national pro games, or for that matter the NCAA frays. And whatever the outspoken avowals about outlandish prices, somehow they all have a way of coming out profitably in the end.

Kintner, for example, is practically guaranteeing a profit statement on that championship game, ready committed to a fourth each with Ford and Philip Morris aland with two other major sponsors, including Amoco, standing in the wings. At 75G per minute and 16 minutes of availabilities, Kintner says "we'll not only sell out and make a profit, even after payment to stations, but there will be a couple of disappointed sponsors left behind."

Next target date—and it's the big on they're waiting for—is December, when CBS-TV's two-year contract on national pro football

NBC'S 'REPORT FROM . . .' TUES. '10000 PIECES'

After Chet Huntley's Tuesday prime time half-hour goes off the time will be filled by other NBC News correspondents in a new format. The 10:30 p.m. period, as of July 2, will be called "Report From . . ." with correspondents in various cities around the globe fronting consecutively.

Cities already chosen are Dublin, Rome, London, Paris, Tokyo and Hong Kong. It's possible additional shows will come from Washington, Warsaw, Beirut, New Delhi and Munich. The NBC News correspondents will be "guides" from each of the places, although NBC-TV says the half-hours won't be travelogs but rather "timely mood stories."

Daniel O'Connor will be N.Y.-end producer and Jack Sugrue, Fred Rheinstein and George Vicas field producers.

Whatever Problems (We Should All Have Them) Confronting the CBS-TV Affils — They're Not of Web's Making

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

The "hip-hip-hooray" meet of CBS-TV affils in N. Y., attended by some 1,000 delegates, was one of the coolest, fat-cat gathering in years, with the emphasis on "keep-on-punching-to-stay-on-top."

It was a two-day meeting which saw the satisfied customers of the web service more concerned about Government interference, possibility of forced licensing of rating services, the cigaret-cancer controversy, educational tv, and other matters, than on intra - web squawks.

Not that it was all sweetness and light. The clearance problem and what it means in loss of network revenues was spelled out by affil relations v.p. Bill Ledge. The complaints though were in a minor key. The climate was that of rating and revenue riches, a climate of peace and happiness for the record number of delegates attending.

CBS-TV affils saluted prexy Jim Aubrey as the new "Mr. Television" in a resolution, praising his qualities of leadership, business acumen and showmanship.

Aubrey, in what could be characterized as a response, said in effect "we plan to stay on top and we need your support to continue on that plateau," the heart of his remarks at the opening of the affil meet.

Opening of the two-day meet took place at the Trans-Lux 52nd Theatre, which is near the Waldorf-Astoria, the site of the confab. Programming v.p. Mike Dann outlined the efforts of his division to get the best of talent, before and behind the cameras.

Rating scandals notwithstanding, Dick Golden, director of market development, in his presentation to affils (the same presentation used to ad agencies) made hefty use of the Nielsens in showing the continued strength of CBS-TV, as opposed to the other two networks.

The fireworks, of a non-traditional intra-web variety, developed in the second day when Joe Ream, vp. of program practices, locked horns with NAB prexy LeRoy Collins on the cigaret-cancer controversy (see separate story).

Ledge, affil relations v.p., opened the second day meet in a recital of the dollars and sense of network-affil relations. He warned that affils bumping network shows in favor of syndicated or other properties might eventually dilute the monies available for network programming.

Aubrey might have taken some of the steam out of the address

CBS' Cybernetic Eye

CBS-TV is about ready to test an electronic billing and clearance procedure which allows the network to transmit special identifying frequency bursts on the video feed of all CBS-TV programs.

These electronic pulses are not visible on a home receiver, but they will enable the data recording unit at each affil to identify all CBS-TV programs automatically. Bill Ledge, affil relations and engineering v.p., informed that the system has to be cleared by the FCC. It has run into some delay at the FCC, he added. Before the system is adopted, meaning a $600,000 commitment by the web, further tests will be made. He said there probably will be a field trial by the end of the year and possible introduction in mid-'64.

Failure of Affils To Clear Costing CBS $17,000,000

Despite the belief that CBS-TV has the strongest program schedule yet going for it next season, the web will lose an estimated $17,000,000 in gross time sales because of non-clearance of network shows by affils.

Bill Ledge, v.p. of affil relations and engineering, laid the $17,000,000 non-clearance loss figure on the line in his address to affils. He went on to say that the $17,000,000 figure for uncleared time (est. '64) will be the highest ever (est. '63) network—about $3,000,000 above the level of four years ago.

He softened the blow in the last act climate of the two-day affil meet by prefacing his remarks that most of the affils probably are carrying as much of the web schedule as could reasonably be expected. Apparently, the exceptions, though, when they are added

Salant Spells Out To CBS Affils Extended Coverage of News

CBS-TV will have one hour and 10 minutes of network news broadcast Monday through Friday next season, CBS News prexy Dick Salant pointed out in his address to CBS-TV affils.

He said the new morning Mike Wallace show, titled "CBS News—Morning Edition with Mike Wallace" to run from 10 to 10:30 a.m. will be "a hard news program," dealing with the news "in a story-telling and personality-in-the-news way." Av Westin is expected to produce.

Don Hewitt has been selected as exec producer of "CBS News—Evening Edition with Walter Cronkite," title of the expanded 30 minute news show in the evening. The five-minute daytime news strips will continue.

Salant revealed plans for the "Sunday News Special" to provide a Coast origination at 11 p.m. local time, with an orientation toward West Coast news. "We believe it is time that the West Coast got this kind of recognition from CBS News," he added. The increased news schedule of the network, he went on, will result in specialistations by correspondents. Salant also announced plans for a return of the veteran interview series, "Face the Nation," which will originate from Washington, beginning in the Fall.

CBS Springs More Talent on Affils

CBS-TV took the occasion of the week of its two-day affil meet in N. Y. to make a series of new talent commitments, each pointing to the web's continued thrust to the stars.

Pulitzer Prize playwright William Inge was signed to develop a one-hour vidfilm series for the '64-'65 season, tentatively titled "All Over Town." Larry Gelbart, author of the Broadway hit "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," was signed as one of five writers for the "Danny Kaye Show." Van Heflin was set to narrate "The Great Adventure." Robert Goulet was inked to co-star with Carol Lawrence in a one hour musical variety special for '63-'64. Goulet deal also calls for the development of a weekly, hourlong variety series in the future. Bing Crosby set for four specials. Cast of "Calamity Jane," 90-minute special slated for '63-'64 season starring Carol Burnett, was filled. Weekly series vehicle for Miss Burnett also is being developed for '64-'65.

CBS 1st Quarter Hits a New Peak

On the eve of the affiliate meet last week, CBS, Inc., reflecting the opulence of the occasion, issued its first quarter statement for '63.

Statement reported record profits and sales for any first quarter in the company's history. Consolidated net income for the first three months was $10,178,691, compared with $9,673,709 for the corresponding period of 1962, an increase of 20%. Current earnings are equivalent to $1.11 per share, compared with 88 cents per share (adjusted for stock dividend) earned for the first quarter of '62.

11 Lifers at Security Hospital Paroled As Result of KMSP Expose

Minneapolis, May 14

Eleven lifeterm prisoners at Minnesota's Security Hospital have been granted conditional paroles as a result of a probe of the state institution touched off by 20th-Fox's KMSP-TV publaffairs director Jim McGovern in February.

McGovern's tv documentary, titled "The Forgotten," exposed scandalous conditions at the St. Peter, Minn. hospital which houses mentally-ill state prisoners. After McGovern's KMSP blast, former Minnesota Gov Elmer L. Anderson appointed a factfinding committee to check into charges McGovern had leveled. The committee's report assailed Security Hospital administrators for failing to provide adequate medical and psychiatric treatment.

Ten days ago, the Minnesota Adult Corrections Commission opened parole hearings at the hospital. The hearings were the first parole reviews ever held at Security Hospital. In his television expose, McGovern had raked the commission for ignoring the plight of the hospital's inmates "for the last 30 or 60 years."

The commission studied records of 26 lifetermers who have spent more than 700 years at Security Hospital and Stillwater prison. It granted medical paroles to 11 of the 26 on condition that arrangements could be made to move them to open mental hospital wards or state nursing homes. None of the inmates was judged well enough to be freed without psychiatric treatment.

PRINCE PHILIP'S IN BBC 'LOOK' CONTRIB

London, May 14

Prince Philip has taped for BBC-TV a 10-minute contribution to the 100th edition of its natural history programs "Look" run by a personal friend of the Prince naturalist Peter Scott. The spot is part of a big deal the BBC-TV service is planning for its part in the UK's National Nature Week starting May 18.

The Prince spent two hours at the BBC-TV production centre last Thursday (9) to get his chore taped. He worked from a script "one but made numerous amendments himself, particularly his intro to the program which doubly will also serve to explain the aims of Nature Week to the viewers.

Apart from the intro he acts as linkman through the 40-minute program which is produced by Nicholas Crocker. It goes out on May 23.

Houston—"The Lonely Ones," a film on juvenile delinquency produced by the U of Houston Film Center for the Greater Houston Action for Youth Project, has received a national award from the Alpha Epsilon Rho national honorary radio-television fraternity. "The Lonely Ones" was shown by Houston's three tv stations several months ago as the first in a series of programs on juvenile delinquency in the Houston area.

SAG's New Scales On 90-Minuters

Hollywood, May 14.

Because of the influx of 90-min. telefilm series, the Screen Actors Guild has negotiated new rates and conditions for actors in the longies. TV next season will have a trio of such shows, Revue's "The Virginian," "Arrest and Trial" and "Wagon Train."

SAG provisions call for a hike in minimums for a three day part, to $300, but minimum plays at $255 for hour and half-hour shows; series parts, 13 episodes guaranteed, minimum is $600 per reg; series parts, less than 13 episodes guaranteed, minimum is $825 an episode; pension and welfare cutoff figure hiked to $6,000 for series parts, figure remaining at $4,000 for shorter shows; multiple pic-weekly part eliminated for longies; day player rate, $100 a day; weekly freelance, $250.

Chi Jove Disk Jockey Dick Biondi (of WLS) In Self-Imposed Exile

Chicago, May 14.

Dick Biondi, kingpin Chi juve deejay, has ankled radio station WLS in a policy-personality clash with management. Biondi did not turn up for his 9-12 p.m. show on Friday, May 3, and had not returned as of last Friday (10). At week's end station prexy Ralph Beaudin said that "the door was open" for the deejay to negotiate differences but the mystic had not been picked up by Biondi.

Should Biondi's self - imposed exile become permanent, the effect on the ABC affiliate would be serious. Pulse report for February (which came out during Biondi's hiatus) shows WLS with 10% of the measured audience for the first six hours of the broadcast day, 13% for the 12 to 6 p.m. period, and 20% for 6 to 12 p.m. This is a loss over the previous month of 3% in each of the first two periods, and a 10% gain in the late evening hours, which includes Biondi's show.

Biondi started with WLS soon after it was taken over by ABC three years ago and scrambled to the top of the evening radio rating heap in a relatively short time. His own show averaged 45% of the Pulse homes last month, and one half-hour seg captured a high of 56%.

Beaudin would only say that "it would be hard to separate the issues in dispute from the personalities involved," but it's reported that Biondi was angry with what he considered management meddling in the program content and tone of his show. He is also said to have had offers from several Chi and New York stations in recent months.

MEET SAMMY DAVIS JR.
Producer: Dennis Main Wilson
45 Mins., Sun., 7:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

There is only one safe way to showcase Sammy Davis, and that is to give him his head. Producer Dennis Main Wilson thus eschewed gimmicks, ensured a smooth, and mainly frontal, view from his cameras, and the result was one of the most impactful shows of its kind for many a moon.

The senses were stirred in the opening minutes, with Davis belting out a rocketing "Once in a Lifetime" to a band arrangement that might have been devised by an artillery expert. And throughout George Rhodes was responsible for meaningful musical direction, immaculately performed by a local pickup group. The show was full of vocal variety. Davis sticking to the standout standards like "Lady is a Tramp" and "What Kind of Fool Am I?". The mood switched for a haunting "My Funny Valentine," with backing from Terry Rosen's dulcet guitar, although maybe Davis was inclined to bend and lengthen a note too artificially in the slow ballads, destroying the sense of the lyric. Another vocal click was his "Under My Skin" to deft drumming from Michael Silva, with Davis wittily interpolating "Road to Mandalay" to disrupt the seriousness.

His ad-libbing underlined his racial status ("Two, four, six, eight—we don't want to integrate"), and other highlights in a wellnigh faultless program were his demonstration of a wild-west fast-draw, his strawhatted terping to "Me and My Shadow" and satirical flamenco, and his clutch of imitations, linked to the kind of hats worn by such luminaries as Astaire, Bogart, Cagney, and Cary Grant. Strangely enough, his Sinatra was the only impersonation that fell short. Davis bowed out with a stirring "Birth of the Blues," having provided an object-lesson in attention-clinching, full of spirit, vigor, talent, and humor. Otta.

THE IVOR NOVELLO AWARDS
With Catherine Boyle Bilk, Matt Monro, The Tornados, Steve Race, Ron Grainer, Gordon Franks, George Mitchell Singers, Harry Rabinowitz Orch.
Producer: Graeme Muir
60 Mins., Sat., 7:05 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Eight statuettes, called Ivors, were presented on this show to the 1962 winners in different pop-music categories, and Graeme Muir's production was a straightforward affair, unimaginative in scope and hardly lavish enough to turn it into an occasion. Emcee Catherine Boyle, a gal with a built-in giggle, hosted in typical brittle manner, and the awards were presented by other showbiz celebs, including Millicent Martin, Lionel Bart, Carole Carr, Billy Cotton, and Wilfrid Brambell (who also twisted with Miss Boyle, she looking condescending).

"Disk of the Year" prize went to the Tornados for "Telstar," and the lads went into orbit with zest. Pianist-composer Steve Race copped the light orchestral award for his "Nicola," a charming tune which was accompanied by some tricky, but untidy, terping. Matt Monroe safely delivered "My Love and Devotion," voted the best song of 1962, and the Gordon Franks jazz composition, "Outbreak of Murder," made a stylish winner in its field, although jazz purists might ask what's the connection.

Ron Grainer's memorable signature theme for the tv series, "Steptoe and Son," got the show-tune prize—and it was intriguing to hear a full arrangement, rather than a snippet. The best musical score went to the Cliff Richard movie, "Summer Holiday," and was represented by a clip from the film, and there couldn't be any dispute about the justice of this one.

Acker Bilk walked off with a statuette for his mellifluous "Stranger on the Shore," the most-played newcomer of 1962—but whether mere frequency deserved a prize is another matter. And music publisher Laurence Wright, also known as composer Horatio Nicholls, got the annual prize for outstanding service—and was celebrated by an anthology of his jaunty output. Music backing under Harry Rabinowitz was immaculate, and the reliable George Mitchell singers piped and pranced to order.

But it seemed a pity that the show wasn't treated with more pomp and circumstance, to enhance its stature as a significant ceremony. Otta.

THE DAVE KING SHOW
With Dave King, Dennis Price, Patsy Ann Noble, Mark Singleton, Jessie Robins, Dorothy Burke, Colin Neale, Bernard Lahdy, George Mitchell Singers, Norman Percival Orch.
Producer: Ernest Maxin
Writers: Brad Ashton, Bob Block, Gerry Mosin
30 Mins., Sat., 8:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Manchester

Dave King, previously unfortunate in the uneasy format and queasy material of earlier series, was more tautly and brightly presented in this initialler of a six-week skein. Producer Ernest Maxin ensured a pleasing air of informality, and the irritating self-assertion that can impair King's presentation was played down.

There wasn't a great deal of novelty in the scheme—it followed the routine of song and gag, with the expected guest celeb—but the scripters nicely oiled the old joints. King himself amiably ambled through such standards as "Just in Time" and "Too Marvellous for Words," and the comedy, too, came naturally. With Dennis Price, he took part in a nimble sketch which had waiters giving the movie actor first-class service whilst King was treated with indignity.

Patsy Ann Noble, a pretty kid from Australia, gets her first local tv break in the series. She tried a Garland with "You'll Never Know" and her piping was deft and dulcet. Joined King in a dance routine, and generally made a decorative impression.

The production, though simple, was roomy, and the segment simmered agreeably, without being explosive. Otta.

REBELLION
Producer: Television Reporters International Writer: Robert Kee
55 Mins., Sun., 5:10 p.m.
Associated-Television, from London

In contrast to the topical "Arab Ferment" series of three half-hours TRI, the group formed mainly from ex-"Panorama" reporters and production staff, showed another facet of its abilities in this, its second venture. "Rebellion" was a survey of the Irish struggle for independence from 1913 to 1923, and its chief asset was an unfamiliar hoard of film from the period, splendidly assembled under the direction of George Morrison. The show challenged comparison with "The Titans," two programs from BBC-TV that deployed this century's history of Russia and America. It stood up well to the test—with a slight reservation. Robert Kee's cool and lucid soundtrack commentary provided a clear historical account of events, but, probably deliberately, it lacked the idiosyncrasy of opinion and phrase provided by Malcolm Muggeridge for the other hours. The film stirred the responses, the words were inclined to refrigerate them.

But said film was enthralling. Apart from swooping to isolate details from stills in the first stages, it was live throughout. All the figures of the time—from Eammon de Valera to Edward Carson—strutted across the screen, almost betraying their sympathies in their stance and gestures. The tragedy and the gallantry of the poorly-armed Irish volunteers pitting themselves against imperial Britain were starkly recreated, and the blind destruction of the British reprisals was not glossed over. Such film of hollow and burning Dublin buildings, the hunger-striking patriots, and murders in the street was even more potent because it had faded from the memories of most.

Then, after self-government had been won, there came the bitter strife between those Irishmen who accepted the Commonwealth link through the Crown and those who insisted on a republic. This made a searing climax to a story which did little for the national credit.

Perhaps because film was not

COMMEMORATING LAW DAY: MAN'S DAY IN COURT
With Raymond Burr
Producer-Director: George Bennett
Executive Director: Alvin L. Meilander Jr.
Writer: Glenn Bernard
60 Mins.: Tues., 7:30 p.m.
HARLEYSVILLE INSURANCE CO. & FIDELITY PHILADELPHIA TRUST CO.
WCAU-TV, Philadelphia

The unwieldy title of this hour-long special carried a tipoff to the verdict: Too slow and too long. Raymond Burr starred and the TV net's Perry Mason has had more actional if not more factual scripts. "Man's Day in Court" dramatized historic legal tussles beginning with the first recorded case in ancient Egypt.

Session was hobbled by what must have seemed a first-rate idea to its producers—using original local spots for the worldwide settings. Program was lensed on the Museum of Art steps, for the judgment of Socrates; Independence Hall, for the trial of Peter Zenger, which established America's freedom of the press; Bryn Mar College was the setting for the medieval practice of trial by dunking and ordeal; the University Museum's Egyptian section, for early Babylon, Constantinople, etc.

This had a reverse effect since the impressive and realistic settings brought everything up to a documentary present and made the action seem like economy-sized little theatre.

The station reportedly exercised considerable care in working up the session employing three researchers and 43 specialists in finding correct settings and authenticating historical data, props and costumes. Burr made a fine advocate-narrator, but his professional sheen pointed up the non-Equity standing of the cast of 27 local actors. Even with his resonant voice and assured delivery Burr needed only a clicker in some segments to give the proceedings the quality of a lecture with slides.

Scripter Glenn Bernard has several award-winning documentaries to his credit, all lensed on location. "Man's Day" was presented in cooperation with the Philadelphia Bar Assn. and the American Bar Assn. The special will be shown throughout the U.S., wherever Burr appears in behalf of the Bar Assn. and its "peace through world law" drive. This bar examination, however, could hardly be expected to pass its prime time rivals, "Laramie" and "Combat." Gagh.

FIDEL CASTRO INTERVIEW
With Lisa Howard; William H. Lawrence, John Scali, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating
Producers: Robert Siegenthaler, Lawrence Rocherman
Directors: Marshal Diskin, Richard Armstrong
60 Mins., Fri., 7:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Havana, N.Y., Washington (film)

The ABC News department aired a film interview with Cuba's Fidel Castro that made one think—think about Castro, about American politicians and also about the improvement in Lisa Howard Lowendahl, the girl ABC sent to the island country to interview the Premier.

Americans hear a good deal of propaganda about Castro, some of it probably true, but the one-hour program, done last Friday (10) in prime time, gave viewers here the opportunity to understand, even a little better, the Communist opposition in the western hemisphere. Mrs. Lowendahl, the same lady who nubbled self-servingly up to Nikita Khrushchev a couple of seasons ago and made herself silly, was self-controlled and persistent in her questions of Castro. Apart from a bit of unnecessary repetition, she did what a good interviewer ought—she worked over her customer so you knew where he stood why and, when he was evasive (very cleverly so), you could tell it, if you listened.

provocative—segment of the ABC-cans who demand impartiality, provactive—segment of the ABC-TV program was the use the last 20 minutes of the hour by two U.S. solons, Senators Hubert Humphrey and Kenneth Keating. The Senators reviewed Castro's remarks to ABC News, but their review carried the obvious domestic bias against him. They accused the Cuban, probably justly, of distortion and then themselves distorted to the degree that what they insisted was fact about Castro was obviously their own opinion. And, again, while probably true, Senator Humphrey's charge that Castro was a Russian "Puppet" sounded propagandistic.

The Castro-Lowendahl film was of poor quality, but ABC News copped a plea by noting for the public that it was made by Cuban technicians in a Havana hotel room. That was okay, but it was unnecessary for ABC to issue an opening disclaimer—something to the effect that no Americans, including those at ABC, agreed with Castro, but that his point of view was news. Perhaps the fear that a longish interview that gave the Cuban opinion would be disliked by patriotic American viewers also prompted the Keating-Humphrey 20-minute "last word."

Regardless of its faults, the program was an important scoop, and developed further a controversy worthy of American digestion. Art.

WHAT'S GOING ON HERE
With John Bird, Roger Bowen, Peter Cook, MacIntyre Dixon, Bob Kaliban, Pat McCormick
Producers: Clay Felker, Jean vanden Heuvel
Directors: Jonathan Miller, Arthur Forrest
Writers: Full cast, additional material by Richard Severe
30 Mins.: Sat.-Sun. (11-12), 9 p.m.
WNEW-TV, N. Y.

"What's Going On Here," a satirical workover of current events, is an experiment in commercial tv whose results could only be appraised fairly over the long pull. In England, the BBC-TV has been unsettling English audiences regularly with its "That Was the Week That Was," after which this show was candidly fashioned. If "What's Going On Here" is given the chance to puncture the bureaucratic sacred cows and stuffed shirts on a weekly basis, then it could justifiably be hailed as the most outrageous, audacious and sacrilegious entry on American tv. If this show turns into a one-shot, then it can be considered only as a gesture of bravado whose consequences frightened its creators and patrons.

This half-hour outing, shown on both Saturday and Sunday nights, suggested a brilliant potential in its approach to the news. Only a couple of bits ventured into acutely sensitive areas, but even in playing it safe, the show bared fangs that were remarkably sharp for tv.

The opening sequence, an interview with a medical spokesman for the American Medical Assn., was far and away the frankest editorial stand taken by the script. It not only rapped the AMA resistance to the medicare program, but pressed forward to the advocacy of socialized medicine. Only the great wit of this bit staved off the shock of heresy. The AMA could safely ask for equal satire on WNEW-TV.

The next sequence declined in sharpness of viewpoint and level of taste. It was a play-by-play description of an assassination attempt on De Gaulle, done in the staccato style of broadcast coverage of a horse race. Film clips of people being brutally beaten by a mob was rather a macabre takeoff for a laugh.

Two niffies followed. First was a short, sharp jab at that famous 5th Avenue apartment building which now houses Gov. Rockefeller, and his new wife, his first wife and Richard Nixon. The second was a comment on the British intelligence agency, a service regarded as without peer in international espionage circles. But not on this show where the needle was put into the British. Of course, it's much safer to deflate Colonel Blimp in the U.S. than knock the FBI.

The last sequence was a descent into low vaudeville. Target was the Asiatic country of Chaos, pronounced like Laos, where the fun was extracted out of the incomprehensible names of that country's rulers. Okay for only fast laugh, but pressed too far on this show.

The cast of players, chiefly recruited from the little revues and off-Broadway, played with verve and style throughout. Herm.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

The Nurses

Nothing less than the word distinguished is merited in talking about last Thursday's (9) edition of "Nurses" on CBS-TV. It was titled "Express Stop From Lenox Ave." And in simple yet overwhelming terms it told of a Negro nurse struggling to achieve a respectability in her chosen profession. Hardly a new subject in the delineation of the Negro problem, yet as written for the tv medium and performed by Claudia McNeil, Ruby Dee and Carl Lee, it was as persuasive and mature in its treatment as any probing of the Negro problem attempted on Broadway in recent years.

In terms of meaningful drama, tautly written and beautiful interpreted, it gave "Nurses" an aura and a stature that, at least for the one week, put it on a equal footing of respectability with Brodkin's other CBS series, "Defenders."

It was hardly important or relevant that neither Shirl Conway nor Zina Bethune, the regular leads on the series, was important to the story. What was important was the manner in which Claudia McNeil, Ruby Dee and Carl Lee handled their confrontation, extracting the very essence of the tragedy of the Negro people, and in the sensitive scripting by Adrian Spies. Rose.

Eleventh Hour

Televisions creative talents have been straining with some success against the incidental formula themes that for so long have marked the bulk of prime time serial drama.

Whatever the reasons for this mild renaissance—the hour format, multiple advertisers with less show control, audience acceptance of such anthologies as "Dick Powell Theatre," vanguard effort from New York in the likes of "Defenders" etc.—it's giving the night-time grind some noteworthy elements of surprise.

So it was last week with NBC-TV's psychomeller, "11th Hour," in a neatly done story of a compulsive gambler which left formula-weary, viewers with an afterthought.

Dick Nelson's script had plenty of crafty twists and turns. With some he was undoubtedly playing against the viewer's conditioned reflex to tv's serials. But the piece was cleverly drawn to forward

ISRAEL—IT IS NO FABLE
With Don Kellerman; Douglas Edwards, narrator, others
Producer-Writer: Kellerman
Director: John J. Desmond
60 Mins., Wed. 7:30 p.m.
CBS-TV (film)

A tedious and bland program was done by CBS News last Wednesday (8) to commemorate the 15th birthday of Israel. Don Kellerman, who generally shows refined skills as a television producer, designed this one hour tv special so that it was almost incomprehensible.

Turning interviewer, producer Kellerman filmed a conversation between himself and David Ben-Gurion, Israel's prime minister. While it may have been "an exclusive," a point made with empty pride by the network's pressagents, that did not mean it had to run on forever. Kellerman's dependence on the words and language of the natives was a great mistake, because many of them could not be understood. Consequently, this appraisal on tv became a trial for viewers.

There might have been a lot of genuine journalistic worth in the commemorative program, but the language barrier muddled the impact. Art.

KNBC reaches out to every corner of southern California for its rich and varied programming. Its cameras travel from City Hall to the State Capitol to present key political issues, and to the universities to explore the fine arts and the humanities.

Civic events are always in focus. Each week Survey '63 examines vital issues—as in Mayor Yorty's Report on the city's administrative problems and in One For The Road, dramatic award-winner on driving and drinking.

Nationally known figures appear regularly on KNBC's many cultural programs: Dr. Frank C. Baxter hosts his award-winning Harvest, Lorser Feitelson discusses "The Great Art of Drawing" on Feitelson On Art, Milton Sperling hosts prominent guests and faculty members of the University of Judaism on Ethics, and Dr. Robert M. Hutchins interviews world leaders on Great Conversations.

To help showcase southern California's wealth of young talent, KNBC telecast the University of Redlands' stunning performance of Romeo And Juliet—in prime time—as an uninterrupted 90-minute Color Special. An hour of prime time was utilized to introduce the winners of California's coveted Harmony Awards on Debut.

KNBC's community programming is the television freeway to the homes of Los Angeles—the problems and rewards of life in the nation's fastest-growing metropolitan area. VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week six different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

The Madison Ave. Line: Burnett's White (wash) Paper On Rating Probe

By BILL GREELEY

As the Oren Harris hearings on broadcast audience estimates resume this week, one source of hard resistance to ratings reform is already clear. It is the major television ad agencies.

The Madison Ave line that was being tentatively followed as the first phase of the Harris Subcommittee investigations got underway, is firming.

It is firming enough to make some observers believe that 'studies" and preliminary plans of 4A's and ANA newly-formed subcommittees on audience measurement are a dodge. It is amazing to find the number of Madison Ave. broadcast execs who are uninformed—or pretend to be—on many of the major disclosures of the Harris hearings).

As further confirmation of the agency stance, there is a fat inside memo from Leo Burnett Co., Chicago, a "Media & Program Analysis Report" for agency and client execs. It is one of those agency intracoms to which the industry at large suddenly and mysteriously falls heir.

Subtitled "A Statement on Rating Services," the Burnett white (wash) paper begins with a history of federal investigation the Madow Committee, report to Harris by three academic research wigs on the validity of broadcast ratings; the Federal Trade Commission's consent decree signed by three major services, and the current Harris hearings.

Discussing the latter, the Burnett statement says, "We do not know what prompted the Harris Special Investigating Committee to undertake this investigation." Then said "prompting" is probed in the mock interpretive style popular with news weeklies, winding with thinly disguised accusations:

"It may have come about for a variety of reasons: a belief, perhaps, that the previous investigation had not dug deep enough, a fear that reliance on rating services had adversely affected the television and radio programs being offered to the American people; rivalry among governmental investigators; the desire for headlines; a possible belief that ratings were rigged; or pressure put upon Congressmen by station owners who were not getting the advertising revenue they felt they deserved."

Burnett then takes the very popular Madison Ave. we know it all-the-time line—Certain inadequacies were revealed to the public which have long been known and recognized by advertisers, media and agencies." And the second most popular argument: "Additionally, it must be realized that the bulk of the testimony and the publicity concerned inadequacy of radio ratings."

Calling the hearings a 'general indictment of services based on specific shortcomings," the Burnett memo moves to summary support of the status quo.

A substantial portion of the agency's $300,000 expenditures for research material, says the summary, goes for broadcast audience data, and "we believe that these measures of audience size are helpful tools in the process of making media decisions. In our estimation, television tuning (in terms of audience size) is adequately measured, and any improvements will be minor."

Calling the radio situation another matter (bigger samples and industry willingness to underwrite new research techniques needed), Burnett declares, "We will continue to use rating services as we always have, recognizing their weaknesses as well as strengths, and that they represent only estimates of audience size and do not relate to commercial environment, impact and response."

Indulging a followup "more complete analysis," Burnett says it compared Nielsen and ARB total ratings for February '63 for 96 nighttime shows with the resultant average rating of 21.8 for Nielsen and 22.6 for ARB—a difference of 4%.

"This does not prove," says Burnett, "their accuracy, but it does prove that two different services measuring the same thing in entirely different ways get sub-

British Com'l Aller To Bow This Summer

Isle of Man, May 14.

Britain's first commercial radio station, Radio Manx, is expected to open this summer.

According to the chairman of this Manx Government-backed operation, T. M. Calcbourn, all that is awaited is the official okay, and there are no technical difficulties which cannot be overcome within a period of three weeks.

A studio is to be opened in Douglas, the island's principal holiday town, and special programs are planned for holidaymakers telling them what is happening in different parts of the island.

JFK: 'Very Special Salute' for Radio

Washington, May 14.

President Kennedy tuned into National Radio Month saying the medium deserves a "very special salute from the American people."

In a statement sent to NAB prexy LeRoy Collins, the President said, "Radio's invaluable service in informing Americans during periods of international crisis is but one of many vital services provided to community and nation."

"This year, perhaps as never before," radio deserves a salute, Kennedy said.

He congratulated and thanked radio for "a job well done."

"The theme of this month's observance, 'Radio . . . the Mobile Medium,' is particularly apt," Kennedy noted, "in light of the ever increasing flexibility of radio, both in broadcasting and in reception."

hum—creates more excitement and therefore receives more attention."

But the primary responsibility for revitalizing programming, he said, rests with radio broadcasters.

Commenting on FCC's radio application freeze and the upcoming AM standards, Harris said, "It is very dubious" whether Commission has the power to deal directly with the economic consequences of the radio population explosion.

He said he doubted the wisdom of applying economic standards in granting radio licenses.

Italo TV-Radio's $107,645,000 In Gross Earnings

Rome, May 14.

Gross earnings from subscriptions and advertising accumulated during 1962 by RAI-TV, the Italian radio-tv network, totaled 67,277,-330,072 lire (approximately $107,-645,000).

Figure is contained in RAI-TV annual report, just published. According to publication, over 46 billion lire of this total came from subscription fees alone, while radio publicity coin totaled some $13,300,000 and television ad gain in the vicinity of $16,300,000.

The RAI-TV statement notes an increase of some 13% in radio ad revenue, and of some 27% in television ad coin as against previous year's totals. Some $43,440,000 was spent during the course of last year on RAI-TV personnel (43% of total expenditures), as against $36,480,000 spent on programs, excluding the technical aspects, which are set at some $24,800,000.

RAI-TV gives 3,457,282 as the official number of video subscribers in this country as of Dec. 31, vs. 9,096,836 radio subscriptions. Both these figures are now known to have grown considerably since this last official count.

or a now-and-then basis. Could will do a half-hour weekly series aided by Lincoln Center. It'll be a concoction of music, operas, dance and drama. There'll be another show, called "The City," which WNDT said will take a "poetic and hard look" at sights, sounds and people of N.Y. "as well as important community issues."

It's hoped "Television 13," the drama, will be presented every two or three weeks, but the per-unit production cost will determine that. Meantime, other series include the comeback "Court of Reason," the newsstrip, "World At 13," and such as "International Essay" and "The Art of Seeing." Also a series of special films on archeology by C. W. Ceram will be aired.

The one openly "instructional" course prime time will continue being the 7 o'clock language strip. This season it's Russian, next it'll be French. On Saturdays and Sundays, WNDT will repeat programs known as "The Best Of the Week."

Ratings by U.S. Census Bureau?

Washington, May 14

Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) today (Tues.) suggested the possibility of a U.S. Census Bureau taking over radio-tv ratings with broadcasters paying whatever the cost is to the government.

As ratings hearings resumed before the House subcommittee headed by Harris, he pointed out the Bureau makes special surveys on housing, and other matters for cities all over the country. The cities pay the tab.

"If Congress provided that you would make surveys for broadcasting data and the money was provided by broadcasters, could you undertake it?" Harris asked Dr. Conrad F. Taeuber, assistant Bureau director, the witness.

"It would not be impossible," Taeuber replied, "although it is a situation in which we have no experience at the present time."

"Your activity could be expanded, though, to include it, couldn't it?" Harris asked.

"Yes sir," the statistician replied.

Later, in an interview, Harris said, "I am not advocating this at this time. I am merely trying to get information and to discuss possibilities."

Edmund C. Bunker, Radio Advertising Bureau prexy, will present RAB rating plan to the subcommittee tomorrow (Wed.). LeRoy Collins, National Assn. of Broadcasters prexy, will air NAB's ideas on the subject next week.

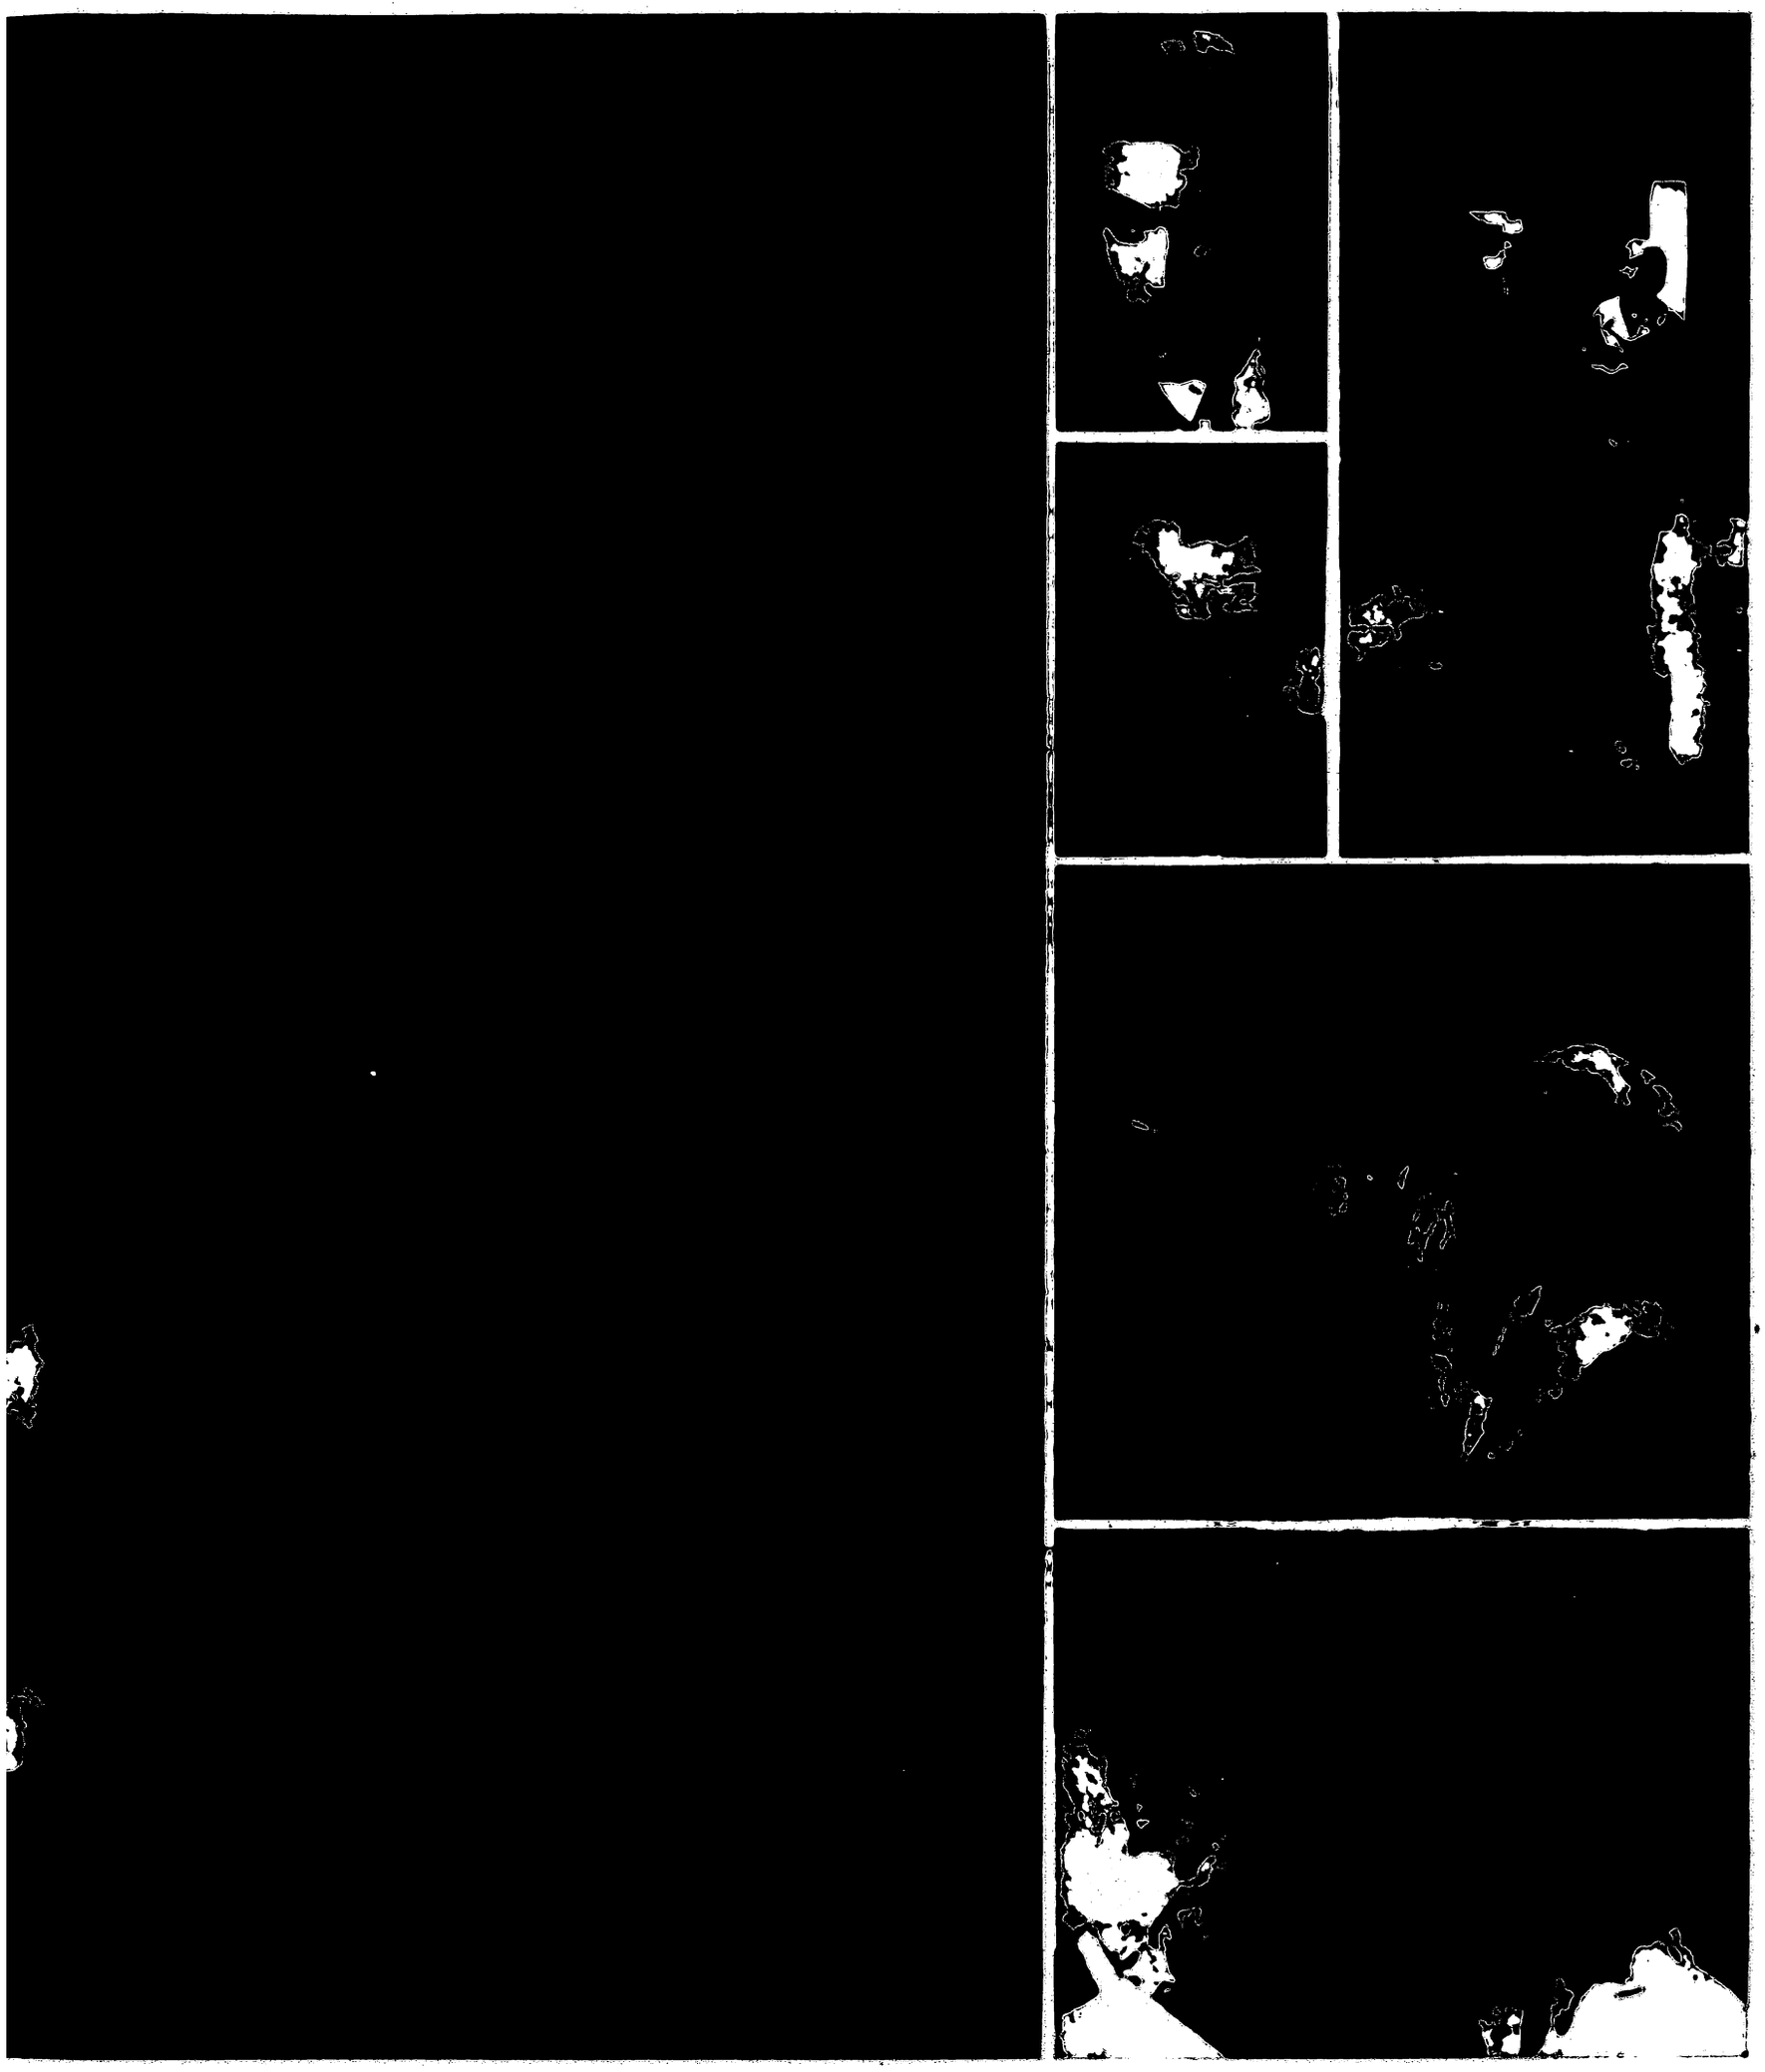
Hospital-Tested

The firmness to be detected in Jim Kildare's step next season has a simple explanation.

When "Dr. Kildare" begins its third year—as one of the many distinguished attractions in NBC's diversified new schedule—America's most famous interne (at America's most famous hospital) will have graduated to the status of resident.

Even crusty Dr. Gillespie would concede that his protege has earned the promotion. Without cutting any hospital corners, the novice MD has handled such challenging patients as a young girl on the edge of drug addiction; a poet who detested doctors; and a teen-ager who hated the world.

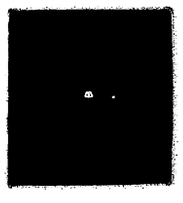
That Kildare's fresh-from-school innocence has been singed under such fire is all too understandable. It's in the very nature of his work. That he retains his idealism is also understandable. That's in the nature of the man.



It's also a product of his relationship with the veteran Gillespie, a doctor who can practically remove an appendix with a sharp glance, yet gently guide a young interne toward the right diagnosis of a troublesome case.

The able Raymond Massey's portrayal of Gillespie needs no accolade from this corner. Nor is there much we can add to the praise already won by Richard Chamberlain in the title role. In this year's TV Guide Awards, American viewers (who always have the last word) voted him television's favorite male personality.

Kildare's promotion at Blair General, by the way, is far from the only new development taking shape on NBC-TV. The Fall schedule glitters with television's most promising new programs and personalities. Blended with the many proven favorites like "Dr. Kildare", they augur the most exciting—and most varied—season in our history.



Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

Sextant in Life Mag Tieup For Network Specials, Mebbe Series

Sextant, a tv production company that stumps its product as "fact as entertainment," aims to put new life in the network prime schedule, and thinks Life magazine is one way to do it.

Sextant prexy Robert Graff feels the company's main aim is a new approach, one that might set a trend for video's future quality programming.

Coming up in the fall is Sextant's series on the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, shelved last season because ABC had another show commitment (Graff also produced "Valiant Years," the Winston Churchill saga that had a two-year ABC run and is still going strong in Britain and other foreign markets).

Deal with Life mag, first such for web-aimed programming, calls for development of Life stories into specials and possibly a weekly series next year translating topical features. Actually, Graff says, Life approached Sextant with the idea of a tieup, which evolved after long negotiations. Mag's staff and materials will be utilized by the tv production firm, and Graff feels Life's large readership will swing the long, complex case and its outgrowth of hearings.

NBC-Philco Hearings

Philco, in the midst of presenting its case, had finished questioning Smith and NBC had concluded its cross-examination when Nash took up the cudgel.

He asked Smith pointedly why Philco wanted WRCV-TV, NBC's o & o operation on Channel 3 in Philly. Smith ticked off a number of reasons: Philco wanted to get back into broadcasting, it would be good for business, it would serve Philadelphia.

But why Channel 3? pressed Nash. Because, replied Smith, it had the poorest programming. NBC had to drop it because of a Justice Department consent decree, some Philadelphians still identify the channel with Philco which once owned it, and "I like Channel 3."

Was it a coincidence, asked Nash that the announcement Philco would drop its application for the WRCV license and the announcement RCA had settled a $130,000,000 suit out of court by giving Philco a number of tv patents both came last Jan. 7?

"Under the circumstances and for various reasons, we had to make a commitment," said Smith. He then quickly launched into a long recital of the affair's entire case history. And the bell sounded.

Nash had made his point, however, a point the Bureau had brought up in January when it recommended the FCC permit Philco to drop the WRCV license application. The Bureau strongly disapproved though of Philco getting up to $600,000 from NBC for dropping out. FCC agreed and nixed the deal. Philco subsequently decided to stay in.

All of this came only a day after Smith had testified Philco was seeking to take up the FCC programming question with a new broadcasting philosophy in Philadelphia. He said Philco wanted to add to Philly's new look by becoming "a living thing, not just entertainment" via a boost in local live shows.

Philco Corp. prexy Charles E. Beck preceded Smith on the stand in opening Philco's case. He testified mostly about the 1961 purchasing of Philco by the Ford Motor Co. for $108,000,000 and the part he played in it. As a Ford man, Beck took over the presidency of Philco and its reorganization and made the decision to pursue the WRCV license application filed before the merger.

The early part of the week was taken up with the conclusion of NBC's case and some telling cross-examination of its witnesses by Philco attorney Henry Weaver. WRCV-TV station manager Raymond Wolpert was forced by Weaver to admit some things in local programming might not stand up to closer scrutiny.

Before Smith's Friday bomb, much of the hearing was taken up with legal skirmishes. Weaver and fellow counsel Quinn O'Connell were hard put at the hands of NBC's Irving Segal in the infighting.

NBC has until June, 1964 to get out of Philly as requested by the Justice Department. It wants to retain the station to swap it overseas for RKO General's WHAC-AM-TV in Boston. Philco just wants WRCV.

Turfcast Extension Plan Gets FCC Okay

Washington, May 14.

FCC agreed to the NAB request to extend the comment filing deadline on proposed turfcasting rules from May 15 to July 1.

NAB said it needed the additional time to evaluate the "complex factors inherent in the problem."

FCC rules would prohibit broadcasts of horse races with purses under $50,000 and delay airing race results until one hour after the last race was run.

'Harry's Girls' in Union Troubles

by British Equity of the "Harry's Girls" situation, and would impose terms identical with those in SAG's pacts if the company shoots in Ireland. Irish union is not part of British Equity.

On the Hollywood front, meanwhile, action was being readied in the Film Council. It's understood plans are afoot to intro a resolution seeking a consumers boycott against the series at the State Federation of Labor convtion this summer, and mock adoption of a similar resolution at the national AFL-CIO convention in N.Y. next fall.

Metro sources in England insist that "Girls" is a series about an American song and dance act traveling through Europe . . . that "because of the setting of the story this series could only be satisfactorily produced in Europe, and, in view of the services and facilities required from a European source, and the authenticity of approach required, it was obviously correct for this series to be made by a European company. Therefore arrangements were entered into with MGM British Studios Ltd. to produce the series, using only the essential American element required by the nature of the subject." The studio added, "accordingly there is every reason to suppose that Equity will now support the series which is accepted as the most important tv film series ever to be made by a British company and which already has the full support of the craft and technical unions."

A London source close to the situation reported that "it is strongly felt that Metro is guilty of wishful thinking. Equity attitude is known to be that its demands in this case are not dependent on Toronto for course. It would have acted the same terms if Toronto had never taken place."

Larry Hayden, Susan Silo, Dawn Richardson and Diane Williams star in the series, based on Metro's filmusical, "Les Girls."

'Mind Behind Power' As Brit. TWW Series

London, May 14.

A new video series, featuring the careers of distinguished politicians, was launched by TWW Monday (13).

Entitled "Mind Behind Power," the series will feature the careers of such political personalities as Sir Winston Churchill, David Lloyd George, Aneurin Bevan, Ramsay MacDonald and others. Former MP Gordon Lang will be anchor man for the show, which will be produced by Peter Lilley and Anthony Hayland. Lilley will also act as interviewer.

Michaelis' Title TV Coup

not so much what you know but who you know.

Yugoslav ambassador to the UN, Mico Pavicevic guested on "View From The Top" on Feb. 7 this year and right afterwards told Michaelis that he thought he was just the man to do a tv heart-to-hearter with his president. On the first application for facilities the news came back that 24 petitions from Western newsmen seeking interviews were being considered. At this ambassador Pavicevic himself personally cabled the Yugoslav leader. What he said nobody but he and Tito know. But it did the trick.

"I'm extremely excited about this particular program because it comes at such a crucial time in the juggling of international relationships, and Yugoslav's role in world tactics is at a kind of crossroads," says Michaelis.

"And also because it will be done in Tito's own home in the very lovely Adriatic setting and ought to be alive with atmosphere. It will give an expanding sensation to the program which is something I want to develop more and more."

In fact Michaelis, while here this trip ostensibly to try to sell both the shrimp, has an even more ambitious idea which he has been hatching around. He would like to set up a co-production deal with some tv outfit in the UK simply in order to run a series of programs going through the British Establishment in much the same way as he has done with "View From The Top."

"And if there is a senior member of the government on a par to Mr. Stevenson who would be able to setup a similar kind of program, I'd love to work on it with him," he adds. "I'd like to come back to London to live and work here a while: six months every year would be a good working arrangement."

John Aubery, his London p.r. consultant, explained that all the local stations had shown interest in the Stevenson and "View" programs though at the moment only Ulster TV had actually said it was going to buy. This station had not yet said exactly what it would be buying, although execs were impressed with the Stevenson session with Pandit Nehru.

Fight for Sports

expires. Today it's far more meaningful in terms of general interest and Nielsens, than the collegiate versions (contract on this one, too, expires approximately the same time). If in going through the motions of alarm Aubery was hoping to put some restraint on the NBC bidding come December, it's a cinch the network grabbing off the '64-'65 contests will be dishing out considerably more than the $9,000,000 CBS paid last time out. (Since ABC will still have a year to go on the American League pro games, they'll obviously be out of the running, but may make it a three-way bidfest for the NCAA games).

Whatever happens, the big talk-up around the networks is sports and football is the easiest selling item on the sports agenda.

The popularity of professional football has obviously affected the entire sport and the attitude of Madison Ave. towards it. It was late fall of last year before NBC-TV could announce a sellout of its post-season football games. Yet today—seven months ahead of the earliest bowl game—the network has five of the bowls wrapped up solid with sponsorships. It's apparently never happened so soon before, but then never has agency row's interest been so keen.

Sellout bowls on NBC-TV are Blue-Gray and East-West Shrine games on Dec. 28, Sugar and Rose Bowls on Jan. 1 and the Pro Bowl (NFL) on Jan. 12.

Washington, May 14.

Broadcasters will have to pay FCC application fees ranging from $20 to $100 beginning Jan. 1, 1969, FCC ruled.

In a 5-2 decision Commission issued final rules establishing flat fee rates for various categories of applications.

Commission called the flat fee schedule "a reasonable compromise" saying they were unethical yet noted the differences between radio and television station facilities.

Rates based on station power, market size and green license weighted by "administratively feasible," FCC said.

Non-commercial educational tv stations are exempt from the fee charges.

Applications for a new station or "major change" will cost AM and FM stations $300 and television stations $100. License renewal or transfer of control applications are pegged on the same rates.

All stations desiring changes in call letters will pay $25.

Other applications, including tv translators will cost $20.

FCC estimated fees would accrue close to $8,000,000 for the Government.

Favoring the fee rules were chairman Newton Minow, and Commissioners Rosel Hyde, Robert E. Lee, E. William Henry and Kenneth Cox.

Dissenting were Commissioners Frederick Ford and Robert Bartley.

Bartley contended the fees might "create a contention of ownership or proprietary right interest in other types of license fee payments."

He also called for the fees to be related to station's rate card rate.

Ford said the move should have been made after guidelines were sent down from Congress. He said he doubted the wisdom of the plan on the basis of present statutory authority.

said. The show will originate in New York.

The production staff for the Dean series has begun chair gratis very early for a variety show. Target for the writers is to come up with some new concepts to showcase the Dean personality which has been loosely compared to that of the late Will Rogers. Although the ideas are still being pitted, the single firm word is that Dean will definitely be dishing up a hillbilly show. That impression might have arisen because Dean was once a country singer.

The production staff is not only young but has a decided Canadian flavor. Poppiatt and Aylesworth, the head writers, are from up north originally, but more recently have worked on the Perry Como and Andy Williams shows. The director, Bill Davis, is also a Canadian.

The show is being produced by Bandeen, a perley of Dean and Banner interests.

CBS-TV Affils

of William C. Mac Phail, sports v.p. of the network, warning that the sports people might be pricing themselves out of the market. He said that CBS-TV bid $7,500,000 for the National Football League playoff game, only to be outbid by NBC-TV, which took the championship game for $6,000,000. He reminded the affils that CBS-TV for $10,000,000 won the televising rights to the NFL and National Collegiate Athletic Assn., which, he said, has proven profitable for the web and affils. He warned, though, that the spiraling costs cannot continue.

Off-setting that sports beef was the Aubrey boast that tv has come of age in '68, commanding the best talent of motion pictures and the theatre, becoming the "true entertainment medium."

Salse v.p. Thomas Dawson spoke of the hockey sales situation at the network prevailing for next season. CBS News prexy Dick Salant told of the expanded news coverage slated for '68-'69.

First night out of the delegates was guest seeing the "Danny Kaye Show" at the Ziegfeld Theatre. Second night banquet, topping the meet, had Judy Garland, Phil Silvers and cast of "Beverly Hillbillies" entertaining the delegates.

The windup ended as it started: a rosy meeting in a climate of success.

CBS-TV Upbeats News in Midwest

CBS News is augmenting its news-gathering operations in the midwest in preparation for the network's new 30-minute prime news strip next fall. Bureau chief Bernard Eismann gets transferred back to New York in late summer for new assignments and will be replaced in Chi by a three-man staff consisting of correspondent Hughes Rudd, producer-director Russ Bensley (who has been doing "Eyewitness") and a bureau manager still to be named.

Eismann had been patrolling the midwest for CBS News with an assistant, Joe Saurin, who will leave for Spain on a three-month sabbatical when the changes take place. With the expanded newscasts, the web expects to draw more heavily than before from its inland bureaus.

The situation is slightly different for NBC News, which will also be going with a half-hour news strip next season, in that its Chicago operations are one and the same with the staff that serves the two o&o stations there. CBS maintains a network news bureau that is separate from the respective news staffs of the owned-stations, WBBM and WBBM-TV.

Tomorrow (Thurs.) Writers Guild of America east will hold its annual meeting in N.Y. It's expected that the evening purview will mainly be on the present WGA dickers with the radio and tv networks.

The negotiations on new national writers contracts, are reportedly going along fairly well. Webs and union met again this week, as the dickers run will into their third month.

Sen. Warren Magnuson, at FCC's request, introduced legislation exempting executive reservists in Commission's unit of the National Defense Executive reserve from conflict of interest regulations.

The present restrictions of the Communications Act have deterred well qualified persons from serving in the unit, FCC told Magnuson. "It is these people who, by reason of their past employment in the Commission or employment in executive positions in the communications industry, are the best qualified and most valuable to serve the Government as full time Commission employees in periods of national emergency or time of war," FCC said.

Roger Colemen, veteran radio man, is launching a custom programming service for the FM industry. His firm, to be known as Roger Colemen Inc., will offer an FM consultation service in both programming and sales, with representation of a number of selected stations in the top markets. Colemen was formerly veepee-general manager of the CBS Network. Before that he directed establishment and operations of FM only at WABC-FM for the American Broadcasting Co.

Fifteen members of L.A. local of American Federation of TV & Radio Artists are dockeying for the nine vacancies on union's national board of directors, with deadline voting May 20.

Localites who have filed petitions include incumbents Jay Jostyn, Gene Lanham, Forrest Lewis, Ralph Moody, Don Rice, Lyle Talbot, Les Tremayne and Willard Waterman, plus Paul Ely, Ray Erlenborn, Mark Jordan, Cliff Norton, Michael Rye, Harry Von Zell and Joe Yenan.

Radiodiffusion Francaise, Norddeutscher Rundfunk (West Germany) and Swiss Television Service will join in the CBS-owned stations' International Program Exchange this year for the first time. The U. S. offering will be a one hour showbow on American jazz featuring 11 artists which the Chi outlet, WBBM-TV, will produce.

It will be carried by the other owned stations, the three European systems above, and Radio Audizione Italiana, Canadian Broadcasting Corp., Televisione Mexicana, Tokyo Broadcasting System and Telefis Eireann (Ireland), all of which participated in one or both of the previous exchanges. The CBS stations will in turn carry an Italian concert with the Rome Symphony Orch, a French program of ballet, a chamber music recital by German artists and variety programs from Mexico, Japan and Ireland in the "International Hour" showcase.

Ascot a report in Variety that the recent Lakers-Celtics game in Los Angeles was the first closed-circuit telecast of a basketball game, sports buffs point out the first one occurred in March, 1956. At that time there was a closed circuit telecast from Kiel Auditorium, St. Louis, to the nearby Kiel Theatre of the NBA playoff game between the St. Louis Hawks and the Boston Celtics. Gene Kirby was the sportscaster and Jack Lubelt produced and directed for the Sports Programs Inc. production.

capsuled and portrayed in her 30 minute interview with Mark Evans on WTTG-TV.

Although Mrs. Johnson is a broadcast station owner, this was her first extended interview on tv. Evans' mode of quiet questioning carried Mrs. Johnson through her initial nervousness into intimate glimpses of her roles as the veep's wife and the mother of two teen-age daughters.

Perhaps most interestingly brought out in the interview were her reflections on the nation's Family. "The mercurial politics of my husband," she said, "can upset a perfectly planned schedule."

Candidly she noted the Vice President's relationship with their daughters Lynda Bird and Lucy "has grown through the years."

Adding considerably to the show was the excellent camera work.

The program was also telecast Sunday (12) at 6 p.m. on Metromedia's WNEW in New York and at 1:30 p.m. on KTVU in San Francisco. Also booked in were other Metromedia outlets and several Texas stations. Mona.

A THEATRE FOR MINNESOTA
With Jack Huston, Zoe Caldwell, others
Producer: Lloyd Bolhson
Director-Writer: Bolhson
30 Mins.; Tues., 6:30 p.m.
FARMERS & MECHANICS SAVINGS BANK
WTCN-TV, Minneapolis

In presenting 30 minutes of television at the scene of the new local $2,300,000 Tyrone Guthrie repertory theatre on its opening night Time-Life's WTCN-TV here scored heavily. The program stacked up as a smart realization there was enormous area interest in the occasion and that it represented the successful culmination of the community's greatest civic endeavor in many years.

The theatre's establishment means, in some degree, decentralization of the stage drama, especially in the classical category, away from New York and, if successful here, may serve as a pattern for a number of other large cities. Furthermore, because with a top director such as Tyrone Guthrie and permanent cast members for an entire season like Hugh Cronyn and Jessica Tandy there's a boost for the classical drama and a likelihood of additional and more sustained employment for actors.

WTCN-TV, it would appear, profited not only by this recognition of the occasion's theatrical importance, but also by the performance of a good deed in helping to publicize over the air a project having local civic and business leaders' support.

What the program actually afforded were lively views inside and outside the theatre and of throngs of first-nighters entering the showhouse and congregating in the lobby prior to the first performance of "Hamlet." There were interviews with notable associated with the enterprise and others here for the preem, statements of reasons why that theatre's creation assumes importance and a glimpse of a small group of costumed musicians playing a brief musical signal for the first-nighters to take their seats.

Credit was reflected on WTCN staffers Lloyd Bolhson and Jack Huston, the former for putting the program together and directing it and the latter for his narration and interviewing, and also on the cameramen. Incidentally, narrator Huston was assisted by actress Zoe Caldwell, a member of the company. Rees.

Bob Bailey, the Pittsburgh Pirate bonus player, provided his own [illegible] for this show [illegible] two home runs on the night before to bring his season total to six. With [illegible] interest in this lad, Donley's [illegible] should [illegible] network attention if he would only [illegible] the [illegible] wrap-up and the [illegible] words to the tune of "Bill Bailey, Won't You etc."

This half hour seg had Donley tracing the young player's career back to his high school days when the Pirates reportedly paid him $175,000 to sign a contract. He used his same easy conversational approach to get more of the background on the player from general manager Joe L. (Joe E.'s son) Brown, Hall of Fame Third Baseman and KQV sports director Pie Traynor and his Columbus coach, Gene Baker.

Donley's effective way with an interview brought this seg off and this should be a very valuable piece of film if Bailey continues his present pace. Lit.

In fact Davis is dickering also for a legit break in London wants Joe Levine's Embassy to fix him with a picture deal to be made here and is now house hunting. His aim now is to live six months in every year in the UK.

The deal is regarded here as a scoop for Tom Sloan, BBC-TV's Light Entertainment topper who is prepared to give Davis his head. "This kind of genius is so rare that it can be given full rein on his own without trimmings," says Sloan.

Davis has called off the show he was to have done for the BBC on May 26 ("so close to last week's show, I know I could never have repeated such a standard") and instead will return in four months from now to do his first new show. That will be a one-man effort as will the following one, early in 1964.

"But I'm hoping to do a really big spectacular with Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin joining me as guests around this time next year," he explained. "And nobody has to worry about the money . . . The boys don't need it."

Sophie

Words and Music by STEVE ALLEN

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY ABOUT THE SCORE OF "SOPHIE"

"On the happier hand, I believe the score by Steve Allen is first class. 'I'll Show Them All' is an extremely hummable ballad and I like 'When You Carry Your Own Suitcase,' 'You've Got To Be A Lady,' 'When I'm In Love,' and 'I Love You Today.'"

John McClain . . . New York Journal-American

"Sophie" is at its best in the music and lyrics by Steve Allen. They have the swinging, singing flavor of those early years of this century . . .

"I have the record. I am playing it now, for the third time. And for the third time, it is sending chills up my spine. This music could hit town the way Sophie Tucker hit town — like a ton of bricks.

"Mind you, I am not saying 'Sophie' will become a hit, but judging simply by what reaches the ear 'Sophie' could be tremendous. Allen, a startling jazz musician, uses styles of the 1920s, alive or like a little, in his melodies, harmonies and lyrics. It has the most compulsive, breathless beat that any hum-it-on-the-way-home show-goer could wish."

Norman Nadel . . . New York World-Telegram and Sun

"Steve Allen, one of the nicest and most versatile figures in TV, has fashioned music and lyrics for the new arrival. The score falls pleasantly on the ears . . . It boasts several numbers that should torment the disc luminaries."

Robert Coleman . . . New York Mirror

"'Sophie,' a musical about the early career of Sophie Tucker, is like the last of the Red Hot Mommas herself — best when belting a tune.

"The main assset — and it is a considerable asset — is the score composed by Steve Allen, one of TV's well-known amuses. They are at least eight ingratiating scores, faintly reminiscent of the Janet Gaynor — Ruby Keeler filmusical era." William Glover . . .Associated Press

"Don't know why this should have surprised us, but the Steve Allen score for 'Sophie' is an ear-caressing delight. It's a stylish, upbeat and filled with the hummable melodies that have the happy ring of cash register to them." Dan Sefton . . . Dallas Times Herald

"SA has written some nice songs . . . better than the scores of most shows this season. Among the better numbers, I checked off 'Patsy,' 'When I'm In Love' and 'I Want the Kind of a Fella.'"

Leonard Hoffman . . . The Hollywood Reporter

"Sophie's" Steve Allen score is catchy . . . The only possibility was to create numbers which Sophie might actually have sung. Steve Allen has done exactly this . . . and well. 'I'll Show Them All' is an emotional topnotcher. 'Hold On To Your Hats,' 'When You Carry Your Own Suitcase,' 'When I'm In Love,' and 'I Love You Today' should prove winners."

Don Patsky . . . Citizen Journal, Columbus, Ohio

"Steve Allen's tunes come galloping along at a very steady trot . . . Richard Rogers is famous for his 'wrong note.' Mr. Allen may become famous for always arriving at the right note."

Walter Kerr . . . New York Herald Tribune

"Steve Allen has written several songs that could be the basis of fond or sardonic comment on a vanished era: . . . 'Queen of the Burlesque Wheel' (has) a sense of diverting recollection . . . A nicely stylized ragtime and amusing waltz . . . Rosetta Le Noire makes the most of a lively number called 'You've Got To Be A Lady.'"

Howard Taubman . . . New York Times

"The Tucker-type songs, both music and lyrics, have been fashioned by Steve Allen . . . There are several pleasant numbers . . . One of Steve Allen's most engaging songs (is) 'You've Got To Be A Lady.'"

John Chapman . . . New York Daily News

Boom's 'Go Slow' on Cig Ban

and the public discussions and debate which will surely occur."

Boom said he was against a suggestion to eliminate only cigaret advertising which has an appeal to minors. "As a matter of fact," he contended, "our cigaret commercials are not directed to children or minors. The trouble comes, of course, when you try to define and catalog what has and what has not an appeal to minors. In my view, this is something that defies precise definition.

"Cigaret commercials, in common with most other commercials, will show attractive people in attractive surroundings having a good time, and the use of the sponsor's product is shown against this background . . . To require an opposite treatment for one product category would negate the whole purpose of advertising.

"Although not officially proposed, some have suggested that we adopt the same rule as was adopted for British broadcasting, namely, that cigaret commercials not be broadcast prior to 9 p.m. I strongly suspect that the proposal that we ban commercials having a special appeal to minors is only the first step in a campaign to ban all cigaret advertising entirely."

Every broadcaster is free to make his own decision in regard to cigaret advertising. "It is another matter, however, under the connection of moral irresponsibility, to try to force broadcasters to label an industry, which is an important segment of our economy, as undermining the health of our people."

Collins made the suggestion that the NAB Code be amended to provide that tobacco advertising, having a special appeal to minors, direct or indirect, should be avoided. The U. S. Surgeon General's report is expected to be issued by this summer, at which time the NAB Code Review Board will discuss the report and its implications to the industry. Fred Friendly's "CBS Reports" unit, which this season did a one hour outing devoted to the cigaret-cancer controversy an outing which drew the attack of the tobacco industry, is slated to do an hour special keyed to the U. S. Surgeon General's report on the issue.

up in the web lineup, are a big problem.

The exceptions are those affils which bump a network show in favor of a syndicated series, pix, or a local show. Ledger warned those affils of "quick buck" thinking which could only lead to dilution of the maximum available for network programming.

He estimated that network payments to affils in '68 would total between $75,000,000 and $76,700,000. This is the year which will have the web's greatest differential over four months ago, in full compensation plan, put into effect today. He reported that the network is to pay and $76,700,000 to affils. He again compared the lower network profit ratio to the station profit ratio. He didn't complain about the soaring profits of CBS Inc., but he did say in general that the tv network showing profit margin is low, than 5.7, while 40 of the web's largest affils have a profit to sales ratio of 11%.

Ledger offered this station payment breakdown for the respective webs in '68: $76,700,000 for CBS-TV; estimated $70,000,000 for NBC-TV; and estimated $68,000,000 for ABC-TV.

Addressing himself to the color tv situation, Ledger said CBS-TV has committed to prime, that advertisers, if they want color on the web, should pay an extra charge. All specials have been sold that allow a $5,000 per hour color facilities charge on the network. This is $1,500 above the web's black and white charge for origination, distribution, time zone delays, etc.

CBS Lee Phillips Show As a Regional Feed

CBS-TV will have a 60-station regional network feed out of Chicago next season of the interview show titled "Lee Phillips Program," with Pillsbury picking up the tab. Slot is from 4:30 to 4:45 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Period from 4:30 to 5 p.m. was given back to local affils after the network announced plans to expand its evening news service to 30 minutes. The 15-minute regional show was announced by affil relations v.p. Bill Ledger at the affil meet. Ledger said that many affils had found trouble filling the half-hour, adding that the regional show would be made available to all CBS-TV affils for use as a local spot carrier at no charge, subject to acceptance by Pillsbury on 60 days notice.

Bill Rylan Tribute

CBS-TV prexy James Aubrey, in introducing newly-appointed sales V.P. Thomas Dawson, paid tribute to Bill Rylan who left the web to join J. Walter Thompson.

Aubrey explained that Rylan probably had been lured by the rewards proferred by the agency. He added he hope that the change will be rewarding to Rylan and "rewarding to us." Rylan will be the key to J. Walter Thompson's tv spending.

interest, and it was most hip and perceptive in incident and dialog.

Cliff Robertson as the ad agency copywriter addicted to the local card pushery, turned in a performance comparable to his "Wine & Roses" turn for sensitivity to the character. Joanne Linville as the long-suffering wife played it with the restraint of the new school of American mass-entertainment heroines who have a special attraction beyond the teary-smiley projection of old.

Support, down to the short bit done by kid actress Katie Sweet (who's big entrance line was, "The good fairy is a fink!") was excellent. Don Medford's direction worked perfectly with the mood of the script. Bill.

Ed Sullivan Show

Ed Sullivan came to the aid of the current Broadway musical, "Tovarich," on his CBS-TV show Sunday (12) with the booking of Vivien Leigh, the tuner's star, doing her show-stopping Charleston number. It came off as something less than a show-stopper in its video debut, but she did look cute and frisky in her French maid costume and the Anne Croswell-Lee Pockriss tune, "Wilkes-Barre, Pa.", had a nice zing.

A showcasing on a Sullivan stanza has helped Broadway boxoffice before and this pitch with Miss Leigh as the lure could have some reaction. Sullivan, too, came on strong recommending it highly to out-of-towners visiting New York. Byron Mitchell, who works in the show with Miss Leigh, served as a useful helpmate for the tv replay.

The rest of the show was the familiar mixture of song and comedy with an illusionist, Richiardi, thrown in for good measure. His trickery is elusive and the camera kept right on top of his fast-moving hands.

Myron Cohen scored on the comedic end with a round of stories dwelling on psychiatry, drunks and restaurants. He remains a stylish raconteur who can even make an oldie laughable in his telling. Rip Taylor, on the other hand, was less effective in his comedic efforts. His material was well-worn and his crying-jag delivery is too repetitious.

Brightening up the musical end were Brenda Lee, with a snappy treatment of "Jambalaya" assisted by The Casuals, and a rework of her current Decca click, "Losing You." Al Hirt hit an effective dixieland note with some snappy trumpeting and savvy singing. His tailgate tootling on "On My Way" was especially good. The music industry's current folk fad got representation, too, with Geula Gill, an Israeli songstress, and her two male accomps. It was a strong belting presentation for the global folkniks. Gros.

Dinah Shore Show

Dinah Shore in her season finale, provided an entirely different type of show Sunday (12) on NBC-TV. She donned the mantle of a talent presenter, offering new sounds and names for the televiewers. She was seen only at the fore and aft ends of the display.

Miss Shore gave excellent airings to new sounds for video. She displayed the talents of Georgia Brown from "Oliver," Barbra Streisand, who was last in "I Can Get It For You Wholesale" and Sam Fletcher a new voice on disks. They were endowed with good production, and sufficient time in all departments. Result was a semester of new and interesting items.

The girls had the best of the airing. Miss Streisand combined extremely subtle comedy and acting ability in the dramatic and sultry version of "Happy Days are Here Again" and a curious "Cry Me a River." She has it for this medium as well. Miss Brown, registered well with "As Long as He Needs Me" a cockney "Don't Dilly Dally on the Way" and "Bill Bailey," for good results. Sam Fletcher showed an extremely interesting sound, but by remaining in virtually that same vein for three numbers, he wore his forte thin.

Miss Shore has presented a series of general excellence throughout its tenure on NBC. Jose.

Youth Wants To Know

The Ted Granik-created "Youth Wants To Know," now seen over WABC-TV, New York, had Joey Adams facing an inquisitive and somewhat quizzical group Sunday midday. While the AGVA prexy had a point that "cultural exchange" has more meaning on common-denominator grounds via the variety troupe he took into some of the new African and southeast Asia nations, he was brought up short when brighteyed panelists wanted to pin him down to an answer on how a comeback of vaudeville would help international relations, or whether he truly means that vaudeville should constitute the best image of America in overseas lands and with foreign peoples.

Adams made the valid point that the foreign nationals "dig" a hoofer, a pop singer, a night act, a balloon turn, et al., better than "culture." However, the sophistication and the wisdom and the savvy of these American youngsters—admittedly of an IQ and social calibre above par—gave the impression they didn't want to be talked down to; in effect the reverse appeared to be the case at one point. It was here that moderator Julian Barber judiciously interlarded an interpretative thought.

Adams talked fast, glibly, and with some verbosity, and was more or less convincing that his brand of variety entertainment does more to achieve his credo of "let's be friends" (with America) than any loftier cultural program. He ducked politics; reprised the gag that Rockefeller "played with blocks just like we did, only his were 49th St., 50th St., 51st St."; repudiated some columnar captiousness about his tour (Dorothy Kilgallen), said he would do it for free whenever called upon, excoriated "violence, profanity, homosexuality" and kindred vagaries in the recent crop of motion pictures, country-dropped the names of exotic outposts where his troupe performed, cited that after his variety tour the Russians sent in 10 times the number of troupes (show, not military), refused to commit himself on the query whether he advocated reducing military in exchange for cultural aid, deplored "undress" and nudity. While abhorring censorship he felt that, because of the ill effects on juveniles, he is for censoring the more dubious brand of pix. Title-page of his new book, "On the Road With Uncle Sam," detailing the Adams vaudery's globetrot was also flashed. It wasn't a dull, but also not a very conclusive half-hour. Abel.

Jazz!

The horizons of The International Hour (presented every Spring-Summer by the five CBS Owned television stations) encompass a kaleidoscopic array of tastes . . . ranging from symphony to ballet to jazz . . . from Beethoven to Basie and Bach.

Next week, the season premiere (see right) showcases American jazz—an hour of Dixie, Swing, Modern and Progressive fronted by Count Basie, Teddy Wilson, Jack Teagarden, Stan Getz . . . with vocalists like Muddy Waters, Carmen McRae, the Lambert, Hendricks and Bavan trio and Lurlean Hunter . . . 60-odd sidemen . . . and Willis Conover, international jazz authority. In subsequent weeks, The International Hour will present inspired examples of television from other lands—Beethoven's "Ninth" from Rome; Bach and Handel from a Swiss monastery; ballet from Paris; Mozart from West Germany; paso dobles from Mexico City—each week a different program panorama from a different country, in a globe-circling cultural exchange.

Of such stuff is The International Hour made—widely-varied cultural experiences from widely-distant lands. The sort of out-of-the-ordinary local programming television viewers in five major American cities expect to see on the CBS Owned stations, to whom "community service" means not only professionally-produced local information and news broadcasts but also an incomparable range of cultural programming.

THE MODEL MILLIONAIRESS
With Baroness Thyssen, Alan Whicker
Producer: Jack Gold
30 Mins., Tues., 9:25 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

It is painfully obvious that what Alan Whicker was attempting here was the distaff side of the fiscal coin he so successfully presented with his televisual profile of Paul Getty some weeks back. Unfortunately, the Baroness Thyssen (onetime model Fiona Campbell-Walter, third wife of the Baron) is nowhere near as fascinating a subject. The resultant program, with its outrageous padding, was a conclusive proof.

However much Whicker might want to suggest that this was a separate program, with no connection whatsoever with the one on Getty, the comparison is obvious, and pale. All it produced was a rather tiresome string of obviously prerehearsed sequences, showing the lady of leisure in an assortment of pastimes intended, in her own mind, to take the place of worthwhile activity.

It was dull and it was uninteresting. Baroness Thyssen, no doubt, is a charming and amiable young woman and is, undoubtedly, quite sincere when she talks of preferring the quiet of Lugano, with its "healthy, outdoor, sporty existence," to the mad whirl of mid-20th century "jet society." But a 30-minute kaleidoscope of the former clotheshorse in assorted settings—house here, villa there, private airplane, well-tuned high speed sportscar, etc.—did not constitute the stuff of which good television documentary is made. Even women, who might be expected to sigh over the desired inaccessibles of a woman married to so wealthy a husband as the baron, could not have found anything to sigh over in this. The lasting impression left by this program was of a woman bored to tears but too proud to admit it.

Whicker showed that as well as being a perceptive, incisive interrogator he can, in the right company, reveal a rather childlike awe of material wealth and unnecessarily genuflect at the feet of a reputation built on palatable fairy-tale. Pit.

RAMADAN
Producer: Anthony de Lotbiniere
Writer: Rene Cutforth
25 Mins., Tues., 9:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

An unhackneyed subject, an astringent treatment, matching shrewd comment to observant film, and the promise of a unique glimpse inside a mosque, permission being specially granted by the King of Morocco—all this added up to a stimulating addition for this Tuesday-night documentary spot.

The month of fasting, enjoined by the Moslem faith, was crisply explored in its traditional aspects, and Rene Cutforth's first-class commentary added acid opinion about its relevance to modern times. And the theme expanded to take in the medieval rural life of Morocco, where wives are excluded from religion and the dining table and life, as Cutforth aptly said, might have stepped from Chaucer.

But even in a town like Casablanca, where Western influence and building is more pervasive, the fasting chore is carried out to the letter. Cannon fire announces its beginning with the new moon, and for 30 days thereafter, until it has waned, food, liquor, and cigarettes must not touch a Moroccan's lips. Cutforth skillfully underlined its absurdity, with famished airline operators guiding down modern jets. Agricultural and industrial production drops 40 per cent during Ramadan, for the workers haven't the strength to work at full throttle.

Prayer rituals, the filth of the bazaars, the home-life of a well-paid foreman—all these had their place. Anthony de Lotbiniere's production, helped by Ken Westbury's telling photography, thus painted a picture of a society hampered in its struggle to enter the modern world by the rigidity of its social and religious customs. And, as indicated, Rene Cutforth's script, which he crisply spoke, added a further dimension, by providing judicious parallels and well-turned irony. Otta.

Foreign TV Followup

Television Playhouse

Quite apart from the viewer-catching interest of Michael Redgrave, appearing for the commercial web for the first time in four years, Arden Winch's "Return to the Regiment" made an enthralling hour. It made an impressive point about the military mind through a muscular plot and a powerful central situation.

The elderly General Cavendish (Michael Redgrave) was invited as guest of honor at his old regiment's tercentenary. Revered and honored by the new generation of officers for his extraordinary bravery at a World War I battle, he was to be presented with a history of the exploit prepared by Hartley (Nigel Davenport), a journalist.

After the punctilious and formal dinner, the General rose to speak. But he was interrupted by Hartley, who had consumed an overplus of Scotch. Hartley proceeded to destroy the heroic glamor of the man. His diligent researches had shown that it was the General's desire for glory that had brought needless slaughter to hundreds of his men. He had sent a famous message, rejecting the order to retreat. And the German archives showed that the enemy had been happy to leave him in his exposed position, while they killed the troops who constantly tried to supply him.

A coolness fell over the celebration, but the script provided a subtle twist. The General, while accepting the truth of Hartley's facts, insisted that the simple George-and-the-dragon patriotism which inspired his actions was valuable, and had now been lost. And the moral was screwed home in a potent climax, with the General greeting the few survivors of his foolish gallantry—men who were blind or disabled.

John Moxey's direction was superb, getting right under the skin of the fancy-dress routine of an officers' mess. Disley Jones's sets, too, finely hitted the decorous atmosphere, suggesting the centuries of stilted tradition behind it.

Redgrave's performance, beautifully judged and immensely controlled, admirably portrayed the vigor of a man who had not hitherto had cause to question the basis of his actions. Nigel Davenport carried off the difficult exposure speech to fine effect, and Barry Foster gave a shrewd essence of an officer with cynical doubts about the value of the General's kind of courage in a nuclear age. Other thesps were well in keeping, with Jeremy Longhurst, Antony Carrick, and Brian Steele registering as officer types. Otta.

Armchair Theatre

Stephen Lewis, who wrote the successful play and movie, "Sparrows Can't Sing," specializes in Cockney life seen through the bottom of a beer-glass. Such is his claim, and "Wagger," chosen for this "Armchair Theatre" hour from ABC-TV, displayed the virtues and drawbacks of his method.

Its chief lack was a plot. Wagger (played by the author) was an ordinary guy, a Marty-type shoe-repairer, who thought that the girl in the pastryshop's opposite had taken a yen for him. But Rose (Juliet Mills) really doted on Wagger's beefy brother, Tony, and constantly brought footwear for attention in the hope of seeing him. Mixed in with this puny strand of theme were some diffuse goings-on about a worldly father, a daughter who rebelled against looking after him, and an imminent move by the whole family to another and more modern apartment, where Wagger could not indulge his passions of breeding pigeons.

Result was a string of comical incident, strong in atmosphere and intermittent in wit. But Lewis, as scribe, has a shrewd eye for character, and the true reactions of the people he knows. As a thesp, too, he has a moving quality which made the pathos of the diffident Wagger, unused to attention by girls, highly potent, and helped to give a focal point to the rambling events. Juliet Mills, unusually cast as the pigeon-fancier's Rose, scored, too, although inclined to exaggerate the gush, and Jennifer Wilson registered as Agnes, the daughter who turned to marriage as an escape. Bert Palmer and George Moon were okay, but crude, in support, and the piece, which sustained interest, might have been improved if Lewis had devised a sterner framework before employing his beer-glass. Don Leaver's direction was rugged and reflected the uncertain purpose. Otta.

150,000 TV SETS FOR YUGOSLAVIA

Belgrade, May 14.

At the beginning of this year, there were more than 2,000,000 registered radio receivers in Yugoslavia, one set to every 10 inhabitants, whereas in 1939 one set came to a hundred people.

The number of television receivers is doubling every year. Early this year, there were over 150,000 sets in the country as compared with about 62,000 at the beginning of 1962. It is estimated that there will be about 300,000 television sets in 1965.

Yugoslav industry cannot yet meet all the needs for tv sets, since only about 30,000 were produced in the 11 months of last year. This, of course, was twice as many as one year previously, but the output was not enough to satisfy the demand. Smaller and cheaper sets were especially in demand, and their production will be stepped up this year.

Jack Barry's L.A. 'Live on Five' Strip

Hollywood, May 14.

KTLA-TV, Los Angeles indie, has launched a new daytime strip hosted and produced by Jack Barry which runs daily from 10 a.m.-to-4 p.m., with news and live features interspersed between two feature film shows and four half-hour telefilms.

Conceived by program manager Robert T. Quinlan, "L. A. Today, Live on Five" will have live news cutins and "instant specials," supplemented by previously planned topical human interest vignettes. Barry will tour Los Angeles via the station's telecopter and telemobile, both mobile studios regularly used by KTLA's news staff for spot pickups.

Says Quinlan, "TV traditionally slacks off in the summer, but we're going all out this year with a fresh, live approach to compete with network reruns. We think viewers would rather see a good live show than a film replay."

The pd says the idea for the daily spread came when he learned from news director Stan Zeiman that more than 30 minutes of excellent news footage landed on the cutting room floor every day for lack of time to air it.

"We won't follow the clock, either," says Quinlan. "For the first time, KTLA will play it by ear. There'll be no set station breaks and for the whole six hours the films we run will have no definite cut-off point. They'll be run in their entirety and will begin and finish depending on the position and length of our live cut-ins. If an event is important enough, we might even wipe out a whole half hour of film."

Barry will continue with his Sunday night hour variety show, but is dropping his daily strip, "The Jack Barry Show," to take on the new assignment.

30,000 a Minute

its program costs an affiliate payments) come, if at all, only in August and then only when a Beechnut, for example, would come into the market with about $7,000,000 for a 28-week (as opposed to shortterm pre-Xmas money) buy to grab what's left at heavily discounted rates.

But even Y & R and other agencies negotiating comparable or better buys—NBC's "Espionage" for example has just been slashed to $21,000 per minute—dare not rest easy. For with a huge evening network inventory still unsold (even CBS has 10% of its evening schedule still for sale) and four full months remaining before the '63-'64 season debuts in September, many a shrewd tv expert will lay odds that network minutes will average a drop of another $6,000 this summer.

This year as never before the growing school of late buyers is out to make those commitments later and cheaper than ever.

Under such conditions, trade insiders see little reason for concern, as expressed by Benton & Bowles' Lee Rich, who this week decried magazine concept and guaranteed cost per thousand plans as equalizing the advertising values of all programs.

Today, unlike the past, equal advertising values don't even apply to the same program.

The combination of his singing and acting talents has cued a half-dozen offers to Greene for legit musicals. But because of the tight production schedule on "Bonanza," there's no time for anything else, including films. Production for the new season starts this week and runs till next spring, by which time he needs a vacation.

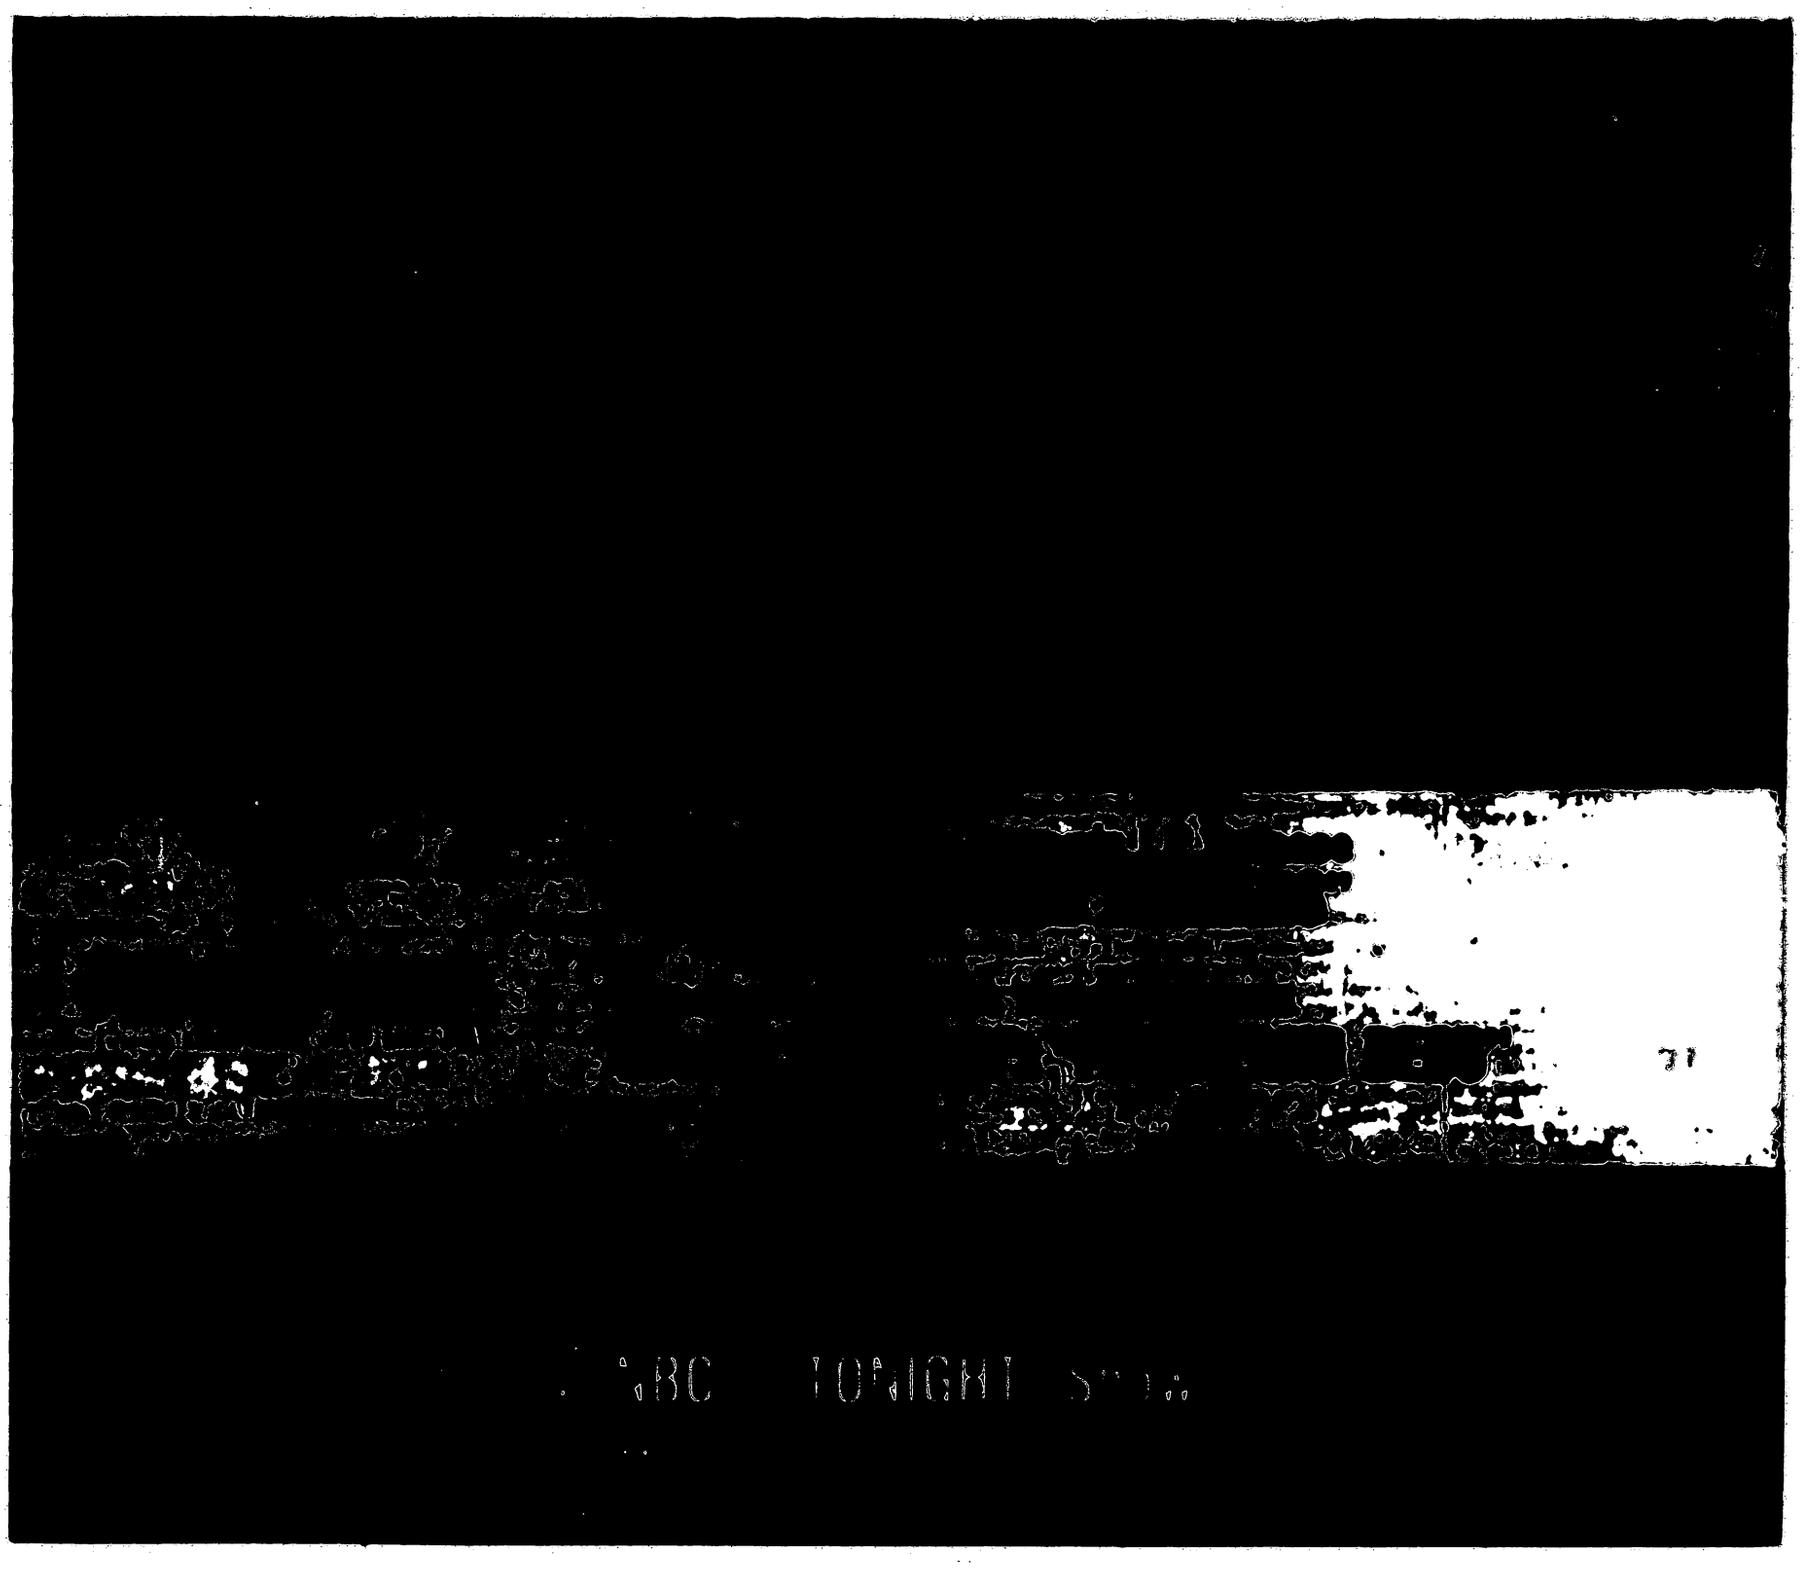
THE MANY WORLDS OF SKITCH HENDERSON



Representation: Frank Cooper Associates
Personal Management: Walter Surovy, Ltd.
Public Relations: Edgar Vincent Associates

Belafonte's 'Streets,' Sammy Spear, 'Loves Me,' Meader's Vol. 2' Top LPs

HARRY BELAFONTE: "STREETS I HAVE WALKED" (RCA Victor). Harry Belafonte has often walked these folk streets before but by programming songs of varied origins he's come up with an album that has a unified punch. The tunes are from Israel ("Erev Shel Shoshanim"), Portugal ("Tango"), Japan ("Sakura"), South Africa ("Mangwane Mpuire") and the U.S. ("This Land Is Your Land"), among others. Belafonte continues to deliver with the kind of fervor that makes his repertoire important as well as entertaining. It's a natural for a hefty sales and spinning ratings.

SAMMY SPEAR ORCH: "A LITTLE TRAVELING MUSIC" (London). Jubilee Glasser's CBS-TV has been credited with giving many impetus to Frank Fontaine's LP on the ABC-Paramount label, and it's sure to have similar results for Sammy Spear, another of the show's regulars. Spear plays "a little traveling music" for Glasser on the tv'er but it has appeal for everybody. Spear is no musical innovator. He belongs to the old-fashioned vendor of playing it straight and lend complimenting whatever catchy qualities he can pull out. With the aid of some highlight aideman rounded up for this album date, he manages to pull out plenty from the likes of "That's A Plenty," "Wolverine Blues," "Chicago," "Jersey Bounce" and even the current "I Left My Heart In San Francisco."

"SHE LOVES ME" (MGM). The Jerry Bock-Sheldon Harnick score has the courage of its convictions. Its aim is to be sweet and light and it never strays from that goal making it pleasant and appetizing fare for the original Broadway cast album buffs. Bock has written several melodic pieces that have an easy glide and Harnick has complimented them with some neat romantic lyric notions. "Dear Friend," "She Loves Me" and "Will He Like Me" have okay pop possibilities and the rest of the score fits neatly into the entire sugary conception of the book. Barbara Cook, Daniel Massey, Barbara Baxley, Jack Cassidy and Nathaniel Frey lead the singing troupe through the Bock-Harnick pleasantness. It's packaged in a two-disk album which gives the legitimo purists the entire score with patter intros. However, for at-home spinning continuity purposes, the diskery goofed by backing side one with side two instead of with side four, thus requiring a manual flipover after the first side is spun. This fault should be remedied in the next pressing run.

VAUGHN MEADER: "THE FIRST FAMILY—VOLUME TWO" (Cadence). Although this second edition of "The First Family" lacks the punch, vitality and novelty of the original, there's bound to be a spinning and sales rebuff on a followup to a package that hit 4,500,000 sales to become the record biz's all-time bestselling LP. Vaughn Meader and his family are being retired after this one and it's just as well. President Kennedy mimicry is still good but many of the jokes and sketches are strained and the four minute-plus vox pop with Meader and supporte which closes the package is an indication that they've run out of ideas for more Kennedy capers. However, the payoff rep seems to be guaranteed and there are still plenty of people around who will want to have Meader, Naomi Bronnert (Jackie) and Norma Macmillan (Caroline) back for this one more time.

TENNESSEE ERNIE FORD: "LONG, LONG AGO" (Capitol). Tennessee Ernie Ford says he sings these songs long, long ago and it's a cinch but that almost everybody else has, too, so there's bound to be a big market for this LP. The songs are sweet and sentimental ("Silver Threads Among The Gold," "Home Sweet Home," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Smilin' Through," etc.) and Ford knows how to milk every schmaltzy note out of them. It should fill the sales basket.

ANDRE PREVIN, HERB ELLIS, SHELLY MANNE, RAY BROWN: "4 TO GO" (Columbia). This session provides the platform from which the jazz talents of four top musicians are projected. Uniquely for this type arrangement, the foursome becomes not only soloists of merit but also ensemble contributors to each other's performances. With Andre Previn on piano, Herb Ellis on guitar, Shelly Manne on drums and Ray Brown on bass, a fine jazz package has been assembled which gives solid spotlighting to the special relationship of each of the participants. The LP should be sought by jazz buffs and programmers of this genre for the often stirring things it has to offer, largely because of the jam session quality of the album which lets the boys swing so freely and definitively.

CONNIE FRANCIS: "GRAND WORKING MOTHER PICTURE HITS" (MGM). The combination of Connie songs and Connie Francis adds up to a payoff package. The thrush continues to have a strong hold on the teen crowd and through these substantial tons of listings, she can pick up adult appreciation, too. The repertoire is as current as "Days Of Wine And Roses," the 1962 winner, and as vintage as "Lullaby Of Broadway," the winner in '35. In between are such nibbles that show-off her change-of-pace styling as "Secret Love," "Moon River," "Over The Rainbow" and "Zip-A-Dee Doo-Dah." They've all been done before, of course, but Miss Francis gives 'em the pop touch that spinners go for.

SAMMY DAVIS JR.: "FOOT-LOOSE FUN FOR FIRST NIGHTERS" (Decca). This is a roundup of light and gay songs being used to spotlight Decca's current re-run of its Broadway-Hollywood catalog. It's a worthy booster. This is stuff that Davis had in the can at Decca the new records for Reprise) but they are all very much alive. Included are "Too Close For Comfort," from the "Mr. Wonderful" tuner in which he starred, a couple of "Guys and Dolls" entries and a snappy "Mountain Greenery." He has brought in a ringer in Gordon Jenkins' "New York's My Home" from "Manhattan Tower," which was an original disk project, but it fits into the overall bill so no one should quibble.

THE UNITED STATES ARMY BAND—NAVY BAND—MARINE BAND—AIR FORCE BAND (RCA Victor). The revenue from the sale of these four packages will go towards the building of a National Cultural Center in Washington which should attract civic-minded citizens to the retail counters. But even if they were straight commercial packages, they would still stimulate lots of consumer interest, especially among the band buffs. The Service groups have the market down pat, of course, but Victor's recording engineers give them plenty of help through the new Dynagroove process. Sound is clear and stirring and drums up lots of turntable excitement. The Army, Navy and Air Force tooters are assisted by spirited choruses.

THE HOT DAGGERS: "SURFIN' USA" (Epic). This latest platter in the surf music sweepstakes will give the boomers more of what they seem to be digging on the pop scene these days. As rendered by the Hot Daggers, an instrumental-vocal group, many of the top surfin' tunes are delivered in driving and percussive style, with lotsa electric guitar twanging and grooving rhythmics. Included are the title tune, "Surfin'," "Pipeline," "Surfin' Safari," "Surfer's Stomp" all treated in the rockin' style that has put this material over.

HERBIE MANN: "THE SOUND OF MANN" (Verve). Set in a Latino groove but not the home move to which he has devoted so much of his time lately, Herbie Mann gets a nice outing via this session. Originally produced by Norman Granz, the session features a variety of top sidemen and the effect is an always-interesting platter, specially for fans of Latino and/or Africano rhythms. Most of the tunes included are reworkings of standards like "Frenesi," "Strike Up the Band," "Stardust," "Autumn Leaves" and "Peanut Vendor" but there are others as well.

BILL BARRON ORCH: "VERY NICE STUFF: BOSSA NOVA" (Decca). There is little of Leonard Bernstein's score to "West Side Story" actually presented on this session except for brief notations of some of the melodies of

MR. ACKER BILK.....UNDERNEATH THE ARCHES
(Atco) ..... Lady Of The Lake

PERRY COMO.....DON'T YOU FORGET IT
(RCA Victor) ..... One More Mountain

Perry Como's "Don't You Forget It" (Northridge) returns this performer into the disk sweepstakes with a bright pop entry which could repeat his big click on "Don't Let The Stars Get In Your Eyes" of several years ago. It's in a similar groove. "One More Mountain" (Ransom*) is a fine ballad with good chances over the long pull.*

CONNIE FRANCIS.....IF MY PILLOW COULD TALK
(MGM) .....You're The Only One Can Hurt Me

Connie Francis' "If My Pillow Could Talk" (Hermit†) hits a solid slip in a rhythmic format which is right down the contemporary pop groove. Could go all the way to the top. "You're The Only One Can Hurt Me" (Francon) is an okay ballad with an easy tempo and a lyric that stays close to tested ideas.*

PAUL EVANS.....EVEN TAN
(Kapp) .....Ten Thousand Tears

Paul Evans' "Even Tan" (Part) shapes up as a clever rocking number with a seasonal idea which this singer handles with strong impact in the teenage market. "Ten Thousand Tears" (Cascade*) is a routine country-flavored tune.*

THE FORTUNES.....THE GHOUL IN SCHOOL
(Cub) ..... You Don't Know

The Fortunes' "The Ghoul In School" (Hastings†) is a way-out novelty with a teenage pay which should map up spins among the Coke set. "You Don't Know" (Davidson†) is a conventionally styled rocking number belted in good style by this combo.

JOHNNY MATHIS.....EVERY STEP OF THE WAY
(Columbia).....No Man Can Stand Alone

Johnny Mathis' "Every Step of the Way" (Pauline) is a lilting ballad with a well-written lyric which this singer projects in an effectively sweet style. "No Man Can Stand Alone" (Lisa Drive*) is an inspirational item with a somewhat pretentious lyric that doesn't quite come off.*

ALEX NORTH ORCH
ANTHONY & CLEOPATRA THEMES
(20th-Fox)

Alex North's "Anthony & Cleopatra Themes" (Robbins), from the upcoming film, should ride on the high wave of curiosity about this production. Both sides of the disk, taken from the soundtrack, feature lush thematic motifs in rich symphonic settings.*

DINAH WASHINGTON ..... SOULVILLE
(Roulette).....Let Me Be The First To Know

Dinah Washington's "Soulville" (De Lorse-Nom†) is a hard-driving rhythm number with an okay lyric which this songstress makes go much further than it deserves. "Let Me Be The First To Know" (Laheviewt) is a greasy blues slice right down this songstress' alley.

BOBBY VINTON.....BLUE ON BLUE
(Epic) ..... These Little Things

Bobby Vinton's "Blue On Blue" (Famous) gives this young singer a well-written ballad with an arresting lyric idea set in pretty melodic setting. "These Little Things" (Feather†) is a swinging slice also with possibilities.*

TONY OSBORNE.....I LOVED YOU
(London) ..... Acapulco, 1922

Tony Osborne Orch's "I Loved You" (Chappell), this year's Eurovision song contest winner, is a standout instrument with a striking melody that should win spins on all levels. "Acapulco, 1922 (Almo*) bounces along in an oldfashioned groove with neat results.*

BYRDIE GREEN.....MEMORIES ARE MADE OF THIS
(Era) ..... Tremblin'

Byrdie Green's "Memories Are Made of This" (Mondalore†) brings back this hit of a few years ago in an excellent version which should earn a whole new round of spins. "Tremblin'" (Gil†) is an okay rocking ballad handled very efficiently by this blues songstress.

THE FRONTIERS.....I ONLY HAVE EYES FOR YOU
(Philips) ..... Don't Cause Cryin'

The Frontiers' "I Only Have Eyes For You" (Remick) brings back this fine oldie in a sharp rocking slice that'll give this number wide circulation with the juke crowd. "Don't Cause Crying" (Rust*) reverts to the usual teenage ballad idiom with okay results.*

EXCELLO GOSPEL SINGERS..FREEDOM AFTER AWHILE
(Peacock) ..... Dreamin' of Heaven

Excello Gospel Singers' "Freedom After Awhile" (Sunday School) is a solid example of the stirring religious music coming out of the gospel field as a matter of course. This is a standard number delivered in powerful style by this group. "Dreamin' of Heaven" (Liont) starts slowly but builds strongly at the finish.

BILLY VAUGHN.....HAPPY COWBOY
(Dot) ..... Broken Doll

Billy Vaughn's "Happy Cowboy" (Gil†) shapes up as a nifty instrumental offering with a bright western melody dished up in an inventive arrangement. "Broken Doll" (Hill & Range†) is another highly listenable slice due for widespread play. Herm.

POP SINGLES' ADULT AUDIENCE

Music Licensing Tiff Between ASCAP, TV Stations Tossed Back to Lower Ct.

The music licensing hassle between the tv broadcasters and the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers is back in the lap of N. Y. Federal Court Judge Sylvester J. Ryan. The issue was tossed back to Judge Ryan last week when the U. S. Court of Appeals in N. Y. turned down an appeal by the tv licensing committee which sought a revised licensing rate.

The turndown by Judges Leonard P. Moore, Henry J. Friendly and Paul R. Hayes, who heard the arguments, was based on the grounds that the appeal on Judge Ryan's original ruling had already been denied by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The case before Judge Ryan was pushed on the efforts of the tv broadcasters to obtain a license from ASCAP that would not require the stations to pay the society for its music, except when played in locally originated programs.

The music in future syndicated programs and feature films would be licensed by ASCAP to the producers of these programs "at the source" instead of being paid by the stations directly. Judge Ryan ruled that ASCAP could not be compelled to grant this type of license.

Now that the broadcasters' appeal has run its course, it's up to Judge Ryan to get the two parties together on setting up a new licensing arrangement sans the "at the source" issue.

Del-Fi, Top Coast Indie Label, Inks 7 Artists In Major Expansion Pgm.

Hollywood, May 14.

Del-Fi Records, largest Coast indie record producers and distributors, has entered into a major talent expansion program with signing of seven new artists aimed at teenage or comedy markets.

Bob Keene, Del-Fi prexy, signed Paul Wallace to an exclusive contract, with special clause allowing Wallace to make original cast recordings if other labels are involved with shows he might do.

Unique clause eliminates recording problems that have arisen in past when artists under contract to one company had to be replaced in cast recordings that had been sold to another firm. Wallace was in "Gypsy" both stage and screen.

Also inked are Hank & Dean, regulars on the "Tennessee Ernie Show," who move over from prior exclusive RCA Victor post. Deal is being closed for Bob Denver, regular on "Dobie Gillis" show, to make his disk debut for company.

Keene, additionally, has signed cousins Jackie Curtis and Bill Tracy, currently at Trully Nelson's, "National Velvet" telemovie star Lori Martin, Tim Considine, Bobby Crawford, Dave Gates, Canadian singer Bobby Curtola and The Pharos.

Keene, who said company grossed $1,000,000 last year, asserted he looks to $2,000,000 biz in current year. Major seller is Johnny Crawford, of "The Rifleman" television series, along with the late Richie Valens, with whom he started company. Company also records The Lively Ones, current at the Interlude, and Bruce Johnston band, both in the current surfing music craze.

BAMBI BERNSTEIN'S 'ESCAPE'

Hollywood, May 14.

Elmer Bernstein was granted a release by Ava Records, to which he is under exclusive contract, to record score of UA's "The Great Escape," which he composed, for United Artists Records.

Ava, in return, will cut single of "Escape" theme with Bernstein. Mitch Miller also has waxed theme as a single for Columbia.

20th Ups Lionel Newman To Music Affairs Head

Hollywood, May 14.

Lionel Newman, associated with 20th-Fox for 31 years and for past four years head of studio's tv music dept., succeeds Ted Cain as head of all music affairs. He thus will be in charge of both features and tv music.

Urban Thielmann, who has been arch manager and staff pianist for 28 years, moves up as associate in dept. He'll retain his former duties.

Novel Deal Puts Sweet Chariot, N.Y., Into Col's Groove

Columbia Records is extending its "original cast" groovings into the nightclub field, in an unprecedented agreement. Col has latched on to the exclusive rights to The Sweet Chariot, new gospel story on Manhattan's West 45th St.

The deal gives Col exclusivity to recording of the club as well as the exclusive right to record all gospel artists featured in association with the story. Included among groups to be recorded are The Sweet Chariots, The Nathaniel Lewis Singers and The Norman Stevens Singers.

Negotiations for the dishery-ditory tie were made by David Kapralik, director of pop artists & repertoire for Columbia; Joe Saunders, owner of The Sweet Chariot, and Rosalind Ross and Jerry Brandt of the William Morris Agency.

Col is bringing its recording engineers into the story for three nights beginning tomorrow (Thurs.) to get an on-the-spot grooving of the gospel going-on.

Saunders is now planning to open branches of The Sweet Chariots in key cities around the country. The first of these, in Chicago, will be in operation within a month.

AWARD 8 ASCAP PUBS 2G IN W. VA. PIRACY

Eight publisher members of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers (ASCAP) have been awarded default judgment for $2,000 against the Royal Broadcasting Co., owner of WVAR, Richwood, West Va., in a copyright infringement action charging the defendant with the unauthorized performance of eight musical compositions. The judgment also awarded attorneys' fees of $250 plus court costs.

The victorious ASCAP members are Leo Feist, Duchess, Brown & Henderson, Famous Music, Miller Music, New World Music, Pickwick Music, Robbins Music, and Shapiro, Bernstein.

Judge John A. Field Jr., of the U.S. District Court, Southern District of West Va., also awarded an injunction which restrains the defendant from publicly performing those songs in the future.

Set Royal Philharmonic Orch for U.S.-Can. Tour

A North American coast-to-coast tour of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra of London has been set for the fall of this year. The trek opens in Montreal Sept. 20—the first of 34 concerts in 30 cities—marking the return of the Orchestra to this continent for the first time since its appearance in 1958.

Two conductors, Sir Malcolm Sargent and Georges Pretre, will share the podium for various portions of the tour.

LP SPOTLIGHT EXTENDS FIELD

By MIKE GROSS

Pop singles appear to be coming of age. The single disk, once the private province of the teenage market, is now spreading its range to include adult buyers via subsequent showcasing in album product.

In a recent rundown of the 100 top selling albums around the country, it was revealed that about 30 titles had their origination as single releases. Two reasons are given for this current disk hit phenom:

1) The singles market is now offering more good music than ever before, and 2) the growing importance of the rock jukers who are able to move large quantities of merchandise quickly when the product has immediate consumer identification—either a name artist or an already established disk hit to attract the record buyers.

There is also a school of thought which attributes the general decline of the singles business (1,000,000 copy sellers are hard to come by these days, even for hits) to the fact that the kids, themselves, got all the current singles sequences they want via radio and jukeboxes, and wait until their fave topic is put into an album along with 11 other songs. The LP, they say, is a more economical buy.

The claim that the songs on singles are getting better is more than just a wishful note on the part of the responsible music execs who've been moaning ever since the takeover of rock 'n' roll. It's not that the frantic 2 'n' 2 tune, aimed solely at the bleu-jean set is out, but they've been encouraged by the recent flock of "good" songs that have won over the javes as well as the adults.

Among the "good" songs they list are "I Left My Heart in San Francisco," "My Colouring Book," "The End Of The World," "I Wanna Be Around," "Our Winter Love," "Home (When Shadows Fall)," "Born To Be Wild," "Up, Up And Away," "Days Of Wine And Roses," "The Good Life" (from "Seven Capital Sins") and "Call Me Irresponsible" (from "Papa's Delicate Condition").

To further substantiate their claim that the songs are getting better, the music execs point to the large number of covering recordings being given these tunes. In addition to becoming album titles for the original disker, the songs are being picked up by a large number of other artists for

Mathis' Own Label After His Col Exit

Philadelphia, May 14.

Johnny Mathis, here for a concert at the Academy of Music, cleared up some speculation as to what will happen when his contract with Columbia expires in June. "What Helen and I plan to do is cut our own masters. (Helen is Mrs. Johnny Noga, wife of a former San Francisco cafe man who acts as his manager). We'll hire the orchestra, arranger, technicians and conductor. Then we'll sell the tapes to Columbia or whoever winds up as our distributor. It'll be getting me some of that Texas kind of loot," the singer explained.

According to industryites, Mathis never touches his record royalties and the company pays him interest on a neat egg of $1,000,000. They have a bit of mine," he commented.

Mathis wound up his obligations to Columbia with a nine-hour recording session in New York Thursday (9). "We made two albums and countless singles. It will give them a backlog. But we also saved a few goodies," he added.

Col Execs Again Defend Record Club As FTC 'Monopoly' Hearings Resume

Kirshner, Schneider In London Talks on 'Victors'

Don Kirshner, newly-appointed exec veepee in charge of Columbia Pictures' music and record divisions, and Stanley Schneider, veep of the pix company, left for London Friday (10) to huddle with producer-director Carl Foreman on his currently editing production of "The Victors."

The confabs will center on distribution and promotion of the score of the film, for which original music is being composed by Sol Kaplan.

Tovarich' Finds Orig Cast Home With Cap Label

"Tovarich" is no longer a disk orphan. The tuner, which has been running on Broadway for the past nine weeks, was picked up early this week by Capitol Records for an original cast album warhorser.

Cap will bring the "Tovarich" cast, headed by Vivien Leigh and Jean-Pierre Aumont, into a New York studio Sunday (19) to put the show into the groove. The session will be supervised by Si Rady.

The financial arrangement for the deal was not revealed but a Cap spokesman said that it was advantageous to all concerned. Cap says its pickup of the original cast album rights was based on the $50,000-plus b.o. take the show pulled the past two weeks (it went over $50,000 some weeks during the run) and the Tony award recently copped by Miss Leigh. Show also got a hefty plug on Ed Sullivan's CBS-TV show last Sunday (12) in conjunction with Miss Leigh's appearance.

The score was written by Anne Croswell & Lee Pockriss. E. B. Marks' Piedmont Music firm is publishing.

LEVINE, CENOVESE TO O.O. ABC-PAR O'SEAS

Harry Levine, exec-veepee of ABC-Paramount, heads for Europe May 26 for a series of business conferences with the label's affiliates and licensees in London, Paris, Milan and Rome. He'll be accompanied by Albert Genovese, an ABC-Par exec.

Levine will be met in Europe by James Grayson, managing director of Westminster Records, ABC-Par's classical subsidiary. They'll confer on matters pertaining to Westminster's foreign licensees.

Levine and Genovese are expected back at their N. Y. base on June 10. Grayson, who also heads artists & repertoire for Westminster, will remain in Europe to handle recording activities for the label.

John Levy to Bow New Jazz Pkg. at Apollo, N.Y.

A new jazz package, "Free Sounds of '68," will bow at New York's Apollo Theatre Friday (17). Produced by John Levy, the unit will headline Nancy Wilson, Julian (Cannonball) Adderley Sextet, Ramsey Lewis Trio, Oscar Brown Jr. and the Tommy Johnson Dancers.

Levy's experiment on the vaude circuit will spotlight the artists' disk hits, keeping dialog to a minimum. Special writing will be by Nat Adderley and Brown, with terp turns devised by Johnson.

After a week's run at the Apollo, the package will move to the Howard in Washington and then to the Uptown in Philadelphia.

The second phase of the long-running Federal Trade Commission investigation into the Columbia Record Club began a stand in New York last week with the dishery at bat. During the week-long testimony, Col execs reasserted their position that the club operation has had beneficial effects on the entire music industry and can be credited with the industry's general upbeat sales spiral since its inception in 1955.

The FTC, which has charged the Col club with "monopolistic practices" and "deceptive price claims," began its hearings in N.Y. last January and took them on tour through March hitting Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles. The Col legalites will call witnesses in N.Y. through early June and then move to the Coast for hearings in L.A. later that month.

Testifying last week were Goddard Lieberson, Columbia president; Norman Adler, label's exec veepee, and Cornelius F. Keating, veepee-general manager of the record club. Their testimony pointed out that it was not coincidental that total disk industry sales on the retail level and the hi-fi net sales started to go upward with the introduction of the club. It was claimed that the consumer has been made record and music-conscious through the $8,000,000 advertising expenditure labelled out in 1958 and the 12,000,000 mailing pieces that went out last year.

Cites Industry Benefit

Adler asserted that since a space ad pulls four out of every 1,000 readers into the club and that since an average on a direct mail approach is between 1% and 2%, there are plenty of people left who have been made aware of records and music and who may have done something about it without joining the club. Adler also mentioned that the annual rate growth of hi-fi net sales was 3% a year before the club and is now travelling at a 15% growth pace.

Along the same lines, Lieberson said, "I think the clubs (Columbia, RCA Victor, Capitol) have had the effect of broadening the market for records. It has interested more people in phonographs. It has dramatized the whole picture of phonographs and records as a source of entertainment at home."

Another upbeat point mentioned by Adler was the fact that since

Big Dishery Spread Of Grammy Nominations Helps Cut Vote Beefs

With a fairly large spread of record companies represented with nominations for this year's Grammy awards in the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences' balloting, the squawks on voting procedures and category qualifications that have hounded the Academy in past years have virtually been eliminated.

However, NARAS still has to pull a complete industry turnout for its award-giving affair. Among companies not taking tables for the annual dinner, which takes place tonight (Wed.) at New York's Hotel Astor and L.A.'s Beverly Hilton are Decca and London.

Leading the field in this year's nominations of some 240 records in 30 categories is Columbia Records with 42 nominations. Runners-up are RCA Victor with 34, Capitol (32), Verve (15), Angel (13), Atlantic (10) Warner Bros. (8) ABC-Paramount (7) Reprise (7) Cadence (6), Liberty (5), Mercury (5), Kapp (4), Impulse (3), Vanguard (3), VeeJay (3), Decca (2) and Philips (2).

Top vote-getting disker in this year's nominations is Stan Getz, who is represented with three different albums in eight categories. Tony Bennett, Ray Charles, Vaughn Meader and Allan Sherman each earned five final nominations.

CBS (Ed Sullivan) Bans Folksinger Dylan For John Birch Satirization

Folksinger Bob Dylan was barred by CBS from rendering a song satirizing the John Birch Society. Dylan was to have appeared on Sunday's (12) Ed Sullivan show, but when a representative of the network nixed the song the 21-year-old folksinger did not appear as scheduled.

Sullivan and producer Bob Precht okayed the song, written by Dylan, titled "The Talking John Birch Society Blues," and protested the decision of the network program practices department. Song was rendered recently on ABC-TV's "Hootenanny."

Dylan has a contract with Columbia Records, a CBS subsid. Network declined any comment on the incident.

inclusion in their album releases and, in many instances, for the singles market, too.

Some have been going a step further and have added these songs to their repertoire for their nightclub appearances. This is a far cry from the pop scene of just a few years ago when a disclick was mostly a "sound freak" that meant nothing unless the original disker did it.

The extension of the single into album form is not a new disk industry practice, but the past few months has witnessed an unprecedented use of this technique. And the fact that it's paying off with sales indicates that it will be in fashion for some time to come by the majors and the indies, alike.

It's gotten so that the singles don't have to be a big hit to warrant the title showcasing in an album. Many artists and repertoire men feel that if the song has received any kind of play or attention it is justification enough for an album ride. For the most part they wait until the singles have reached their peak position on the sales charts and just about the time they begin to ebb, the album is rushed out so that the record company can milk extra profits via the spotlight on the specific song.

In the past, a&r men, when plotting their release schedule, used to say, "Let's break this single out of an LP." Now, they're saying, "Let's build an album from this single."

The "building albums from singles" scheme has been a dominant activity at Columbia Records during the past few months. It's paid off with such LP winners as Andy Williams' "Days Of Wine And Roses," Tony Bennett's "I Left My Heart In San Francisco" and "I Wanna Be Around," Eydie Gorme's "Blame It On The Bossa Nova," Steve Lawrence's "Winners" which spotlighted his "Go Away Little Girl" single click, Dion's "Ruby Baby," Bill Pursell's "Our Winter Love" and Marty Robbins' "Devil Woman."

Epic, too, has been following its parent company Col's lead with George Maharis' "Teach Me Tonight" and Bobby Vinton's "Roses Are Red" and "Over The Mountain."

RCA Victor has done it with Kitty Kallen's "My Coloring Book," Skeeter Davis' "The End Of The World" and Duane Eddy's "Dance With The Guitar Man." Capitol's recent entries along the singles-to-album lines were Nat King Cole's "Ramblin' Rose," Bobby Darin's "You're The Reason I'm Living" and The Beach Boys' "Surfin' USA." Decca got in the swing with Brenda Lee's "All Alone Am I" and Jackie Wilson's "Baby Workout" (on its Brunswick label).

Among some other diskeries building albums from singles have been Kapp (Joe Harnell's "Fly Me To The Moon—Bossa Nova"), MGM (David Rose's "The Stripper"), Atlantic (Bent Fabric's "Alley Cat"), Reprise (Lou Monte's "Pepino, The Italian Mouse"), VeeJay (The 4 Seasons' "Big Girls Don't Cry"), Vanguard (The Rooftop Singers' "Walk Right In"), London (The Ventures' "Telstar"), Liberty (Bobby Vee's "The Night Has A Thousand Eyes") and Valiant (The Cascades' "Rhythm Of The Rain").

Sure Recipe for Hit Disk in Germany: Capri & Dash of Love, Study Shows

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, May 14.

If you want to turn out a hit record in Germany, you had better include the basic ingredients of Capri (Tahiti and Hawaii and the Andalusians are acceptable substitutes), unsatisfied longing, and just a touch of love, a German music industry study of hits here shows.

While the American formula for pop hits is defined here as "simple, sad, and sexy," in an analysis of 100 recent German top platters, the word love appeared 280 times, the moon showed up 108 times, a dream occurred 101 times, wonder cropped up 110 times, loneliness was part of the theme 72 times, the stars came in for 64 mentions, and luck was referred to 33 times.

About 4,000 disks per year that fall into the "popular" category are brought out in Germany, and the survey indicates that it is the words — and not the music — that account for the success or failure of the tune. Themes of the titles included in the study of German hits fell 54% into a category termed "pure erotic," 31% "homesickness and longing for distant places" and 11% into "idyllic dreams."

The study indicated that three-fourths of the young men and seven-eighths of the girls listen regularly to popular music. They give about half of their pocket money for records. Two-thirds of the buyers of these pop records in Germany are under 25 — and 32% of the young people in the same age category do not own a single book except for their required school textbooks.

Many 10 or 12-year-olds can repeat the entire lyrics of pop tunes, the survey reveals, and there are "song specialists" who in 10 minutes can write the titles of 50 popular hits, but in the same time can recall the names of only two or three folk songs.

A few foreign words contribute to the popularity of a German tune, and it's considered best to say "piano" instead of "light," and "amore" for love and "cafeteria" or "cafe" instead of the German word for a small restaurant, which is considered less romantic and hence less likely to turn into a best-seller.

One trouble, according to the study, is that the people hear so much about "take my hands and let us disappear into fairyland" that they tend to think life is nothing but a beautiful and unrealistic romance, and hence become disillusioned.

The report, which covered schools and young people throughout Germany, suggested that records be studied in the classroom, giving the impressionable students a thorough and honest appraisal of such themes as "good and bad hit tunes," "popular hits vs. the classics," "popular hits vs. folk songs" and "evaluation of the hit tunes."

NARAS' N.Y. Unit Votes 5G Scholarship Grants; L.A. Wing Sets Awards

The New York and Coast chapters of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences (NARAS) set up scholarship grants last week.

The New York chapter's board of governors voted a total of $5,000 in scholarships during the next 18 months. Sharing equally in the first grants assigned this year will be the Berklee School of Music, the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Center, the Eastman School of Music and the Manhattan School of Music.

Each has been asked to assign the grant to a deserving student of its own choice. Previous N.Y. chapter grants also went to Eastman and Manhattan as well as to M.I.T., Pratt Institute and the School of Jazz.

The Coast chapter will award scholarships for the Dorothy Kirsten Master Class in Opera Technique to the University Extension, U. of California at Los Angeles. NARAS will provide eight half-scholarships for the chosen students for the summer workshop beginning June 10. This is the first in a series of scholarships awarded by the L.A. chapter. Future scholarships or grants-in-aid will be given to other universities.

20th's Upcoming 'Cleo' Album Gets $250,000 Advance

The "Cleopatra" soundtrack album is "money in the bank." That apparently is the attitude of the distributors around the country who've already shelled out more than $250,000 to 20th-Fox Records for the deluxe LP which they haven't seen or heard yet.

The money-in-front policy established by the diskery follows the pattern being used by the parent film company in peddling the pic. The pic firm has pulled in over $15,300,000 in advance cash guarantees.

Norman Weiser, veepee in charge of operations for the diskery, is now spreading the advance payment pattern to his dealings with foreign distributors. Already up with its quota coin is Quality Distributors, which will handle the "Cleopatra" platters in Canada.

The album will be released early next month prior to the film's world premiere at New York's Rivoli Theatre on June 12. Label switched its tag officially yesterday (Tues.) to 20th Century-Fox Records.

The score, composed by Alex North, has been acquired by the Big 3 (Robbins, Feist & Miller). It's been assigned to the Robbins firm. A single back-to-back disking of two "Love Themes From Cleopatra" also on the 20th-Fox label was released last week.

MAX KAMINSKY'S 'LIFE IN JAZZ' A McCOY TOME

"My Life in Jazz" by Max Kaminsky, with V. E. Hughes (Harper & Row; $4.95), is one of the few books on the jazz scene to be written from inside out. Kaminsky has been headline trumpeter with top aggregations for many years. Book begins with author's early struggles in his native Boston. Kaminsky's love of music, particularly his devotion to jazz, has almost a religious fervor. He spins great yarns about his former roommate from hall bedroom days, Eddie Condon, and of such jazz greats as Bix Beiderbecke, Fats Waller, Benny Goodman and Billie Holliday. It was Kaminsky, by the way, who "accidentally" introduced "When the Saints Go Marching In" into the jazz idiom.

He has much praise for Gene Krupa, and happy memories of his work with Krupa. His reactions to Artie Shaw, with whom he played when both were in the Navy during W.W. II, are less affectionate. In 1956, Kaminsky was sent overseas by the State Dept. in a combo that included Jack Teagarden, Earl Hines and Cozy Cole. Outfit spread U.S. goodwill in Asia, with conspicuous success.

Jazzman feels sorry for modern kids deprived the opportunity to enjoy swing music, and he hopes for a return of this style of playing. A warm, human account, full of savvy and pungent reporting.

Vanguard, Ryerson Music, Solomon 'Walk Right In' To Peer's Infringement Suit

Peer International filed suit in N.Y. Federal Court last week against Vanguard Recording Society, Ryerson Music and Maynard Solomon for alleged infringement of the renewal rights to "Walk Right In." The tune was a recent click for The Rooftop Singers on the Vanguard label.

According to the complaint, prior to 1930 Gus Cannon wrote the words, as employee for hire for the Victor Talking Machine Co. Victor assigned all rights to Southern Music and in 1940 the plaintiff obtained the assignment. In 1958, the rights were renewed.

The complaint charges that Ryerson and Solomon infringed the renewal rights by authorizing and licensing the tune, "Walk Right In," which was copied from plaintiff's copyright and are receiving royalties. It's claimed that Vanguard infringed by recording the tune.

The suit seeks a judgment that registration of copyright filed by Ryerson be declared null and void, and that the defendants be enjoined and that they be required to account for all gains.

A&R Men Facing Major Challenge In Artist's Rising Power: Col's Mersey

One of the major challenges facing any artists & repertoire man today is the rising power of the artist over the disk producer. That's the opinion of Robert Mersey, a&r staffer at Columbia Records, who, last week, was awarded a gold record as producer of Andy Williams' "Moon River" LP.

The abdication of power by the a&r man, says Mersey, has been slowly increasing and its main cause is, quite simply, a lack of know-how on the part of the a&r man. Mersey believes that, ideally, a recording session should be a collaboration between whatever ideas the artist himself brings to the material plus the original conception and technical knowledge of the a&r man.

"If the a&r man is content to let himself become merely a number caller," he declares, "eventually the artist loses one of his most precious attributes — confidence. An artist needs someone who is totally objective and hurts no one but himself if he takes on too much power. This situation is becoming more serious and the responsibility rests entirely on the producers themselves."

Mersey, who joined Columbia in 1961 after stints as an arranger, conductor and producer, is also currently represented with such clicks as Dion's "Ruby Baby," and Williams' "Can't Get Used To Losing You" and "Days Of Wine And Roses." Mersey also supervises the recording sessions for Patti Page and Aretha Franklin. And, to extend his musical spectrum, he's now arranging a longhair work for the Cleveland Orchestra.

In addition to the teamwork on the artist and a&r man level, Mersey considers the kind of sales organization that sells the product another key factor in the making of a diskclick. "Certain material that would be completely acceptable on indie labels," he points out, "might often be completely unsuitable on Columbia." Each record company's sales organization has created an image of the product it distributes and the artist and a&r man have to gear their work in that image.

It's his view that it has become increasingly important for the disk creators and the disk sellers to be completely in tune on their efforts to compete with the evergrowing number of records being thrown into the market. "Recording artists and producers are coming from everywhere," he says. "It's like fighting a Chinese army."

Colpix Into Spoken Word Field Via Tie With Meredith Co.

Colpix Records is stepping into the spoken word field. First step in that direction is a pact with Tala Productions to create several albums for the label.

Tala is headed by Burgess Meredith who was recently signed by Colpix as an exclusive recording artist. Records produced by Tala will be devoted entirely to poetry and literature. Tala, incidentally, is the name of Meredith's daughter, and the word means "to speak" in Swedish.

Colpix's first three spoken word disks will feature several American and British poets reading their own poems. Meredith will be heard on the records, furnishing the signatures that identify each poet and in continuity.

Oscar Williams, American poet and anthologist, is the editor for Tala. Williams selected all the material in Colpix's first volumes of poetry packages. The first three LPs in the series will be "A Little Treasury of American Poetry" in two volumes, and "A Little Treasury of British Poetry."

Leading American Poets who are heard on the first releases include Wallace Stevens, Robinson Jeffers, Conrad Aiken, Marianne Moore, e.e. cummings, Archibald MacLeish, Alan Tate, Ogden Nash, Richard Eberhart, Robert Penn Warren and Robert Lowell.

Among the British poets who read their own works are Edwin Muir, Robert Graves, Sir Herbert Read, W. H. Auden, Stephen Spender and George Barker.

A June release has been scheduled for the first spoken word albums.

MADRID MAESTRO WHO PLAYED ON, FACES JAIL

Madrid, May 14.

Orchestra leader, composer and light opera impresario Mendoza Lasalle faces a three-month jail sentence recommended by a prosecuting attorney for violation of a court order during Lasalle's dispute last year with the Society of Authors & Composers, owners of the Teatro de la Zarzuela.

After a disastrous economic season of light opera under Lasalle's management, the theatre owners successfully petitioned the courts to curtail further performances. But despite the ban the intrepid music maker kept the theatre box-office open to the public.

He also prevented a court-appointed administrator in carrying out a general liquidation of physical assets. In defense the musician said he acted to safeguard employment for some 100 members of the cast and crew.

Lasalle said that the Society of Authors & Composers promised to meet half of the $100,000 deficit and withdraw its charges against him. This, he added, was never fulfilled.

Tooter's Suit Asks Ct. To Void His Expulsion From AFM Local 802

Milton Farowitz, a musician known professionally as Farrow, filed suit in N. Y. Federal Court last week against the Associated Musicians of Greater New York — Local 802—to rescind his expulsion from the local.

The action seeks a permanent injunction 1) cancelling his alleged unlawful expulsion, 2) requiring Local to reinstate him to full membership, 3) forbidding the defendant from interfering with his profession as a musician in the single or steady engagement field on the basis of the alleged unlawful expulsion, and 4) forbidding defendant from visiting upon plaintiff any penalties, charges or reprisals.

Farowitz claims he was a member of good standing for 12 or 13 years. On Nov. 14, 1962, 802 sent him a decision of the trial board which had found him guilty of distributing leaflets. The expulsion, the suit claims, infringes his rights under the labor management act and deprived him and drove him out of his profession as a musician.

The action further claims that the defendant has complete monopolistic control over orchestra leaders and musicians and that all are afraid to employ him. As a result, not only has he suffered monetary loss but has been damaged in his profession and prevented from performing as a musician.

He claims to have exhausted all procedures without success.

Inside Stuff—Music

"Jazz is having children all over the world," said pianist-composer-arranger Lalo Schifrin at a recent luncheon meeting in New York of the Conference For Jazz. "American records go everywhere and performers try to combine their native music with the beat and the improvisational approach of jazz just as the Brazilians did with the samba." Schifrin, who was until recently pianist with the Dizzy Gillespie Quintet, was discussing "The Bossa Nova—Is It Jazz?" Copeaker at the meet was Quincy Jones, conductor-arranger in Mercury Records artists & repertoire department.

Both speakers challenged the purist approach to the bossa nova, which causes some adherents to criticize big band presentations of the new Latin jazz beat and others to claim priority of parenthood in its development. In his talk, Schifrin noted that the bossa nova is not jazz. "It is polyrhythmic rather than syncopated," said Schifrin, "but it has a syncopated sound because the repetitive patterns of several Carnival drummers are synthesized at once in the basic rhythms of the bossa nova."

Other participants in the discussion were jazz record producer George Avakian; Nat Shapiro, of Columbia Records International Department; jazz critic Stanley Dance. Arnold Shaw, of E. B. Marks, was emcee.

Final plans for the fifth annual convention of the American Record Merchandisers & Distributors Assn., set for June 25-26 at Miami Beach's Eden Roc Motel, are now being set with selection of speakers, symposiums and other programming features. It is expected that Dave Kapp, president of Kapp Records, will make the keynote address on June 25. ARMADA president Amos Heilicher will also make his annual address. Other speakers will be Dave Miller, head of Miller International, and Edwin Abramson, CPA, who'll attempt to clarify the regulations in the new Internal Revenue Code.

Several manufacturers are scheduled to hold sales meetings in Miami Beach during the course of the convention. Among them are Command, ABC-Paramount, Jay-Gee Records, Colpix, VeeJay, United Artists, Atlantic and Atco.

The Fifth Annual Congress of Strings' free scholarship summer school programs being sponsored by some 700 local organizations of the American Federation of Musicians in the U.S. and Canada at Michigan State U. June 23 through Aug. 17 will get nationwide tv coverage. Through cooperation of National Educational Television and Michigan State U.'s video station WMSB, the AFM Student String Congress Orchestra will present televised concerts for the second successive season. Featured in the telecasts will be Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and Robert Shaw, conducting both chorale and String Congress Orchestra.

Illness last winter of a faculty member of the Mannes College of Music is responsible for a series of concerts by the school's students at various New York hospitals. Instructor Elizabeth Aaron missed five music while a patient at Montefiore Hospital. She offered to bring pupils to perform in wards or auditoriums. A chamber music program was a hit at Montefiore. Since the inaugural concert, Mannes student volunteers under Miss Aaron's direction have given similar performances at such hospitals as Manhattan State, Bellevue and Hillside and the series may be expanded.

Stanley Adams, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, will receive a plaque on behalf of the Society this Sunday (19) at New York's Carnegie Hall during the Musicthon concert produced by Music For The Blind Inc. The plaque will be presented by Albert G. Gerson, president of Music For The Blind, in token of appreciation for the many years of cooperation between the Society and the organization. This Musicthon will be the first of an annual concert produced by Music For The Blind to raise funds for its projects in bringing help to sightless musicians.

Yannis Xenakis, Greek composer, will be a guest in residence at Tanglewood, Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., this summer. Invited by Erich Leinsdorf of Boston Symphony and by Aron Copland, chairman of the Center's faculty, Xenakis will join Lukas Foss, Gunther Schuller and Copland on the composer department of the staff, during an eight-week span for advanced music study.

Gettysburg Centennial Records, Gettysburg College and Jay-Bee Music (ASCAP) have combined to bring out a special Gettysburg Centennial offering in disk and sheet music for the 1963 observances of the Civil War battle. The song, "Gettysburg, U.S.A.," was written by Joe Beal and Jim Boothe. The tune was recorded by The Fall Guys.

Veteran cleffer-music publisher Al J. Neiburg is spreading out on the current disk circuit. Among his songs that have received recent disk workovers are "The Talk Of The Town" by Della Reese and Robert Goulet; "The Snows of Kilimanjaro" by Ruth Olay and Karl Grant; "The Wind And The Sea" by Ruth Olay and Karl Grant, and "Call Me A Fool" by Kitty Kallen.

Cadence Preems '1st Family' Sequel; Eye 300,000 Sales

The second edition of Vaughn Meader's "The First Family" was launched early last week with an initial shipping run of 100,000. By week's end Cadence Records reported that a total of 170,000 copies had been shipped.

It's now estimated by Cadence sales execs that the followup to initial "First Family" LP, which is the industry's all-time bestseller with a rackup of 4,500,000 copies, will go between 250,000 and 300,000 copies. "That's still a top-selling figure," says Bud Dallinger, Cadence's sales chief.

Dallinger figures that disk splurge on President Kennedy pardoes that followed the Meader LP, is now cutting into the second volume's air-play and sales. Anyhow, it's a lame-duck disk in that Meader, who was reluctant to do the followup in the first place, now plans to extend his platter work to other areas and probably on his own label.

NEWPORT NOT ALL JAZZ, FOLK FESTIVAL SET TOO

Frisco on Folknik Kick; Limeliters Hit Smash $24,427 in Two One-Nighters

San Francisco, May 14

The folkniks are hootin' out all over in these parts. The past weekend saw a free "hootenanny" on the campus of S.F. State College and two concerts by the Limeliters—one in Frisco, one in Berkeley; Pete Seeger gigged here last Tuesday (7) and the New Lost City Ramblers do a one-nighter at Foothill College in Los Altos (south of here) on May 29.

Limeliters were a near-sellout Friday (10) at Frisco's Masonic Memorial. They pulled $11,871 in the 3,500-seat house. Group followed up Saturday night with a sellout $12,456 at the Berkeley Community Theatre, a 3,400-seater.

There's an economy-size folk festival planned for late June on the U. of California campus in Berkeley, with Pete Seeger, among others. But the biggest bash of all is set for the coming weekend (17-19) in Monterey.

Although some top name talent being considered didn't pan out, there's a host of names to give variety to the fest, first of what is planned as an annual event. Leading off Friday night (17) will be Peter, Paul & Mary, Lightnin' Hopkins, the Greenbriar Boys with Dian, Barbara Dane, the Dillards, and the Andrews Sisters (gospel singers from Berkeley).

Saturday afternoon's folk talent show and sing features, among others, Reese Hawes, Barbara Dane, Mike Seeger, Doc Watson, Ralph Rinzler, John Cohen and the Country Boys.

The Weavers and Bob Dylan lead off the talent for Saturday night's show, followed by the New Lost City Ramblers (which one Frisco newspaper transliterated to "New York City Ramblers"), Mance Lipscomb, Rita Weill, Bessie Jones and the Sea Island Singers, and the West Wind Folk Ensemble.

An informal hootenanny at midnight Saturday, with pros and amateurs joining in, will round out the day.

The first Sunday afternoon session is scheduled for 1 p.m., and will feature Bessie Jones and the Sea Islanders, the Andrews Sisters, the Reverend Overstreet and his boys, and others.

In addition to the concerts, there will be a number of symposiums on folk music. The fest is sponsored by the Monterey Jazz Festival, with Jimmy Lyons as general manager.

The Dynasales Groove

Radio Corp. of America's march towards a $2,000,000,000 billings goal by 1965 was spearheaded last week by a subtle phonograph sales pitch from Charles M. Odorizzi, the corporation's group exec veepee.

At the RCA stockholders' meeting in New York Odorizzi announced that all those present would be gifted with an RCA Victor Dynagroove recording of Robert Shaw's "This Is My Country." He then added, "And for those who don't have stereo machines, your local RCA dealer will be happy to take care of you."

Italo Film Boom Spurs Grooving Of Soundtracks

Rome, May 14.

The recent Italian film production boom has inevitably resulted in a spurt of activity in the allied field of soundtrack music. With one major exception: the title tune as such is an Italo rarity, being substituted in most cases by platters spotlighting the orchestrated backdrop score ready for dancing and-or just plain listening.

Though exact statistics have not yet been compiled, the bestseller in this field is felt to be the "Dolce Vita" LP by RCA Italiana, in which Nino Rota's music, noteworthy in itself, rode the international success of the Federico Fellini film.

The soundtrack LP of the new Fellini pic, "8½," has just been issued here by another company, C.A.M., again with a score by Nino Rota, and reportedly is doing well. C.A.M. is a relative newcomer in the field. Though only starting to press film platters back in 1956, C.A.M. issued some 140 soundtrack records between 1956 and 1961. It spurted to a 111 total during 1962 alone, and has so far, in the first few months of this year totaled 22 different film recordings.

Company's catalogs include waxings by most if not all of Italy's top film composers. Besides Nino Rota, it's names include such writers as Mario Nascimbene (who has also composed scores for several Yank pix as well), A. F. Lavagnino, Piero Piccioni and Carlo Rustichelli (who has written music for most of Pietro Germi's films, including "Divorce, Italian Style").

Another unusual factor is that in contrast to RCA Italiana and other companies which issue soundtrack records here, C.A.M. is almost exclusively a soundtrack outfit. The few exceptions are albums of Italian musical comedies, most of which eventually reach the screen anyway.

Some recent Italian soundtrack recordings issued by C.A.M. include "Imperial Venus," "Verona Trial," "Nogopag," "La Parmigiana," "The Penthouse."

JOHNNY MATHIS' TENT TRAIL DOW VIA NOGA

Featured with Mathis will be comedian Allen Drake, the Marcello Ballet Espagnol and the Brandywine Singers.

Via Veneto Notes

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome, May 14.

Italian disk critic kudos have gone to "Desafinado" in the original Joao Gilberto rendition, "Nostalgia," by Gino Mescoli, and Emilio Pericoli's "Amori dei Nostri Anni Ruggenti" (Love of Our Roaring Years); jazz prizes went to Romano Mussolini for "Jazz at Studio 7," "Coltrane Plays the Blues," and "Bessie's Blues 1923-24," "Mondo Cane" (C A M) soundtrack penned by Riz Ortolani and Nino Oliviero was voted best in film music sector.

CGD's Johnny Dorelli heads his own video show, "Johnny 7," this summer. Sings four of his recent bestsellers on each stanza, which also features such guest stints as Connie Francis (who'll sing Italo version of "Follow the Boys," "Per Sempre Con Te"); Lou Monte, Joao Gilberto, and others. Monte taped several specials during his recent Milan visit, including guestint for "The Middle-Aged Man," RAI-TV series, which is about to be released.

Of other items in SAAR list (bearing the Jolly-Vogue-Music labels) Giannicello and Ernesto Milandri seem to have potentials in good powerful pipes, while both songs performed by Jerry are too much in the [illegible] class though rhythmic and probably saleable. All items are strikingly jacketed.

Night Club Records has a hitting Madison-hully-gully combo in the classic niche per Luciano Fineschi's renditions, of which "Hully Gully No. 3" is best. Another new release which got some extra publicity via recent elections here but can travel on its own is Armando Romeo's Ricordi recording of "Anni Felici" (Happy Years). Has pleasing chorus backdrop, with reverse featuring okay dance item, "Capri Serenade."

Another Milan visitor: Line Renaud, French singer, who has her own RAI-TV show, "Rendez-Vous." Current CC/CGD bestsellers are Betty Curtis' "Chariot"; Fraternity Bros.' "Topolino," and Gene Pitney's "Un Soldino nel Jukebox." L. Sugar and C. A. Rossi's Jukebox label just took on Italo release of Chess, Checker and Argo, Scepter catalogs, while Galleria del Corso have signed Rico Rinardi, Franco Godi, Mario Perrone, all new local names.

Two tunes from "Rugantino," Garinei-Giovannini musical which opens on Broadway (under Alex Cohen's aegis) in 1964, have now been recorded by Claudio Villa and Renato Rascel, to add to original cast LP on CAM label which features Armando Trovajoli Orchestra. Songs are "Roma non fa la stupida stasera" and "Ciumachella di Trastevere." Trovajoli's latest song, written with Migliacci, is "Fino Al Cuore" (CAM), which is featured in current Cinecitta pic release, "In Italy It's Called Love."

SAAR records have come up with a neat package of 45 rpms called "Happy Spring," featuring songs by Françoise Hardy, Remo Germani, Tony Dallara, Fausto Leali, Giannicello, Jerry and Ernesto Milandri.

Both Hardy items, "Tous les Garcons et les Filles" and "J'Suis D'Accord" are in both French and Italian versions, with pleasant saleable accent in latter, and are already hits in France and other areas. The Tony Dallara platter, featuring "Tu Che Sei la Primavera"—a catchy tango—and "Norma," a switch tune for Dallara, looks a sure hit for summer ratings here.

RCA has taken on Gino Paoli, popular Italian singer-composer. First for his new label is a 45, "Domani" (Tomorrow) and "Basta Chiudere Gli Occhi" (Just Close Your Eyes), backed by Ennio Morricone's Orchestra.

Also for RCA, Miranda Martino has just waxed "Ballata di una Donna Sola" (Ballad of a Woman Alone) and "Non Ho Pieta" (I've No Pity), to follow up her fast-selling "Gaston."

More RCA Italiana items: Paul Anka recorded two new items in Italian while here: "Chitarra, Vino e Amore" (Steel Guitar and Glass of Wine) and "Piangero per Te" (I'll Cry For You). Sergio Endrigo, whose "Io Che Amo Solo Te" continues a seller in depth, is set for a series of RAI-TV appearances, including a special. Fiorentini has translated a Joao Gilberto bossa nova, "Outra vez" into Neapolitan as "N'Ata Vota."

Salomonic decision resolved impasse on who was to sell incoming Rita Pavone's songs in France: Barclay handles her there in French versions, RCA in original Italo. She does summer tour here now, followed by French appearances, an Italo tv show with her manager-discoverer Teddy Reno, then records in U.S. at RCA Victor, Sept. 15-30. RCA currently pressing 40,000 Pavone platters a day at Rome plant, company reports.

Fonit-USA is pushing a new youngster, Juan Lull, via a series of U.S. and Italian-angled 45's. Kid has okay rhythm, but still needs plenty of seasoning before making the bigtime. His English is variedly slurred, but okay in genre displayed, which is mostly rock and twist. Best of lot are "You Are My Love," in which his voice has a chance to project, and "Tell Me Baby."

Liz's 'Cleo' 10%

guarantee put up by that theatre is subject to her cut.

While the $15,000,000-plus in cash advance guarantees includes advances from theatres abroad, where the pic will not open until late summer and fall, the bulk of the money reps domestic theatres where the pic will be opening in late June and July. Thus the quick dividends for the star, who already has reportedly earned in excess of $1,000,000 as salary on the film.

As the picture, one month before its preem, already ranks among the Top 10 alltime domestic grossers (estimating that in excess of $14,000,000 of the advances rep domestic dates), Miss Taylor soon—if not now—must rate close to the top of money-making stars per a single picture. (According to one unconfirmed report, the star recently turned down a $6,000,000 bid for her share of the future "Cleo" take).

Still considered champ star, re money earned from a single pic, is William Holden, whose contract on Columbia-Sam Spiegel's "Bridge on The River Kwai" gave him $250,000 against 10% of the gross. Holden's share of "Kwai's" $30,000,000 world-wide gross now comes to $3,000,000. (Since Holden's contract specified that his share be paid to him in annual installments of $50,000, it's estimated that he — or his heirs — will be benefitting for the next 60 years).

Record Club

1955, more than $1,000,000 in royalties have been paid to music publishers from records sold or given away by the club. He also indicated that Col was now testing the mail order package field as another means of spreading interest in records and music. (The mail order package operation differs from the club in that it's pitched without a restrictive commitment to buy a specific number of records, being just a single transaction).

'Thrown Out' of Mag

It was also noted by Adler that Col club advertising was "thrown out" of the Reader's Digest (circulation of close to 14,000,000) when the RD took over the handling of Victor's club operation.

The FTC has estimated that the three clubs produce 30% of all record volume (now nearing $600,000,000), with Columbia accounting for 10%.

Columbia, unlike Victor, handles records by other labels through its club. Capitol moved into the outside label area for the first time a few months ago when it took in Warner Bros. Records' soundtrack album of "Gypsy."

was scaled to $3.50, with nearly all bought well in advance.

Both shows were capacity and there were turnaways. The gross and attendance were the biggest for any show in the Auditorium since its opening in 1962. Programs, at $1, were sold out.

Western Canadian tour was arranged by Ken Kragen Productions, of San Francisco, with Charles Underhill, Regina, handling the local date, with a promotional assist by radio station CKCK.

At the Arena in Saskatoon, Saturday (4), The Limeliters had another socko date, drawing a packed house of 3,600 for an $11,000 gross. The turnout was the biggest in the Arena since Gracie Fields in the early 1950s. The advance sale was reported to be the largest in the Arena's history.

Album Reviews

the outset of each piece and toward the closings. But the Bill Barron orch puts lotsa bossa nova rhythm into what is played and the result is an effective session for the bossa buffs with lots to terp to. Tunes like "Maria" nicely retain some of the flavor of the original for an effective coupling of jazz and the scoring. Although several others aren't as solid from the standpoint of lending new interpretation to the original, the arrangements will surely please the bossa nova contingent.

CLEBANOFF & HIS ORCH: "TODAY'S BEST HITS" (Mercury). The lush sound of the Clebanoff orch essays a set of pop tunes with strong, full style. As a special added attraction, the lyrics are all included on the inner sleeve, thereby enabling the listener to sing along if he so desires. There is no vocal accompaniment on the disk. The LP is also a good bet for programmers because of the stylish and effective arrangements. Included are "Follow the Boys," "Don't Set Me Free," "Days of Wine and Roses," "All I Have to Do Is Dream," "Pipeline," "Love For Sale" and others, some of which rock pretty good.

JOHN CACAVAS ORCH: "SOUND SPECTRUM FOR ORCHESTRA" (Marbel). This is an unusual package in that it was produced by the Bourne publishing firm to showcase a dozen of its copyrights in a rich orch setting. (The package will be sold commercially in music stores like G. Schirmer.) Cacavas, a Bourne staffer, who also arranged the repertoire with Chuck Causey and Willie Schaffer, conducts a big orch made of some of 800's top sidemen on some lively and imaginative interpretations of such standards as "Some Day My Prince Will Come," "Love Letters In The Sand," "One Night Of Love" and "Them There Eyes." Even Jimmy Durante's "Inka Dinka Doo" gets the kind of new treatment that will attract programming time.

MARTY BRONSON: "TO MY SOMEBODY" (Norman). This is the debut platter for Marty Bronson, a St. Louis crooner who has his own club in that city. Possessed of a rich voice and smooth style, Bronson herein essays a set of pop faves including "Days of Wine and Roses," "Fly Me to the Moon," "My Coloring Book" and some standards. A savvy singer, Bronson puts his baritone to good use without going to excess. He sticks mostly to a ballad groove on this outing and the result is a strongly romantic package which has been nicely arranged and conducted by Frank Harris. Session makes for pleasant listening and could pave the way for bigger wax work for the crooner.

JUAN SERRANO: "FLAMENCO FENOMENO" (Elektra). Flamenco guitarist Juan Serrano again displays his blazing style in this session, his second for Elektra. Possessed of great dexterity and exciting skills, the Spanish guitarist plays with strong emotional vitality that makes each tune sparkle. He's one of the crack practitioners of the flamenco art working today and his LPs are a solid testament to his fine technical skill and virtuosity. This latest is well-produced, and demonstrates with clarity the art of flamenco guitaring a la Serrano.

THE RAFTSMEN: "THIS LAND IS YOUR LAND" (RCA Camden). From Camden comes the sound of the Raftsmen who are nicely presented in this LP. Although they don't offer much in the way of new sounds in the pop-folk idiom, the group does create an excitement and verve with their repertoire that scores effectively. Most of the tunes are familiar to folkniks, and the close-harmony of the Raftsmen deliver them in solid fashion. Included are the title tune, "Shenandoah," "Eating Goober Peas," "Red River Valley," "Last Night I Had the Strangest Dream" and more.

Peak Convention Month Hypos, A.C. Cafes, Inns

Atlantic City, N.J., May 14.

Some 25 conventions were in the resort last week, and the city is experiencing the best convention month in its history. All of which adds up to near capacity business for the top hotels and motels here, plus the same thing for the nightclubs.

At the big 500 Club, comic Harry Shafran heads bill supported by Patti Holland and Barbara Roman backed by Johnny Civera's orch. Joey Stevens is emcee. LeBistro has "Peepholes of Paris" revue featuring Don Phillips, Yvonda, Blondell Cooper, Adrienne Lynn, and Vickie Diaz; Mateoh headlines Dee Dee Sharp.

OVERDOING INTIMERY CYCLE?

Am. Chicle Reprising 'Medicine Show' To Plug Its Gum in Teenage Market

A travelling show geared to teenagers is being tried by American Chicle Co. on behalf of its Dentyne Gum. Package, tagged "Dentyne Caravan," and assembled by Stan Scottland of General Artists Corp. for the Ted Bates Agency, will play for those with $1 worth of Dentyne wrappers with no tickets sold for the events. If successful, the plan may be extended inasmuch as it's part of a $700,000 campaign budget set up by Bates.

The package will have disk talent including Bobby Vinton, Freddie Cannon, Chiffons, Diane Warwick, Buddy Greenough & The Counts and Kenny Chandler. The initial dates will be played in New England and adjacent territory with opener set for June 3 at the Arena, New Haven; RPI Field House, Troy, N. Y., June 4; Paramount Theatre, Springfield, June 5; Memorial Auditorium, Providence, June 6; Memorial Aud, Worcester, June 7, and the Boston Garden, June 8. They'll do two shows in each city.

The promotion is reminiscent of the shows set up by Hadacol, a potent medicine, and various supermarket chains in the southwest, in which tickets were obtainable through purchases of products and from stipulated amounts of cash register receipts. In most campaigns, the results were achieved. However, in many cases costs became too high for continuation of the program.

The free-show idea is one of the oldest in show biz, having its genesis with the old medicine shows. However, they enticed tremendous names for a time. Hadacol, for example, had Bob Hope playing its concerts. But "Dentyne Caravan" is geared for the teenage and younger set. Consequently, the low amount of wrappers needed for admission. Under ordinary touring circumstances, a similar show would be linked to an admission price which would be higher than the total to be spent on gum. Radio deejays and newspaper advertising are slated to bally "Caravan."

It's anticipated that Dentyne sales prior to and after the show will be studied before more similar layouts are set by Bates.

Kenn Brodziak, Aussie Promoter, Eyes Talent Deals on Global Trip

Melbourne, May 14.

Aussie impresario Kenn Brodziak arrives in New York May 20 on the first leg of a three-prong talent looksee. Brodziak, managing director of Astec Services, hopes to sign some names for Down Under presentation and also acquire rights to certain shows.

After three weeks in New York, Brodziak is scheduled for a four-week London stay, then goes to Rome, Hong Kong and winds up his trek with three weeks in Manila.

While overseas he'll wrap up negotiations with Joyce Grenfell who starts her Aussie season in Sydney Aug. 2, being presented in association with J. C. Williamson Theatres Ltd. and the Phillip Theatre. He will also finalize new Aussie tour of Cliff Richards & the Shadows and hopes to sign Kenny Ball and his Jazzmen for another Aussie tour.

In England, Brodziak will look for a Guards' Band to go Down Under as one of his biggest successes was with the Irish Guards Band in 1957. His Manila stopoff is in connection with a deal for 65 singers, dancers and musicians of the Bamboo Philippines Band who will open their Aussie tour next March as a feature of the Adelaide Festival.

OFF-B'WAY'S MAGIC SHOW

A magic show, "Jadu," has been carded for the Astor Place Playhouse, N.Y., starting next Wednesday (22), with Peter Pit and Kuda Bux. Margo Eden will be producer of this off-Broadway opus.

Show will operate with a $3.50 top.

Hospitalized Nelson Eddy Cancels Mass. Cafe Date

Framingham, Mass., May 14.

Nelson Eddy was hospitalized Thursday (9) with a pulmonary congestion and his engagement at the Monticello here was cancelled. Eddy and Gale Sherwood had opened Monday (6) for a week stand through Saturday (11). Lillian Briggs was flown in to substitute for the ailing singer.

Eddy, whose condition was reported as "comfortable" yesterday (Monday) at Framingham Union Hospital, is suffering from the pulmonary congestion caused by a virus infection, officials at the hospital said.

Merm's $190,000 Guarantee for 6 Strawhat Weeks

Ethel Merman will make a summer theatre tour as topliner on a concert-variety type show. She has been booked for a lengthy tour by General Artists Corp. to open June 4 at the Melody Fair, North Tonawanda, N.Y. for a week. Guarantees will total $190,000 against 60% of the gate.

This is the first such jaunt essayed by Miss Merman. Prior to last year she confined her work to films, musicals and television. She first expanded her horizons with her nitery bow at the Flamingo, Las Vegas, last October.

Miss Merman is also set for the Carousel, Framingham, Mass., June 10; Carter Barron, Amphitheatre, Washington, June 17; Colonie Summer Theatre, Latham, N.Y.; June 24; Schenley Aud, Atlanta, July 8, and the Starlight, Indianapolis, July 18. Several other dates may be booked.

Acts signed to work with Miss Merman are Davis & Reese, Sonny & Claire, Elkins Sisters and The Wanderers. Emil Newman will be the conductor for the 10-piece orch which is mandatory in all situations. Miss Merman will carry a first trumpeter, pianist and drummer. She'll do one show nightly, with only two exceptions in Latham and No. Tonawanda, where a six-day policy prevails, and will do a Saturday matinee there as well.

Show was booked by her personal manager, Milton Pickman, in conjunction with General Artists Corp.

Sues N.Y. License Comr. For $3-Mil. in Ball Denial

Presssagent Richard Mardus has filed a $3,000,000 damage suit in N.Y. Supreme Court against New York City License Commissioner Bernard J. O'Connell because he refused to issue a permit for a costume ball which had been set for the Hotel Astor, N.Y., grand ballroom Dec. 1, 1962.

Mardus, who was promoter of the ball, claimed that he was hurt financially as well as reputation-wise by the Commissioner's action. He charged that the application for a permit was refused after many tickets had been sold and after wide publicity had been given the event.

CRANIAL REVUES SLIPPING AT B.O.

The intimate cafe revue has passed its peak in New York although its growth potential in other cities is still to be measured, according to talent agency spokesmen. All agree that this type entertainment originally had a limited audience, and the surge of revues that went on the New York boards reached a saturation point to the extent that only the top shows are surviving.

The situation has been aggravated by the scarcity of material and the number of writers willing to take the lesser coin of the cafe revue to most other forms of writing. One of the plus aspects has been the calibre of performer attracted to these shows. Most have legit musical aspirations and have been willing to work at the stipulated scales in order to get the experience.

Of course, the most marked success in the field has been Julius Monk, whose "Plaza 9" at the Plaza Hotel has been having consistently good business since it opened last October. It's likely to remain all summer, when most of the other shows of this type will be shuttering. Last week, Monk opened his Chi show, "Straws & Pros," and indications are that it will be successful.

Second City's Click

Another marked success in the Second City companies in both New York and Chicago, and the "New Show at the Premises," with the "Graham Crackers" at the Upstairs at the Downstairs doing okay business. Another show catching on is "New York Coloring Book" at Cafe Society, which may have to find other quarters because of booking problems.

The situation at the Hotel Astor became rather interesting when

Bruce Booked Solid In Court; 3d Appearance On Narcotics Arrest

Hollywood, May 14.

Testimony started today (Tues.) before a jury in Superior Court here in the trial of Lenny Bruce who was arrested last Oct. 5 on the charge of possessing narcotics. This hearing marks his third appearance before the local bench within a week.

Last Friday (10) fugitive proceedings against Bruce were dismissed in Municipal Court when Judge Maurice T. Leader learned that the comic had posted $2,500 appeal bond in a Chicago obscenity case. He had been convicted in absentia on a charge of having performed a lewd show. Bruce was given a year's sentence and fined $1,000. Judge Leader proceeded on a warrant for Bruce's extradition sent here from Chicago.

A previous charge against Bruce for possession of narcotics was dismissed by Superior Judge Alfred P. Peracca last Thursday (9). Suit stemmed from his arrest last Feb. 22 in a taxicab while returning to his home from the airport. Bench ruled that officers were conducting an illegal search when the halted comic's cab and searched it.

Mpls. 'Buttons' Bruce

Minneapolis, May 14.

A "Hands Off Lenny Bruce" nationwide movement has been started here with the comedian's fans asked to buy and wear buttons calling for such abstention by the authorities. A button costs 10c. Campaign has the support of morning Tribune amusements columnist Will Jones.

Jones led off one of his columns, captioned "Lenny's All Buttoned Up," publicizing what he called a "not-very-much-profit venture" which, he announced, has been started "by campus types." The dime charged for the button, he explained, "covers the costs of corresponding with people in other parts of the country in order to generate a more general protest and support for Bruce."

Tooters, Acts Back in Mpls. Niteries After 2-Nite Walkout Over Pay Pact

Minneapolis, May 14.

After being absent for two nights, union musicians and floor shows are back in some half-dozen local niteries, where they vanished when the tooters walked out and the American Guild of Variety Artists prohibited appearance of its member performers.

Both sides—the musicians' union and the bistro owners — have agreed to negotiate a contract dispute now mainly involving the instrumentalists' demand for a 50c per hour wage boost. Present dickerings followed a threat by some of the spots' owners that they'd substitute recorded music for the live article if the musicians failed to appear.

Augie Rainer, owner of one of the principal cafes, where entertainment is provided by three or more exotic dancers and three union musicians are employed, charges that the union initially refused to negotiate and called out its members when the spots refused to accede to its demands.

The union musicians, however, were permitted to continue at swank supper clubs like the Hotel Radisson Flame Room where the pay is higher than scale, according to Rainer. But such nightclubs will have to accede finally to whatever terms are agreed upon.

When the union musicians departed, AGVA here immediately called out its member performers, refusing to permit them to be accompanied by non-union instrumentalists or by recorded music, avers Rainer. And now, he says, AGVA is insisting that the performers be paid for the two days they were absent.

"I was told my terpers could have danced without music," says Rainer. "That, of course, would have been ridiculous."

The union musicians' present scale is $4.20 per hour for leaders and $3.76 for sidemen "many of

Line Renaud's Marathon Paris Casino Show Ends

Paris, May 14.

Line Renaud has wound her 1,320th show as part of her marathon performance as star of "Plaisirs," the Casino De Paris revue. The singer broke all records at this house during the show's four years. New show, starring singer Mick Micheyl, bows this week.

Miss Renaud learned to dance for her heavy role of over 13 appearances in the Casino entry. She now goes to Italy for a tv show, then tours Denmark, and West Germany. A French tv program follows. Also scheduled is a month break in Italy of her vest pocket version of the Casino show. It later will hit the Dunes, in Las Vegas, for a three-month stay, with possible options.

Ice-Capades' To Metromedia In $5,000,000 Deal

Sale of "Ice-Capades" to Metromedia Inc. was finalized this week for a price said to be more than $5,000,000. The purchase includes 100% of the stock of "Ice-Capades," International Ice Attractions Inc. and the Lone Palm Realty Corp. Latter firm owns "Ice Capades" building in Hollywood.

John H. Harris, one of the major "Ice-Capades" stockholders and who was the show's producer, has agreed to stay on for the new production. Most of the remainder of the show's stock was owned by a group of arena operators who played the blades display annually.

"Ice-Capades" has been on the market for several years. Last year, General Artists Corp. was negotiating for the company, but deal fell through. Metromedia's buy comprises two shows of which "Ice-Capades" is the major item, other was "Ice-Capades International," a second company which tours a different territory.

Metromedia, of which John W. Kluge is president, owns and operates radio and television stations including WNEW and WNEW-TV, N.Y. It's the first production property acquired by Metromedia.

Big Coast Stake

Hollywood, May 14.

With the sale of "Ice-Capades" for $5,000,000 to Metromedia finalized this week by John H. Harris, proxy and heaviest stockholder in the rink show, as expected, John Kluge, head of Metromedia, now has a vast stake in Southern California.

His company paid over $10,000,000 for KTTV, subject to FCC approval; over $5,000,000 for KLAC, also awaiting commission okay. Metromedia recently acquired the outdoor advertising company of Foster & Kleiser. Additionally, Kluge bought the Frank Sinatra home in Beverly Hills and the "Ice-Capades" sale would include a company home in Palm Springs.

As room currently shapes up, season opens with Xavier Cugat & Abbe Lane, Sept. 11, to be followed by Barbra Streisand Oct. 9. There is an open period believed to be set aside if a deal with Robert Goulet jells. Kaye Ballard is tapped for Nov. 27, Leslie Uggams, Dec. 18, Miss Prowse, Jan. 18, and Dorothy Loudon, Feb. 5.

Mpls. Nitery Turns To Bikini Fashion Show As B.O. Building Gimmick

Minneapolis, May 14.

The White House nitery has come up with something novel locally in the way of a supper club fashion show—one that's proving exceedingly popular with the masculine sex. Entirely different from the usual garment displays that some nightclubs and hotels here present as often as once a week, this is a bikini fashion show with glamorous models parading in the scanties.

White House owner Irv Schectman is having a French designer supply the bikinis from Paris. Other beach fashions being modeled during the show were picked up by him in California and elsewhere, he says.

This "production," new here, is in line with a local nitery trend toward additional sex appeal accent by the swankier establishments that dislike such extremes as strip teasing and other exotic dancing. These spots recently started showing off lovelier waitresses and hat check gals in more revealing attire.

It's the male sex, of course, who do most nitery spending and all this is directed at them. Bonifaces are hoping it'll help them to combat adverse biz effects from new income tax expense account regulations and increasingly damaging big league sports competish.

5th Link in Gaslight Club Chain Bows In L.A.; 5,000 Members at $100 Per

Los Angeles, May 14.

Gaslight Club, fifth edition in Burton Browne's skein which includes establishments in New York, Chicago, Washington and Paris, opened here Thursday (9) with some 5,000 paid-up members at $100 a throw, according to Mark Bronkovich, exec veepee-general manager of Gaslight Clubs Inc. This, with $10 yearly dues, augurs a good start for the plushily-decorated nostalgic bistro located on site of the former Millionaires' Club on La Cienega Blvd. (Restaurant Row), which had to shutter because of not enough scratch.

Basic change in new spot has been addition of the atmospheric decor that spells the "gaslight" era of turn of century. Admission, by key only, is via a foyer notable mainly for a 3,000-pound crystal chandelier which formerly decorated Loew's 86th St. Theatre in N. Y., and a rather overwhelming assortment of nude paintings—a heady prelude to the crystal and red velvet which have been applied lavishly throughout.

Most of the managerial staff has been brought in from other cities—Ernest Baumann, the chef, is from the Four Seasons; John, the maitre d', is a former Sardi's West staffer who also had his own restaurant in N. Y., the Cafe Continental; Fred Cappelleri, asst. mgr., was brought in from the Paris club (which has 2,200 French members).

There are no cash transactions. All members sign tabs and billing is handled for spot by the Diners Club. Drinks, whether beer, champagne, or 40-year-old brandy, are $1.50 each. Bars are open from 11 a.m.-two a.m. dining from noon until 11 p.m. A staff of 120 will be able to handle a maximum of 600-700 members with ease, Bronkovich said.

The 50 Gaslight Girls, who'll double as hostesses, waitresses and entertainers, were handpicked by Belinda Browne, 21-year-old daughter of owner-founder, who also designed costumes girls will wear—basically brief but erotely trimmed. They were trained by veteran "girls" brought in from the other clubs—three from Chicago, one each from N. Y. and Paris.

Partitions on rooms run from heavily draped, subdued dining room to flagstone-tabled, dirndled "Tavern"; decorated "Speakeasy Room" entered via audio-shaped door. Entertainment, in keeping with "gaslight" atmosphere, includes barrelhouse pianos in most of the rooms and bars, with a combo, headed by musical director Freddy Auma, on top in "Speakeasy." Bobbie Auma, who plays clarinet, trumpet and sax, group includes Bill Campbell on piano and Buddy Tillman on banjo.

First Gaslight Club was started in Chicago in 1960 by ad-man Burton Browne, who added similar versions in N. Y. (1962), Washington ('66) and Paris ('67). Next locations being contemplated are London and Frisco.

N.Y. Court Ruling May Lock Out All Key Club Setups

Opportunities to operate a key club in New York State in the original sense of the word appear to be dwindling following a decision last week by the Appellate Division of the N.Y. Supreme Court which turned down a plea by the Gaslight Club to limit attendance to purchasers of keys only.

The State Liquor Authority had held that the Gaslight, which was founded as part of a chain operated by Chicago adman Burton L. Browne, did not come under the purview of the Membership Corporations Law and Benevolent Orders Law that prohibits organizations from making a profit from sales of alcoholic beverages.

The situation was also complicated by a stipulation made by Browne that he and his "other entities" would repay $200,000 that the N.Y. Gaslight Club had given him. Agreement was made when it received its 1969 license. However, the court found that less than half had been repaid. But meanwhile, Browne had been retained by the Gaslight at $25,000 annually pending SLA approval.

The Gaslight was originally given a membership club license that since has been revoked. Another link in a key club chain, the N.Y. Playboy was awarded a liquor license which forced it to serve all-comers. However, while the Playboy has abandoned its quest to get a membership club license, it is slated to go into N.Y. Supreme Court today (Wed.) to seek the right to impose a $25 key charge to those it serves, and restrict service to those who have purchased a key.

It's believed that this is the last argument to be settled before the issue is resolved. The Playboy is also attempting to get a cabaret license from New York City. It was originally turned down by License Commissioner Bernard J. O'Connell, who was reversed in N.Y. Supreme Court but upheld in the Appellate Division. Playboy is now going to the Court of Appeals for a final adjudication.

Nonprofit Org Reopening Seattle Fair Site June 15 on 5-Yr. Lease From City

By DON REED

Seattle, May 14.

The Seattle World's Fair site will be reopened about June 15 by Century 21 Center Inc. for a summer season to run until Labor Day, with nonprofit corporation set to operate and promote the civic centre continuously on a five-year lease with the City of Seattle.

Many of the attractions that made the 1962 World's Fair a success are still around, including the Space Needle, Federal Science pavilion, now the Pacific Science Center, and the Food Circus, plus a new amusement centre with 14 rides, all refurbished and newly landscaped.

There's strong emphasis on the show business aspect of the Center for the summer season, with the Steve Allen show set to open the season with two shows in the Opera House, June 1-2. It will be preceded by a Seattle Symphony production of "La Traviata", with Mary Costa, John Alexander and Ronald Bolton singing leading roles. Lois Hunter as choreographer, Glynn Ross stage director and Milton Katims, Symphony conductor and artistic director.

Stuart Vaughn, director of the Center's projected repertory theatre, is now forming a company and setting plays for a 32-week season to begin in October. His assistant, Andre Gregory, is currently in Europe, negotiating with playwright Max Frisch for a production of "The Firebugs". Vaughn has also made arrangements with playwright Robert Ardrey for his "Shadow of Heroes" for next season. This will be one of three plays Vaughn will direct.

The promotion and operating organization for the site, Century 21 Center Inc., will run the civic centre as a combined theatrical-amusement-cultural complex, designed to approach the versatility and appeal of Copenhagen's Tivoli Gardens, with some purely Pacific Northwest innovations.

Ewen C. Dingwall, managing director of the 1962 World's Fair, is executive director of C 21 Center, and many of those who worked with him before and during the Fair are in the new organization.

Deal with the City looks to self-sustaining year around operation of the Center, with an investment of $2,500,000. One quarter—$600,000—of this will be loaned to the Pacific Science Center Foundation, to be repaid over a period of five years from admission receipts. The remaining $1,900,000 will be used to provide working capital for operations, promotions and for equipping the amusement area and improvements.

The C 21 lease covers all land, buildings and facilities at the World's Fair site except the Opera House, Playhouse, Arena, Coliseum

GENE BRENNER

GENE BRENNER
Comedy
30 Mins.
Living Room, N.Y.

Gene Brenner is a fresh, young comedian who presents an array of stories, gags, one-liners and such in a pleasant and hip manner that captures audience attention and holds it. His material has a topical air and he seems to enjoy talking about his subjects, a factor that gives his turn a magnetic flavor for ringsiders.

Caught at the Living Room, N.Y., a small, cozy eastside nitery, Brenner was particularly handicapped the night caught in that he was the first act of the first show and there were very few people in the room as yet. Nonetheless, he managed to get off a slick and effective turn, catching and holding the attention of those present, at first by a series of ad lib and planned bits working with the group and then lapsing into his more formal routine.

His subject matter covers Kennedy, Nixon, astronauts, a bit about the effect of "The Untouchables" on the nation's Italian population, and other items. He does a Kennedy impersonation, giving a plug to Vaughn Meader, although he was doing the bit and even had a parody platter in this groove on the market long before the Meader click. That material is sharp and sure, and Brenner delivers it in a manner that puts the barbs across effectively while keeping the sting on a friendly level.

He scores particularly well in the atmosphere of a small interior like the Living Room where he builds a fast rapport with his audience. A sharp young hipster, Brenner should do well on the comedic trail. Kalt.

Pitch to Reassemble Richman-Sophie-Joe E. For Concord Weekender

An attempt is being made to revive one of the top-name combinations of the 1940s. Bill comprising Harry Richman, Sophie Tucker and Joe E. Lewis (billed in that order in that era) is being sought to play the Concord Hotel, Kiamesha Lake, N.Y., for the Labor Day weekend, by house booker Phil Greenwald.

This layout, completed by the Chandra-Kaly Dancers (now out of the business), was originally gotten together by the late Paul Small, then of the William Morris Agency, for the now defunct Riviera, Ft. Lee, N.J., owned by Ben Marden. It played later in the year at Loew's State, N.Y., and then went to Florida to the Colonial Inn, Hallandale.

In those days, the whole package of the three toppers cost $7,500 for the week. What it will cost today, isn't known. In order to get the bill together, Richman will come out of retirement. It's understood that Miss Tucker and Lewis are willing. In Lewis' case, he opens Sept. 12 at the Copacabana, N.Y. Again, the William Morris Agency is in charge of assembling the package.

Forrest Tucker Marks 1st Cafe Stint in 30 Yrs. With Chi 'Music Man' Act

Forrest Tucker marks his first nitery date in 30 years when he bows May 20 at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chi, in "A Salute to 'The Music Man'" which also marks a first in that it's not a tabloidization of that legit musical, in which he played the role on the road. Nor is it a "salute" to composer Meredith Willson. It's geared chiefly as a salve to the show.

Marilyn Fisk (Mrs. Tucker) will be part of the act; this is her cafe debut. A mixed group of 10 (five boy, five femme song & dancers), supplied by the hotel, will backstop Tucker.

Willson, composer-author of "Music Man," has given Tucker permission "in perpetuity" to do the "Trouble" number from the show. In addition, Tucker will sing another excerpt from "Music Man" but, in a second-half portion of "Salute to 'Music Man'," he'll do his own song-and-dance specialty.

He may tape the vehicle onto the Ed Sullivan tv show and, possibly also, into New York's Persian Room. Later Tucker plans touring the strawhats with "Gypsy." William Morris agenting.

A $5,000,000 Disneyland-type amusement park covering 177 acres will be erected northeast of Valley City in Medina and Lorain counties by Stephen Holda, owner of Holda Construction Co. He expects major portion of the park to be open in the summer of 1964.

Park will feature an Enchanted Forrest, Yukon Territory, Western Town, Animal Kingdom.

Minstrels and White 'Condescension'

Editor, VARIETY:

In a recent issue you had an article about the NAACP picketing a minstrel and I quote especially this statement: "Minstrels have long been poison to colored citizens . . ."

In line of this, would it not follow that southerners might picket Tennessee Williams' plays because many of them show offensive elements of southern life, po' white trash, etc.; or that New Yorkers could even picket a Damon Runyon play because it shows New York to contain gangsters, thieves, pimps, whores (tho with hearts of gold) and other underworld characters, altho these people are portrayed in fun and entertaining ways—much like the minstrels in this aspect? How absurd such picketing would be!

I suggest to the NAACP that they concern themselves with the real racial issues.

All of this is above the fact that, in a free society, the stage is free ground as are newspapers, the artist's canvas, and a man's speech.

James N. Connor

In re Stereotypes

Reader Connor ignores the invidious elements in racial stereotyping. A stereotype, as commonly interpreted by sociologists, takes off from a truth, such as Negroes singing, dancing and playing the banjo on the levees, and proceeds to institutionalize the inferiority status by adding jokes of white origin and delivered by white men under cork. The thing which Negroes have long come to dislike about minstrel shows (the dislike predates the NAACP) is that the Negro is always made to look shiftless, ignorant, incurably menial.

It is true that a whole series of racial and minority groups have had to fight for status in America. The Irish, the Germans, the Italians, the Jews, the Puerto Ricans, each in their separate waves of immigration, have been the butt of fairly savage humor. Perhaps this sort of thing cannot be stopped but it need not be admired. The point about racial hatred, as Hitler conclusively demonstrated, is that propaganda translates into hideous action.—Ed.

Jerry Lewis, Alan King, Connie Francis Rep U.S. in Scotland's 2d Royal Show

By GORDON IRVING

Glasgow, May 14.

Jerry Lewis, Alan King and Connie Francis have been invited to entertain Britain's Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip at Scotland's second Royal Performance at the Alhambra Theatre here July 1. They will plane from the U.S. for the event, which ends Auld Lang Syne show biz charities.

All three artists have accepted, and will plane to Glasgow at day previous for two days of rehearsals for this top show, for which tickets will sell at as much as $[illegible], top donation price.

Show, to be devised and staged by Dick Hurran, mounter of the current "Five-Past Eight" revue layout at the Alhambra, with Max Bygraves, British comedian starring, will be presented in the glittery Starlight Room setting of the existing show. The colorful State Trumpeters of Her Majesty's Life Guards will take part, giving a welcome to the Royal party.

Connie Francis will bring her own pianist and musical director, while Jerry Lewis will also be accompanied by his manager and party. It's a return trip for comedian Alan King, who was a click in the [illegible] Royal Performance at the same plush Howard & Wyndham theatre.

British artists who have accepted invites to participate include Max Bygraves, his 16-year-old son Anthony, chirpers Shirley Bassey and Yana, Mr. Acker Bilk & his Jazzband, singer David Hughes, comedian Bob Monkhouse, deejay David Jacobs, ventriloquist Dennis Spicer, The Springfields, acrobatic Fay Lenore, the Croft Twins, Tiller Girls (16) and the George Mitchell Singers.

Another U. S. act for the Royal event is the "Excess Baggage" [illegible] act of Alma Michaels and daughter Judy. The three Reddi Dancers, French adagio trio, and the foot-balancing Borranton Sisters, now at the Tower Circus, Blackpool, Eng., complete the specialties.

Local Scot comics invited are Jimmy Logan (currently acting a straight part in "Rob Roy" at Lyceum (Edinburgh), Jack Radcliffe, Lex McLean, Larry Marshall, Johnnie Beattie, Jack Milroy, Rikki Fulton, Gracie Clark & Colin Murray, and Andy Stewart. As of presstime, the only acceptance is from Johnnie Beattie, but the rest are likely to be forthcoming as performers get the okay from their engagements on July 1.

Kenneth McKellar, leading Scot tenor, is also participating. Showbacking will be by the Geraldo Concert Orch.

"This is not a Royal Variety Show," Dick Hurran, who is producing, told VARIETY. "It is simply a special Royal Performance of our 'Five-Past Eight at the Starlight Room' revue, with guest artists from Britain, Europe and America."

Connie Francis is likely to be presented, along with Acker Bilk and The Springfields, in a sort of [illegible] by BBC [illegible] Jacobs. Time to be allocated to the various performers won't be known until starting time is okayed by the Royal Family.

"This is something we have the least of in any Royal Performance," said Alex Frutin, local theatre owner, who is chairman of the organizing committee.

Oscar Marienthal Estate Tops 600G

Chicago, May 14.

Some 1,200 relatives, friends, restaurateurs and showbusiness turned out for the funeral last week of Oscar Marienthal, most successful post-World War II nitery operator in Chi. He was considered the prime mover in Chi in changing the nitery-going pattern away from the Gold Coast big spenders and corporate execs and to the suburban couples and traveling salesmen.

One source lists the gross annual income from enterprises owned by Oscar Marienthal and his brother George at between $2,[illegible] and $2,[illegible], with a net annual profit before taxes between $[illegible] and $[illegible]. Oscar Marienthal's estate was estimated at over $[illegible] in a will entered into probate by his attorney last week. The will sets up two trusts, with the income from one going to his wife, and the income from a second to go to his daughter and two sons.

The Marienthal brothers are believed to have been sole owners of the London House (steak & modern jazz), Mister Kelly's (steak, avante-garde comics & singers), and Brief Encounter (restaurant), and to have had co-investors in the Happy Medium, a cabaret theatre built at a claimed cost of $[illegible] in 1960.

George Marienthal, an accountant before he went into the nitery biz with his brother, will take over the reins of the cafe empire. Oscar set down a few days before he died of a heart attack on May 6 and worked out bookings for the London House and Mister Kelly's until the middle of September.

Talent agents generally concur that Oscar Marienthal had a "genius" for picking and developing talent. "Where some nightclub owners would take a one-shot chance on an act," one agent relates, "you could tell how successful one of Oscar's discoveries was going to be by the number of options he had on the act. He had an intuition about talent that turned him toward the successful acts like a compass points toward the North Pole."

Mister Kelly's and the Happy Medium are the two most active spots on Rush St., a play area that has seen better days and is receiving hot competition from a rash of folk intimeries in the Old Town area along Wells, North, and Sedgwick streets.

New Orleans Widens Battle On Strip Spots With Raids, Legislation

New Orleans, May 14.

As police renewed their crackdown on French Quarter strip joints, two ordinances requested by Mayor Victor H. Schiro to bolster his administration's campaign against B-drinking and obscenity in nightclubs and bars were introduced at Thursday's (9) city council meeting.

Meanwhile, Council President James E. Fitzmorris Jr. notified his colleagues at the meeting that he would call for passage at the council's May 23 meeting an ordinance which he introduced sometime ago requiring fingerprinting and photographing of the employees of bars, nightclubs and other liquor dispensing establishments.

One of Mayor Schiro's ordinances introduced by Councilman Henry B. Curtis prohibits female entertainers or employees from sitting or mingling with patrons and spectators where striptease shows are performed.

The other ordinance is an amendment to the obscenity section of the city code which prohibits "the making of bodily movements known as bumps and grinds by any dancer while performing any act or dance in any show or place of entertainment."

Police, in cooperation with the district attorney's office, arrested scores of performers, operators and others in a series of raids earlier in the week. Spots hit were Frieda's Parisienne, the Mardi Gras Lounge, Guys and Dolls, Silver Frolics and Flamingo Club, all located on Bourbon St. Charges ranged from B-drinking, prostitution and lewd performances to having no visible means of support.

SLA Probe Nets Pers'l Mgr. Harry Steinman In 5-Count Perjury Rap

A grand jury investigation into the tangled affairs of the N.Y. State Liquor Authority resulted last week in the indictment of personal manager Harry Steinman on five counts on perjury because of conflicting statements he made to the N.Y. grand jury in connection with his part in obtaining a license for the N.Y. Playboy Club as well as other cafes.

Steinman had been given personal immunity by the grand jury so that he would testify about corruption in the SLA. He had been named as a conspirator, but not as a defendant, along with Ralph Berger, a former operator of the Latin Quarter, Chicago, in an earlier conspiracy indictment, which is said to involve bribery of a high SLA official.

The indictment alleged that Steinman lied when he said that a $12,500 check given him by Playboy Clubs International was for the placement of talent. It's claimed he later changed his story and stated that the check was a finder's fee for locating a site for the key club's N.Y. operation.

The indictment also alleged that Steinman falsely stated he received no money from Frank Jackson, owner of the Tenement, another club, which assertedly gave bribes to get a liquor license.

Another count of the indictment alleged that Steinman falsely testified he had not discussed with Berger a man who was identified as Bronnie Wynn Leamer, who at one time was an owner of The Tenement as well as other restaurants and had been a personal manager. Leamer formerly was married to singer Eileen Barton. Remaining counts are based on other allegedly untruthful portions of Steinman's testimony before the grand jury. He was released in $[illegible] bail with May 20 set as date of the pleading.

JERRY ANTES
Songs
40 Mins.
Ye Little Club, L.A.

Stepping out of the chorus line and into the nitery solo spotlight for the first time, Jerry Antes has launched a two-week engagement at Marshall Edson's cozy Beverlyn nook. The handsome 27-year-old entertainer has a lot on the ball and, though there's still some green around the edges, is a solid prospect for future prominence. Sharing the bill with Antes is songstress Lulu Porter, who holds over for another fortnight.

Antes last worked Vegas as lead singer-hoofer in Debbie Reynolds' act who helped coax him out of the background and into the front and-centre niche he now occupies. In his apparent zeal over his new-found freedom as a soloist, Antes tends to vocally overextend himself in spots and play it too cute in others, but on the whole it's an auspicious bow. He has a rich, dependable, authoritative voice, a good ear and a keen sense of phrasing.

Antes might add another romantic ballad or two to his turn. He tends to overemphasize the big dramatic rousers with the sweeping dancer-like gestures and dynamic finishes on which often he has to strain noticeably to sustain those high concluding notes. The trailed-off last note is a sign of vocal limitation that he could just as easily avoid. But these are actually minor, and probably temporary, reservations. With a little more solo experience, Antes should be able to smooth over all these little rough spots and utilize his rich raw material to great advantage. And he can dance, too.

Highlights of his turn are a rousing "Caravan" and a fine "South Pacific" medley. Among other refrains rendered are "Getting To Know You," "I Believe In You," "Call Me Irresponsible" and "Birth Of The Blues." He concludes with "Bewitched," attempting a comical approach to this standard that is ill-advised inasmuch as the sophisticated lyrics are by now too familiar to be freshly funny. Better to sing it straight, anyway.

Antes was sensitively accompanied opening night by his coach, Rudy Rendor, at the piano, and Jack Smalley on bass. Versatile Paul Suter takes over on the keyboard for the rest of the run.

LARRY MOVIS
Songs, Comedy
25 Mins.
Shamrock Hilton, Houston

Young (20) Larry Movis, formerly a member of The Mascots, singing group that received national recognition on the old Arthur Godfrey tv show, seems certain to work his way to the top as a single. Movis is personable, has satisfactory pipes and an unusual flair for comedy.

While fate stacked deck in opener, he showed composure to end with a winning hand, although he didn't have all aces. Femme third of Mattison Trio twisted knee shortly before show time, and Movis had to go on cold, sans opening act. Then the socket that holds the mike broke off stand and he was left holding the mike but improvised nicely.

Movis has good assortment of ballad and belt, and does top impressions of Rose Murphy, Armstrong and a little of Jerry Lewis. He explained he doesn't try to do political impressions a la Vaughn Meader because he spent six months learning Nixon.

Top material in his caricature of rock 'n' rollers—he does group of 8-year-olds in off-key rendition that is so close to sound of some of present young dishers it could put 'em out of business if his bit ever gets national exposure—and old-time vocalists on radio hand shows. His Irish tenor singing "Mother," while trying to spell out the letters with his body, is a show-stopper.

Radio seg plays too long and appears padded, which it may well have been because of stinging opening act. There was noticably a little nervousness, and his belting seems a little stronger than his ballading. This is excellent shake-down for young entertainer, and he's ready for some bookings as he begins his climb.

BARRY HUMPHRIES
Monologist
60 Mins.
The Establishment, London

Barry Humphries, who played the Undertaker in both the London and New York productions of the "Oliver" musical, launches a nitery entertainment in this off-beat locale under the title of "A Nice Night's Entertainment." He chances his luck for an hour, and this is certainly too long, but in other respects he shows enough wit and invention to guarantee that, given a good editor, he has a bright future in the field.

Being an Australian, his first two monologs are variations on the theme of he Empire link. Dressed in overblown female drag, Humphries snaps at British reserve, the tradition that has made us rude with finesse, and our habit of using water to drink rather than to bathe in—and the impersonation, although hampered by some musty gags, is sharp and engaging...if slightly uneasy.

Next step is to be an immigration official with Australia House in London, and thus serves to introduce some pointed comment about his own country's culture as well as the illusions that afflict British migrants. But the most potent contribution is the most original. Humphries, as an old and childless man, describes a weekend during which he and his wife looked after a couple of kids from next door. The horror of the games and disorder, the terrible prattle of the language, and the relief at the end of it all—it adds up to a memorable vignette of a kind of living, as well as being given an extra dimension of unforced pathos.

The performance is suited to this venue, but it is doubtful whether it will carry to other night-spots on the local circuit. And its success here rather depends on the customers not expecting the modish satire which is the Establishment's stock-in-trade. It may be that the sophistication of Humphries, which is genuine, is too off-beam to click immediately. For his point is about character, rather than about institutions.

THE BIG BEATS (6)
Music, Comedy
25 Mins.
Tidelands, Houston

The Beats are following another new entertainment trend: that of young (in this case 21 to 26) bands moving on the nitery and concert circuits. The boys are good, and they do have a beat. Their major fault is that they have a din of iniquity, but they are aware of excessive noise in an intimate club such as Tidelands, and they're working on it.

At this point it may be assumed that the Big Beats would play best at college concerts or lounges where combos or soft-voiced thrushes have trouble being heard, but somewhat surprisingly the older patrons greet most numbers with hefty palming. Group has variety in selections, and several try vocals with fair success, although it's unlikely any will make it as singles on pipes alone.

Group is composed of C. W. Kendall at organ, Larry Randall on sax and clarinet, Earl Miller on electric bass, Billy Mitchell on skins, Jimmy Russell on trombone and Arlin Harmon on trumpet.

They are still evolving own style, and at this time some of Al Hirt's mannerisms appear in routine. They play jazz, Dixieland, Western tunes, ballads, pops, showtunes—all with a beat.

PIERRE DUDAN
Songs, Comedy
30 Mins.
Le Hibou, Ottawa

Prestige booking for Denis Faulkner's coffee house was Pierre Dudan, w.k. Swiss-born composer, film actor and novelist currently playing Montreal clubs and appearing on CBC-TV's French network. In five days instead of the usual four, and at upped prices, he drew excellent houses. He records for Decca.

Tall, black-haired and tanned, Dudan hasn't quite the overwhelming charm of Yves Montand, but packs plenty. Capably accompanying self on piano, he varied songs with standup comedy for nearly half the stint caught and rocked the house with droll delivery and vivid pants. All songs and most comedy were in French, but his few jokes in English were perfectly intelligible (though not very new and one a home gag). En francais, he made some good-natured cracks at les anglais.

All songs were his own (out of 200 composed, he said) and included the w.k. "Clopint Clopant" with its haunting reprise; "En Automne," which he wrote for Juliette Greco but which the American expatriate Eddie Constantine sings a good deal now; and "Cafe au Lait au Lit," a wild one interlarded with cowboy yells.

One of his prettiest ballads was "The Thames is My Garden," one of the sharpest "Je Suis l'Argent" ("I Am Money"), with lines like "Even when I'm dirty I always smell good." A touching one told of a little boy's dream and a very strong one was "Etoiles s'en Foutant" ("The Stars Don't Care a Hoot"). A piquante chanson was "Mademoiselle Marie."

On this side the Atlantic, Pierre Dudan is a topnotch talent for spots that go for the Gallic, and he could doubtless sing a ballad or two in English, as Monland did on his North American tours. Within language limitations he's a natural for any medium.

PAT SUZUKI

35 Mins.
Cave, Vancouver

Miss Pat Suzuki's first appearance in Vancouver in 1957 was a simple singing engagement at the private Arctic Club, since gutted by fire. From here she returned to Seattle briefly and then soared to the rarified atmosphere of Broadway stardom in "Flower Drum Song." The legions of Miss Suzuki's local fans who nostalgically remember the "Little Miss Pony Tail" of those pre-New York days have little cause for disappointment in this break-in of her new nitery act.

The little girl with the large voice and warm projection is still the basic ingredient but Miss Suzuki has emerged as a polished performer with a varied songbook of both simple and stylized arrangements that showcase her vocal vivacity and versatility. The pony tail is also still in evidence but dressed up now in an elegantly coiffured hairdo and the simple sweater and slacks of yesterday has been replaced by a shantung coolie shirt and a dazzling white lounge suit that sparkles at every turn with its myriad of beaded drop crystals.

Miss Suzuki's performance impresses as a strong draw for the lenient of supper club showrooms. Format is beautifully flexible and designed to permit the obvious concessions made to local familiarity in this debut.

Miss Suzuki's range and capacity for vocal expression are unlimited. Whether she is belting out her up-tempo versions of songs like "Getting Married In The Morning," "Church On Time," "Cockeyed Optimist," "I Hear Music," "Lady Is A Tramp" and "This Moment On," or changing pace with more personalized and interpretive renditions.

Warren Meyers, who accompanies Miss Suzuki at the 88, conducts the Chris Gage house orch and had a hand in arrangements, rates special credit for the expert way he has staged this act to enhance Miss Suzuki's solo status. Backing by the Gage orch is sharp and crisp throughout and lighting is a strong plus.

whom have other daytime occupations," declares Ratner. He says he "actually" needs only two musicians for his exotic dancers, but the union insists on a minimum of three.

In view of the way biz has slumped since the new income tax regulation re expense deductions, the demand for the 30c an hour pay increase is "unreasonable," he insists, and some of his competitors have told him they'll eliminate their live music and floor shows entirely.

Ratner also points out that the musicians' union is a national organization and that in some cities there's no union ban on "canned" music for performers.

Robert Biglow, representing the local musicians union, said he does not think it proper to make public statements while negotiations are in progress.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

Eartha Kitt, Redd Foxx, Parkettes (8), Horace Silver Quintet, Reuben Phillips & Orch (17); "All Night Long" (Colorama).

Although the audience didn't seem too sure of it, Eartha Kitt, stepping in for a terping turn with the lively Parkettes, told an Apollo crowd, "I'm still a Harlem Girl," at show caught during her current stand at the uptown house.

Later in her headliner's spot for which she adhered mostly to a standard songalog, the singer projected the sophistication familiar to cafegoers at such showcases as the Persian Room, N.Y., where she recently appeared.

Dressed in a lush red gown, "just to show you I'm not pregnant any more," Miss Kitt handled her material in her trademark seductive tones, zeroing in on various members of the audience for some slick rendition. Perched on a stool on which she manages to wriggle into about every pose imaginable for the right effect, she puts over the fave of her set, a teaser called "Take What You Want."

Also scoring is a cool arrangement of "Mad About the Boy." Other material from the standard file didn't register as well with the crowd, however, as her stylishness and posh demeanor sometimes proved too much for the 125th St customers.

Nevertheless, Miss Kitt delivers a slick turn and her leggy dance bit with the Parkettes, twisting lithly with the group, pleases the crowd considerably. The Parkettes returned later for a solo bit of their own and display the lively acrobatics and terp trickery that has frequently brought them back to the Apollo and earned them a spot in a recent Radio City Music Hall show.

Another draw with Apollo audiences is comedian Redd Foxx who continues his tradition of providing a top turn. Mixing the blue with patter on the Southern racial problem (always a fave subject with both Apollo comedians and audiences alike) and other topics, Foxx has a consistently-winning stream of gags, oneliners and stories that rarely fail to evoke reactions.

Horace Silver and his hipster combo provide some solidly swinging jazz work this session, as the group displays both solo and ensemble stylishness and groovy work which reach and hold the crowd. Reuben Phillips works with an expanded orch this outing, complete with strings. He gets a good sound from the unit when he and the group take the spotlight.

Metropole, Glasgow

Glasgow, May 1.

Dickie Valentine, Susan Singer, Eileen Keegan, Andrew Macpherson Singers (12), Irene Campbell & Danny Regan, Sammy Shortt, Glen Daly, May Moxon Dancers (12), Arthur Roynon Orch.

Twice-nightly show at this new city vaudery features English singer Dickie Valentine in an entertaining song-and-comedy act. Headliner demonstrates his versatility with pop tunes, ballads, impressions and patter, and is sometimes more of a comedian than a singer, though many of his gags are in the corny class. He exits to good mitting.

Susan Singer, teenage pop warbler (who is a cousin of British disk star Helen Shapiro, and doesn't seem to want to forget it), winds the pre-interval segment with a songalog which shows her as a disappointing artiste, lacking in good grooming and stage personality.

Personality chirper is Eileen Keegan, an Irish thrush with lotsa attack and a happy style, who gar at the Palladium" than any other headliner, returned, scrubbed, clean, and decent, with a somewhat dubious act. He began with straightforward workouts of "S'wonderful" and "Lovers' Lane," to which no exception could be taken. He then embarked upon a coy explanation of his own desire for a boy called Mike, and his wife's persistence in giving birth to girls. This, illustrated with the appropriate ditties about Cherry, Linda, Debbie, and Laura, was an embarrassing error and repetitious. Even Boone's homely personality could not quell the nausea, and it seemed one of those ideas, good on paper, but queasy in performance. Certainly, Boone has a private life which is whiter than white, but it is more a cause of private celebration than public display.

Adele Leigh, black hair piled up like a monstrous confectionery, provided Musetta's Waltz Song from "La Boheme," which she is currently performing at Covent Garden, and Adele's Laughing Song from "Die Fledermaus." The latter item, a good showpiece for Miss Leigh's brittle and agile soprano pipes, can be a crazy bit to watch, and the contrast between the singer's elegant getup and her tuneful yocks was too much.

Intimacy Cycle

after the successful run of "The Best of Everything," producer Floyd Ackerman found it difficult to get enough top material to start another show. Instead, he arranged a reprise of some of the top hits of Broadway musicals.

But while entertaining, the revival wasn't in the genre of what the revue devotees were seeking. It folded and was replaced by an orthodox cafe show. The Encore, which had "Chicken in a Bathtub," failed to ignite and it's now closed.

Only new show in the offing is "Four Faces East," opening tomorrow (Thurs.) at the King Arthur Room of the Roundtable.

There is speculation as to the future of the cafe revue. Many feel that there is a need for the intimate revue if only as a breeding ground for new talent, whether it be writing, music or performing. It also provides experience to would-be producers and directors.

However, the agencies fear that the revue in its present state will not remain around too long. It's believed that the next step will be either name producers, of writers or performers or possibly all three and the price will zoom to the heights which will make it prohibitive in many situations.

There has been talk of bringing in talent from other fields. There also have been suggestions that material to be used later in musicals be permitted to shake down in the cafes. But these proposals have been nixed because of the material's greater potential as fresh writing in legit.

The percenters say that they are striving to stave off this eventuality for as long as possible in order that some of their promising young clients can get experience. As a matter of fact, some of the date-diggers point out that their men are taking more clients to the various intime shows than ever before on the likelihood that they will be used in a more profitable field of entertainment.

It's pointed out that the intimate cafe revue is the nitery version of the off-Broadway theatre, and the longer it's allowed to remain in the inexpensive mode, the greater the benefit to other fields. However, agency spokesmen note that off-Broadway is attracting more names from all fields. They do not know when the same situation will strike its cafe counterpart.

and mall areas surrounding the main fountain. The theatres will be operated by the City, but will be advertised and promoted by C 21 Center for 15% of the gross revenues, with a maximum of $50,000 for the first year, subject to negotiation for coming years.

The City is improving the Arena and Opera House. The Arena will get new seats in some areas, air-conditioning for summer events, installations to improve acoustics and possibly a portable stage for the south end of the building. A system of counter-weights will be installed backstage at the Opera House to allow more curtains to be used downstage, along with another column of loudspeakers along the top of the proscenium.

Some showmen are urging improvements on stage and backstage at the Playhouse to make it more usable, and this will probably be done.

Future plans call for construction of a 1,500-seat theatre at the Center to take care of shows too large for the 800-seat Playhouse and too small for the 3,100-seat Opera House.

Hotel Plaza, N. Y.

Marty Allen & Steve Rossi (with Herbert Strizik, conductor), Emil Coleman Orch, Mark Monte Continentals; $3-$4 cover.

If the Persian Room isn't careful, it may yet win a reputation as a comedians' room, especially in view of the way Marty Allen & Steve Rossi broke it up on the initial session of their fourweeker. Also in view of the top reception previously given Phil Ford & Mimi Hines, such a booking viewpoint could be possible.

As it is, the comics provide an excellent change of pace for the posh Plaza. They bring in a new viewpoint and frequently new audiences. In fact, A&R brought up many of the patrons of the Catskill's Concord, and its newcomers constituted one of the more dressed up crowds of the season.

Allen & Rossi are a radical departure for the Plaza, but the team takes it in stride. Their style is geared more to the mass trade than for the Noel Coward genre. Their trademarked greeting "Hello Dere" is reminiscent of the catchphrases used in the old vaude and burley circuits and and warmup gambit. But they have new fresh and funny material to go with this line.

Allen carries the comedic burden with a genuinely funny mien and a knowledgeable execution. The team's format is reminiscent of the early days of Martin & Lewis when Martin would go out with a batch of songs to warm up the audience and then slip into semi-retirement as foil and feed for Lewis' comedy. Rossi does virtually the same chore for Allen but his timing and assists give the team the necessary force and projection to make most of their gags round.

Their material includes lots of anything-for-a-laugh items, including a bit wherein Allen is in drag. There's a rib of folk singers, a bunny winetaster routine as well as several straight passages for change of pace. Among them are Rossi's midterm chanting, and he does well in that department.

Allen takes as his model a "Pagliacci" bit wherein a clown discovers that he's aging. Allen puts a lot of sincerity into this piece. In fact he may make a good method actor. He sheds genuine tears during this pantomime. But there are a few holes in the conception that gives less than the desired results.

Allen & Rossi have come in with a few items new to the comics such as a complete overture of musical comedy tunes preceding their act. Also extra musicians and key instrumentalists to augment the Emil Coleman Orch, plus special material tunes. Herbert Strizik is the team's conductor.

Time was when the Plaza almost felt it was going down on the social scale when anything less than Hildegarde or a French chanteuse (genuine) was the bill topper. The new management is finding the Plaza a more versatile room than previously believed. The new toppers have infused imagination and experimentation in booking the spot. And it seems that maitre d' John Fasetti is being kept busier than usual under the new scheme of things.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 8.

Red Skelton, Kuban Cossacks (3), Harry Nofal, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (10); produced & staged by Jack Entratter; choreography, Renne Stuart; stage direction, Harold Dobrow; $4 minimum.

Red Skelton, one of Jack Entratter's heavyweight attractions, is back with his classic routines, plus an abundance of fresh material. Still modestly billed as "one of America's clowns," Skelton again shows why he's at the top of the heap in that category.

The histrionics shown in Skelton's pantomime skits, and the very funny dialog in his standup routines ("My wife told me 'Being married to you is like a vacation—you were my last resort.'") keeps his act on a superb and distinctive comedy level. Again, his ability as a thesp is strongly proven when he brings tears to eyes and lumps to throats with his bowoff "Old Man Watching A Parade."

The Kuban Cossacks (3) are handsome young men, supposedly refugees from the Ukraine. Clad in typical Russian dancing garb, the trio is at its best while doing the colorful, fast native footwork. To show versatility, there is also singing in the native tongue, and instrumental offerings on guitar and accordion. Sharp editing of the singing probably would improve the turn.

A handsome holdover production number by choreographer Renne Stuart is the curtain raiser. It features the fine voice of Harry Nofal, backed by the dozen Copa lovelies.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, May 3.

Shelley Berman, Gigi Galon, John Frigo Trio; $2.50 cover.

They come to laugh at Shelley Berman's return to the bistro that moved him into the nitery bigtime, and he gave them much to laugh at, with and about. Despite four other major nitery openings on the same cold and rainy Monday eve, an ultra-responsive crowd jammed Mister Kelly's and a holdout line waited in the downpour for the second show.

Inside at the Marienthal boite, it was dry and warm and cozy as Berman created the sort of "instant intimacy" of which he is so capable. Perhaps it was because of his less-than-wild reception at the plush and spacious Empire Room in his last Chi outing, but Berman turned on a remarkable and unbeatable mixture of comedic expertise and likeable stage manner in further winning over his pre-sold audience.

It's no secret that in spite of being asked to return to the Empire Room for the same money, Berman turned down its offer to work Mister Kelly's for half the Palmer House stipend. There's little doubt that the decision is a wise one. His current three-week gig is SRO for every show, the crowds are "his people", and his response to this auditor enthusiasm is a joie-de-performance that is contagious.

With exception of one new routine and several new anecdotes and gags, Berman's material is generally unchanged. The new skit is labored (a patient with a bad memory talking to his psychiatrist on the phone), but what is different is his approach to this tale and to the rest of his monolog.

However, despite his apparent ease, Berman reacted with mounting irritation to a waiter who went around the room changing candles during the comic's act. Just when it seemed as though Berman might throw a tantrum, he grinned and said "Every time I get like this, Oscar (Marienthal) says 'Shelley, you're acting the same way you did when you worked for $250'."

Opening the show is Gigi Galon, a sepia thrush with a fine set of pipes and a wide variety of styles, some of which are not particularly suited to her. She comes off best with a direct and straightforward rendition of "Summertime" and in a breezy and bouncy version of "Mambo Italiano", and the disparateness of these tunes is a reflection of a lack of focus in her turn.

Roaring 20s, S.D.

San Diego, May 10.

Keely Smith (with pianist musical director Jeff Lewis), Jay Lee & the Princess, Johnny Adams band (12); $2 admission; no cover, no minimum.

Judging from opening night response from a packed house, Keely Smith, in her first appearance in these parts, is a solid hit, attesting to name pull here as a single. She can hammer out an uptempo song in exciting manner.

With a ballad Miss Smith conjures up an arresting mood. And she sings with the true pro's zest and showmanship. If slightly on the lengthy side, the songalog is shrewdly chosen, including a few surprises. One such is "God Bless the Child," usually identified with with Billie Holiday, sung a capella and interpreted with exquisite finesse.

Other high spots include "It's Been a Long, Long Time," of World War II vintage, sung uptempo; the Rodgers-Hart evergreen, "I Could Write a Book," and theme, "I Wish You Love." Occasionally the intonation slips, but in general it's a model performance technically. Backing by Johnny Adams is okay.

Jay Lee & the Princess are an Oriental magician-comic and his leggy fortune cookie assistant. Name could be easily changed to On Too Long.

Moulin Rouge, Paris

Paris, May 2.

Clerico Bros. & R. Bonnaud presentation of "Frou Frou," revue in two parts (13 scenes). Choreography, Doris Haug, Ruggiero Angeletti; sets & costumes, Georges Vecsia; musical direction, Rene Leroux. With Rios (3), Marco, Romano Bros. (3), Larry Griswold, Jay Kay & Co. (2), Dorise Girls (16), Dorise Dancers (6), Moulin Rouge Mannequins (8), Jeanne Vincent, Guy Severyns, Jurgen Twellmann, Isabelle, French Cancan (16), Bernhard Kastor; $8 minimum.

Moulin Rouge reopens for spring and summer tourist and provincial biz with a breezy classic revue of production numbers, interspersed with well selected and showcased acts. It winds with the inevitable, zesty can-can. Backed by those running the Lido, the cafe has picked up some of the sheen of the parent boite, though without the perfection, gloss and tempo.

Space on the raised floor is adequately utilized, costumes are good and there is a solid pacing. It should please those wanting a taste of the old Moulin Rouge, with the can-can, and those with a yen for Gay Paree bits, undraped girls and nude dancers.

Moulin-Rouge, moreover, should be a natural for bus tours and those wanting a show as well as Montmartre color. It looks to have a brisk run till the end of summer but may not be able to hold up in the fall and winter months.

Raised floor and backdrop stage and sides are well used in the various production numbers. A snow sequence with whirling snowmen, bobsledders, etc. comes on followed by a trip to Peru with the usual pat but eyefilling folk legend and terp vulgarizations.

There's also a visit with Cleopatra, with the Twist to boot, and a carnival ending with a burst of the skirt flailing, contorting, garish but vital can-can.

In these numbers, Guy Severyns and Isabelle supply okay scene setting vocals; Jurgen Twellmann and Jeanne Vincent are the supple nude dancers and the Dorise Dancers and others do acceptably by the well worn but workmanlike choreography of Doris Haug and Ruggiero Angeletti.

Acts are all of high pro status and help knit this into a show that outclasses the other Pigalle-Montmartre spots. Rios do supple, airy risley effects, while Romano Bros. sing, clown and provide dextrous acrobatics and terping for a well mitted turn.

Marco puts trays with filled glasses on long poles balanced on his chin. Then with a dagger clasped in his mouth puts a long sword on the tip, topped by a tray of drinks, to mount a ladder and contort on it and descend. It is the classiest and most sure of the numbers.

Larry Griswold adds a comic note with zany trampoline escapades. Jay Kay & Co. has a little man folding a tall partner into all sorts of contortion positions for a good filler. This revue adds up to good summer fare and should have the outsized Moulin Rouge in with both tourists and visiting hinterland French.

The Losers, L. A.

Los Angeles, April 27.

Micki Lynn, Eric Miller, Joel Jeffrey, Bobby Rosario Trio; two-drink minimum.

Micki Lynn, a vocalist on the way up, has launched a three-week stopover at this busy La Cienega nitery. For the occasion she has surrounded herself with a fresh supporting unit consisting of Joel Jeffrey, with whom she partners in song, and a driving instrumental trio. The five of them make a lot of music, and much of it is imaginative and stimulating. Sharing the bill is Eric Miller, a vocalist who accompanies himself on guitar.

Miss Lynn has the visual and vocal wherewithal to make strides on the musical scene. She comes to The Losers from a six-week date at the Flamingo in Vegas. Endowed with a reliable voice and a fairly keen sense of melodic manipulation in the jazz idiom, she scores both on her solo efforts and in vocal cahoots with Jeffrey. Latter's own fertile jazz sense enables him to work over the right tunes with style and verve and complement Miss Lynn's vocalistics when they pair up.

Considering it's their bow as a foursome, the unit functions very smoothly. What now separates Miss Lynn from a higher rung on the booking ladder is a more distinctive performing personality and a single number with which she (alone or in company with Jeffrey) can identify herself. The latter could come with a hit record, if and when.

Standout solos by Miss Lynn include "Make Someone Happy" and "Green Dolphin Street." Jeffrey's best is "Kansas City," but his fling at the melodic intricacies of "This Land Is Mine" ("Exodus"), while vocally dramatic, does not suit his style. The two score handily on such swingers as "Bye Bye Love" and "Together Wherever We Go." Backstopping are pianist Bobby Rosario, drummer Freddy Menton and bassist Jack Leighton.

Miller has a nice voice and is a good guitarist. But he lacks the performing assurance and authority to rivet attention of a conversation-prone audience such as the one at The Losers.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 9.

Joe E. Lewis, Ella Fitzgerald, Inga & Rolf, Russ Black Orch (10); presented by Morris Lansburgh; produced by Mitch DeWood; $4 minimum.

With Joe E. Lewis and Ella Fitzgerald on the same bill, Morris Lansburgh should have brisk action in the casino for the next four weeks, some of it stemming from Lewis' salary.

Lewis brings in a batch of new parodies and topical gags ("Who threw the Governor into Mrs. Murphy's chowder?") highlighted by a very funny skit about a romantic girl in the Peace Corps. While "post timing" it with the ringside Scotch, he grabs and tosses dialog ("Old soldiers never die—because the fighting is done by the young soldiers") with ease, and the party is gracefully piloted by dependable stker Austin Mack, guiding the fine Russ Black orch (10).

Miss Fitzgerald, who molds any song she sings into a work of audible art, offered 11 for first-nighters: "It's Crazy," "Cheek To Cheek," "Can't Help Loving That Man of Mine," "You're Nobody Till Somebody Loves You" and "Savoy," among others. Latter, done in her scat version, is supplemented by Roy Eldridge's trumpet for a wild, solid finish. For the singing star, in addition to Eldridge, Gus Johnson is on drums; Les Spahn, guitar; Jim Hughart, bass; and Tommy Flanagan, piano. Hugo Granata coordinates the effective lighting.

Dance team of Inga & Rolf is held over as the initial attraction.

Hotel Roosevelt, N.O.

New Orleans, May 9.

Frankie Laine, Leon Kelner Orch (11); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

The name of Frankie Laine is a potent lure for Seymour Weiss' plush nitery, and with this playback the toplined singer is again proving his worth. Laine's catalog is basically as expected. But new titles and lines are included to make it a new show, albeit the routine stays close to the types he scores with heavily.

The swinging, singing Laine works the big room to perfection and has no problems generating plenty of enthusiasm. He's a cinch to clock up a record for the spot during his two-week stand.

Laine is a perfectionist, and knows exactly what his audiences want. Brilliant arrangements spur the session into a smooth, sock turn. The affable singer has a strong rhythmic motivation and when necessary, a delicacy and subtlety in interpretation. His stylized delivery is backed by savvy showmanship embellished with just the right touches of nostalgia.

He gets the biggest hand with the oldies ("Jealousy," "Shine," "That's My Desire," "What Kind A Fool Am I," "Jezebel," "Lucky Old Sun") and the inspirational "I Believe."

For audience participation, Laine turns to his hit, "Mule Train." He also adds something new this trip. Not only is he onstage for 45 minutes to sing, but he turns quasi-comedian, racking up hefty yocks. Stirring finale is a swinging delivery of "Saints Go Marchin' In."

Leon Kelner and his musical crew give show topflight backing and keep dance floor loaded during the ankle bending sessions.

Show runs two weeks until May 22.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, May 5.

Eddie Fisher, George Kirby, Moro-Landis Singers & Dancers (15), Leighton Noble Orch (23); presented by Bob Vincent; produced by Bernie Rich and Colin Romoff; produced for Harrah's by Art Barbose.

Lake Tahoe's "tourist season" doesn't officially begin until Memorial Day, but the potent marquee lure of Eddie Fisher's name is keeping the 700-plus seat South Shore Room loaded for two shows nightly and three on Saturdays. And at times maitre d' Cliff Kehl reports it's turnaway biz. There's little doubt that his Harrah's debut will prompt return playbacks for Fisher at this mile-high swankery.

Galvanizing the room from his opener to the begoff title, "Let Me Entertain You," singer gives his all for a full 45 minutes—and he has a lot to give: authority, style, savvy, and a vocal talent heavy on the plus side. And he tops it all with expert showmanship that establishes full rapport.

Professionally matured, Fisher has selected a catalog that allows him to showcase his style in all tempi, in many moods. He's pro on 'em all, from "Stay in Your Own Back Yard," to "Havah Nagilah," to "Swanee" to "What Kind of Fool."

Backed by the full rich orchestrations flawlessly executed by the Leighton Noble Orch, under arranger Colin Romoff, Fisher also scores with a medley of Jolson titles, essayed with soul and emotion. In addition, he proves he can command full silence with the more tender things. There's some mention (a la the comedic) to his marital status, but in good taste and not overdone.

George Kirby, also new to this room, is the master of mimicry, be it of either sex. He's incisive, astonishingly accurate in his cartoons. Before hitting the impersonation stretch, he warms with "I'm a Happy Go Lucky Square," accented with a bit of terping. But from that point it's in the impreshes that he really shines—and to perfection. Sullivan, Cole, Pearl Bailey, Arthur Godfrey, Sarah Vaughn are among his greatest. And he uses each to full advantage for some clever (and often topical) material.

Kirby gets biggest mileage with his Belafonte impression, done sans coat and with shirt open. In the Belafonte tradition (and with the accent perfected), he strolls along stageside, coaxing tablers to join the act with a bit of vocal work. He also proves highly effective with his ad libs. Albeit Kirby's only on for brief stint, he scores immediately and never lets go.

Moro-Landis singers and dancers part the curtain with a production "Salute to George Gershwin" that wins much attention for both choreography and costuming.

Blackstone, Chi

Chicago, May 1.

Jan McArt, Franz Benteler Orch; $1.50-$2 cover.

This Cafe Bonaparte engagement is Jan McArt's Chi nitery debut, and she brings with her an impressive array of longhair and supper club credentials, a superb voice and stunning beauty. In addition, her act is well staged, her arrangements are first class and her patter is letter perfect.

If there is a chink in this armor of seeming perfection, it is that Miss McArt appears to have brought with her from the concert stage a sort of contrived graciousness that creates a psychological proscenium arch between her and the audience. It's like having a prima donna in the living room.

Aside from this reservation, Miss McArt delivers a whale of a show, loaded with well-trilled opera arias, smoothly handled evergreens, clever special material and even a semi-strip and terp number. She's particularly potent with the "Madame Butterfly" and "La Boheme" excerpts, and great with perennials that give full play to her rich voice, such as "Sorrento" and "You And The Night And The Music".

Also worth noting is Miss McArt's demi-peel down to a brief costume. She's a mucho shapely chick, and her strutaway with a straw hat and cane is a treat for the eyes and ears.

'Struts & Frets,' a Click Tab Revue, Preems Julius Monk's Chi Showcase

Chicago, May 9.

Julius Monk's first full-scale excursion from his Gotham nesting ground (courtesy of a group of Chi bankrollers) has the sweet smell of smash biz, a tribute to the producer's facile legerdemain in the tab revue format. Too, "Struts and Frets," a harlequinade parfait that is mostly whipped cream and sauce, is housed in a smashingly refurbished former Assyrian church, whose elegant red felt decor is well worth an ogle for the $5 minimum ($6 on weekends).

"Struts" is a melange of skits from Monk's previous shows in New York, which are consistently beguiling, plus several new sketches, the more Chi-oriented of which are unevenly diverting. However, the petit revue impresario's brilliant directional sleight-of-hand and Frank Wagner's flawless staging and choreography mold the show into a gem of this genus.

Of the newly-written numbers, two are winning frolics: "Common Marketplace" is a broad jibe at Euromart that offers the cast an opportunity to clown about with national stereotypes, and "Appian Way" is a wry discourse on Amour Romana as done by puckish June Ericson. Miss Ericson, a mischievous, albeit hefty, elf has many of the plum performing assignments and carries them off with eclat.

If the rest of the skits represents a microcosm of Monk's other shows, then it would appear that "Dime A Dozen," his current Plaza 9 offering, is the most expendable. From it Monk has culled some of the pearls of the show, including "Thor" with Charles Kimbrough as the leaping scientist, and "Cholesterol Love Song," a lament for a health food romance niftily articulated by Kimbrough's spouse, Mary Jane.

"Barry's Boys," also from "Dime," is a waggish song and dance twit of Senator Goldwater done by the male members of the cast, and "Alumnae Report" is a mildly satirical takeoff on Eastern private schools artfully delineated by Delphi Harrington. "Don't Be Absurd," a spoof of "Night of the Iguana," is occasionally mordant, but just as often is heavyhanded.

If Monk comes a cropper, it is in his labored, carpetbagging Chicago sketches, particularly "In Your Kups," a clumsy tribute that can only embarrass the Sun-Times gossip columnist it celebrates. "Chicago, Illinois" is pointless and without wit, and "Home Away From Home," a sketch on the notorious bawdy house run by the Everleigh Sisters, is saved from its simpleton lyrics by gutdeful staging.

The performances are consistently good, although the male contingent generally outshines the femmes with the exception of Miss Ericson. Of the men, Nagle Jackson would seem to warrant a few juicier roles, but Kimbrough, Skip Hinnant and Jamie Ross are also in there pitching all the time.

A special accolade goes to architect Lawrence Berkely, who has wrought a jewel of a gilded cage with his Victorian decor and framing Tivoli lights, although he might have done more in lighting the vaulted church ceiling.

The tables are minuscule, which proves to be less of a handicap than it might be the case if food were an important factor. The minimum charge will startle some Chicagoans used to smaller cover charges, but this will ease with familiarity. Mor.

Julius Monk's, Chi

"Struts and Frets," presented by Orion Productions Co. in association with the Abbey Corp.; produced and directed by Julius Monk; musical arrangements and direction, William Roy; production supervisor, Don Lamb; costumes designed by Bill Belew; staged and choreographed by Frank Wagner; with June Ericson, Delphi Harrington, Skip Hinnant, Nagle Jackson, Charles Kimbrough, Mary Jane Kimbrough, Jamie Ross and Sandy Suter; William Roy and Elman Anderson at the dual pianos, Ronald Elliston, single piano; $5 minimum weeknights, $6 weekends.

Slate Bros., L. A.

Los Angeles, May 10.

Don Rickles, Freda Payne, Sheldon Smith trio.

Don Rickles on Wednesday (8) jestingly celebrated his 37th birthday (cake presented at opening by AFP, for which he recently did a picture) by opening at the club where he first gained note. An even heftier than usual crowd mobbed the opening which, at the upped tab for the engagement, should indicate there will be money in the Slates till for the next three weeks.

Apparently, there are plenty of people who like to be insulted. Comic is always a draw, despite fact his material rarely changes. Rickles' barbed comments on physical characteristics, personality traits or just plain raw mimicry aimed at customers are essentially the same he's used in every show seen at this club. For newcomers, it may still be hilarious. For the regulars, it must be pretty tiresome listening to the roly-poly, balding, baby-faced comic on the same line of patter.

On the other hand, Rickles is probably among the fastest, strongest and hardest working comics on the boards. Delivery is hard and he sells with gusto. But, since the insults seem to be the draw, his premise of security becomes invalid with the maudlin apologies that end the set, particularly those with religious connotations or sympathetic pathos.

Making her local debut and packaged with Rickles is a new singer who looks to go far, Freda Payne has the jazz quality, perception and the vocal equipment of a Dinhaun Carroll. She belts and swings nicely on "Lot of Livin' to Do" and "Great Come and Get It Day." She also shows off equally well in balladed "Long As He Needs Me," though latter has too many gimmicks on second time around.

Singer works too hard on sell and oversylliaes in some areas, like "Nobody," but these will smooth out with more vocal and performance discipline. Less gaudy gown would better highlight Miss Payne's extremely attractive physical equipment. Dale.

Rendezvous Room, L. A.

Los Angeles, May 8.

Amru Sani, Bob Peoples & Jerry Price, Jimmy Sheldon combo (4); no cover, no minimum.

If this "showcase" maintains the calibre of talent in singers it has hit during the past few weeks, the Beverly Hilton would be wise to hold artists for longer stays. The management may be beginning to realize this as Amru Sani, Tuesday's (7) opener, was inked for two weeks from the start.

Although her name implies the exotic East and she's billed as East Indian, Miss Sani has an aura of elegance usually associated with the more sophisticated boites of New York, London and Paris. She never succumbs to the "thank you, thank you" naivete with which most newcomers betray their nervousness but, indeed, treats her audience with a hauteur that underscores her professionalism.

A velvety smooth-voiced beauty, she's the best vocalist yet offered in Fred Hayman's elegant exposure room. Opening with "I Remember You," she continues, for the most part, in this suitable "Maladie d'Amour" vein. Her overall style is quite her own. Although she sings easily in French and Italian, most of her songs are in flawlessly enunciated English.

Also opening Tuesday, Bob Peoples & Jerry Price, the spot's first comedy team, works hard to sell themselves but are betrayed by weak material. They're out of the Martin & Lewis category—People's pleasant singing voice could be given more exposure but is used only to open act and to sag up tunes for Price, a little guy with a droll pan.

Price tells his stories with the fervent self-assurance that they are being created on the spot, but they come out too familiar. Team, like most, depends too much on limp-wrist material. They're in for week, with options.

Jimmy Sheldon ably supports bill with usual assurance and provides music for dancing that, as always, keeps the floor crowded.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y.

Bob Newkirk, Peggy Lord, Gateway Trio, Al Conte Orch; $1.50-$2 cover.

The Roosevelt Grill, at one time the famed Lombardoland in New York, has latched onto a supper club policy which seems to be working well boxoffice-wise. Under the new format, and capacity, a jumping weekend puts it in the plus column. Moreover, the total cost of the entertainment isn't as high as that which prevailed during the big band era.

Yet there is a lot of dancing to the Al Conte trio (piano, bass and drums) as an interlude between acts. The Grill habitutees are therefore finding a lot of satisfaction in this policy. The major item of debate in this setup is the running time of the show, which on evening caught was still going on after two hours. Although this keeps the room occupied, it is a rather lengthy slizkreig.

The openers are the Gateway Trio, two boys and a girl equipped with bass, banjo and guitar, who sing chanties of various types. It is not a folk act nor are they balladeers in the pure sense. Their numbers are in a much wider variety, although they take in these categories. They are a commercial turn and fill the bill admirably here.

Peggy Lord is an attractive blonde comedienne, who does fairly well here, although smaller rooms would be more in her metier. Some of her lines are clever, she does well in the song department and holds attention with a tune assortment that includes a medley of the '20s. There is one change of costume during her act, she takes off the long skirt for the fringe benefits of the Charleston era costume. The crowd liked her.

Completing the show is Bob Newkirk a likeable singer from the Don McNeill radio show. He has a pleasant singing demeanor and a choice line of small talk to ingratiate him with the customers. He still needs experience in the cafe dept. inasmuch as the present turn lacks a climax. Once he got into singing customers' requests, he just didn't know how to get off. It's to be assumed that he ultimately did. Jose.

Inquisition, Vancouver

Vancouver, B.C., May 2.

Greco & Willard, Tom Hawken; $2 admission.

Head inquisitor Howie Bateman has come up with a sharp change of pace in his booking of the fresh comedy team of Vic Greco and Fred Willard that should offset a series of financially unrewarding flirtations with hip jazz, Canadian satire and folklore a la the groovy Miles Davis Quintet, impressionist Rich Little and the excellent Tariers quartet.

The ironic humor and offhand approach to life of the Greco & Willard duo lends a subtle flavor to their work as dry as the impossibly perfect martini, and with just the right touch of tartness to make them hilariously distinctive.

Their material is immediately and familiarly universal but presented via a sharp succession of well-timed vignettes in an unexpected and refreshingly different way. Not everything they do comes off precisely as planned but the two bat out an unusually risable percentage of hits in short, staccato style.

High water marks for humor come with Willard's telephone call to Greco as a White House aide to remind him that the tickets for the President's visit to a New York theatre have not yet been paid, a wonderfully visual piece with the two enacting a cop-and-robber reminiscent of Buster Keaton comedy, and a zany interview between a would be hearing aid salesman and his prospective employer.

A Canadian folksinger is somewhat of a rarity in this scene but Hawken fits the part and makes his opening spot a pleasingly entertaining turn. More experience will add polish to his act but he has sufficient assurance and poise at this stage to satisfy auditors. Hawken strums his own banjo accomp to a varied songalog and garners top response with "D-Day Dodgers," a satiric piece dedicated to Lady Astor, and two Canadian entries, "Back As A Dungeon" and "Macy Anne." Closing "My Sweetheart's A Mule In The Mine" is a cute ending to a brief and effective routine. Shaw.

Royal Box's Top Names; Eddie Fisher Follows Incumbent Donald O'Connor

By ABEL GREEN

Claude C. Philippe, executive veepee and g.m. of the Loew's-Tisch Americana, N.Y., is paying top dollar to put the retreaded Royal Box on the nitery scene and seemingly is achieving it. Some of the competition, along with the talent agents, either deprecate or cheer the "Las Vegas salaries" for some of the talent, which is literally not so, although the $10,000-$12,000-a-week stipends for Ella Fitzgerald, the current Donald O'Connor, and the incoming Eddie Fisher, are about double the talent tariffs at the Waldorf-Astoria's Empire Room or the Plaza's Persian Room.

The Fisher booking, of course, probably to an upped $6-$7.50 cover, as against the existing $5, is perfectly timed. He preems on Tuesday (June 11), a day ahead of "Cleopatra" opening at the Rivoli.

Cave, Vancouver

Pat Suzuki, Luxor Gali Gali, Dancing Debs (5), Chris Gage Orch (12); Miss Suzuki's numbers staged and conducted by Warren Meyers; $2.25 minimum Mon.-Thurs., $2.50 Fri., $2.90 Sat.

Pat Suzuki ('New Acts') left the Pacific Northwest in 1958 to become a Broadway musicomedy star via Richard Rodgers' "Flower Drum Song." Since then she has had a two year hiatus to enjoy being a wife and mother before resuming her professional career. Her nitery debut here, in one of the two cities that helped launch her successful Broadway bow (Seattle being the other) is also a welcome re-engagement for Cave partner Ken Stauffer, one of her original employers at his late Arctic Club.

Luxor Gali Gali, billed as the original Egyptian prestidigitator, keeps viewers popeyed with the sheer speed of his hands as he unreels a series of facile feats involving live baby chicks, coins, rings, handkerchiefs and borrowed banknotes. He also reaps gales of laughter as he hamboozles conscripted and participants with his baffling moves and smooth patter.

Gali Gali goes into high when he pulls two male auditors into his act and proceeds to bewilder them and delight onlookers with wizardry and slick maneuvers. After series of switches with their own currency, topper has volunteers finding Gali Gali's baby chicks distributed variously around their persons and he bows off to emphatic approval for his 30-minute stint. This class act is deserving of headline billing in most situations.

Dancing Debs' curtain raiser is a new production number, "Gypsy," as choreographed by lead dancer Roseanne Hopkins. Girls are also featured in a hold-over "Can Can" routine.

Bill is in until May 16 when Billy Williams Co. takes over. Shaw.

Harolds, Reno

Reno, May 4.

"State Fair Frolics" with New Christy Minstrels (8), Francis Brunn, Blue Ribbon Belles (5), Don Conn Orch; no cover, no minimum.

Current bill in Harolds Club Fun Room marks return of the summer seasonal revue packages, this one tagged the "State Fair Frolics." And there's no question this initial segment is one of the most potent for marquee lure that Harold Smith Sr. has yet assembled for this intimery. The advance reservations list indicates the New Christy Minstrels (in local debut) will prove top b.o., and Francis Brunn (he's played this room before) is a proven favorite.

The Minstrels, under direction of Randy Sparks, have much local following as result of their former regular spot on the Andy Williams show, and it's evident their fans are showing up here for an in person audit of the group. The Minstrels give 'em all they ask for—then more.

Albeit they're not purists the seven guys and two femmes offer many of the folk tunes in their interestingly varied catalog. And they prove a top talent in any area. Well rehearsed, nicely staged and smartly disciplined, the nine-

Philippe also has the June 26 opening of the new New York Hilton, diagonally across 53rd St. (at 6th Ave.), as probable new competition.

Essentially the battle of the banquets and the ballrooms will be on for real when the Hilton-Uris down the street. Guarantee is reported to be the same $12,500 for O'Connor & Co. concurrently plus other emoluments and fringe benefits (extra musicians, suites, etc.).

Philippe also has the June 26 opening of the new New York Hilton, diagonally across 53rd St. (at 6th Ave.), as probable new competition.

Essentially the battle of the banquets and the ballrooms will be on for real when the Hilton-Uris Bros.-Rockefeller 45-story, 2,153-room, hotel opens. While less than the Americana's 50 stories, it has about 200 rooms more. Both feature drive-in registration (the Hilton will do so, more so) and both of course will fight for the banquet business, presumably at the expense of the competitive Waldorf, Commodore, Astor, Plaza, Pierre, et al.

After the illfated kickoff with the Morris Lapidus-designed Royal Box, further complicated by the newspaper blackout, the new boite now is an ideal interior. It now has warmth, intimacy and better sight values. It was rather simple to achieve, by shifting the omnibus appearance of the boite to a squarer interior, with the bandstand in midriff rather than at the extreme end.

Ella Fitzgerald kicked off the new policy in the new room and, did well. O'Connor unless he reroutines his stuff, with perhaps an assist via a portable super-dance-floor, so as to give o'Connor insiders better vantage of his hoofology, may be handicapped. Philippe speaks of bringing in Ray Bolger, which again points up the possible handicap to another comedian whose prime forte also is hoofology.

The platform suggestion is not as simple as it sounds since it would really necessitate a completely superstructure dance floor because their brand of taps and terps require firmness of baseboard and any makeshift platform, unless truly secure and sans resiliency, could be hazardous.

O'Connor has been a resounding click at the Cocoanut Grove, L.A., which brought him back twice within the same season (a departure) and of course a fixture at Las Vegas' Sahara whence he returns following his current three-weeker.

Almost literally "born in a trunk", of which he makes mention in a specially written number, the youthful veteran of a yesteryear vaude family is poised and professional although he couldn't resist the observation, "They say a performer is as good as his audience and tonight you've been one helluva failure."

Actually this was only a matter of degree, seemingly an Americana audience, with those good Philippe groceries to attract them as much as the show, isn't as responsive at the dinner frolic. The comedian did quite well regardless and has been doing better since. It could also be that the Allen & Rossi competitive preem at the Persian Room, which somehow lured most of the press and pros, gave O'Connor an "audience casting" handicap, but his supper premiere was more namestudded.

Special maestro Bob Alberti batons his show which tees off with O'Connor chirping a medley, then The Wellingtons, personable male quartet of folkniks, interlarded with Michele Barton as the femme fatale in "My Kind of Girl" and "Delilah", before O'Connor really gets to 'em with a tv satire. It's broadly labeled 'An Answer to Newton Minow' and satirizes with impression of Chester and Matt Dillon ("Gunsmoke"), Pat Boone, Chevalier in "Fanny", Hitchcock's mellers, Merman, Belafonte, the 4 Castros ('Wellingtons') and Khrushchev (O'Connor), 'Ben Casey' and Astaire, latter a particularly clicky turn takeoff.

The Lester Lanin orch continues with the main dansapation, and Philippe plans to retain top-names throughout the summer with an eye to keep the ball rolling well into the World's Fair years ('64 and '65). His next season's roster will see Diahann Carroll reopening the season, and Mezz Gaynor, Phyllis Diller, Carol Lawrence and Yves Montand are on the agenda.

Harold's, Reno

opens with a spirited interpretation of "Walk the Road" and immediately set the pace and theme of what's to follow.

Minstrels provide their own instrumental backing with four guitars, two banjos, string bass, and tambourine. Harmonica is also used for a couple numbers. Singers effectively establish foot-stomping, hand-clapping mood with the uptempo offerings, and are equally adept at hushing the room with the tender, sentimental things.

Francis Brunn, an artist at arm-juggling, is a perfectionist. Working most of the turn with variously-sized ball and plastic rings, he commands the attention of a three-ring circus. The roshot pace, Marceau low stage ceiling are no obvious hindrance. Timing is also to the ultimate point. Rating mention for her efforts is Brunn's wife, Sasha, who tosses the props with the same excellence in timing exhibited by partner. Act is a natural for any situation. Long.

20th Floor, Dallas

Dallas, April 26.

Jay Bryan, Dirk Mary Trio; private club, no cover or minimum.

Jay Bryan, fourth in a series of "guest" jazz vocalists due at this small suburban intimacy, impresses with a capable voice, smart tune selection and an unusual style. Her three-week stint should bring her new fans and lure patronage.

Sans mahogo, svelte lined thrush, knocks her way easily through intricate lyrics for an impressive score. Sampling includes an easy ballad, "Loads of Lovely Love," the seldom heard "Remind Me" and Miss Bryan gives vocal shading to "Some Other Time," followed by "Our Love Is Here To Stay" for nice mitting.

Songstress could add to her score with a little lady English and working more to the auditors for added rapport.

Le Cabaret, Toronto

Toronto, May 2.

Judy Lee, Jack Lander Trio; $1.75 cover.

With current engagement of Judy Lee, it's curtains for the chanteuse-chinchinese types at the posh Le Cabaret. Customers, after eight years, will have to be content with the dance antics of the Jack Lander Trio. Longtime policy of twice-nightly performances by warblers will be discontinued.

Majority of Le Cabaret minstrels has indicated a preference for a less expensive evening and the elimination of any cover charge, along with dropping the singer, according to headliner Bob Cook. Therefore, table d'hote dinners will be available, and no cover charge at anytime. Means the exit of the charming vocalists who have adorned the premises for almost a decade.

Miss Lee, cute in appearance, is rubbishing where it's needed, nice accent in her vocal changes and styling. With her department and voice, she should go further in her ultimate goal of supperclub roles. Motley.

OBITUARIES

BENJAMIN F. BOLEMAN

Benjamin F. Boleman, 72, with the William Morris Agency since 1941 and prior to that personal manager for Eddie Cantor and onetime New York newspaperman, died of a heart ailment in Hollywood May 8 after an illness of many years. He had been in semi-retirement for past two years but had continued with agency on a part-time basis.

At the Morris office he first handled personal appearances of its clients, later becoming a trouble shooter for all departments. In late years he handled all of the agency's publicity and advertising.

Starting in the newspaper field in 1911 as cabaret editor of the N. Y. Press, he switched to same post with N. Y. Evening Mail in 1916. He became head of Flo Ziegfeld's publicity dept. in 1924 and subsequently moved to the N. Y. Journal as amusements editor where he remained until 1937.

Boleman went into the publicity biz with Nat Dorfman that same year, leaving the firm in 1938 to become personal manager for Cantor. He left Cantor's employ in 1941 to join the Morris office.

Surviving are his wife and daughter.

ETHEL IRVING

Ethel Irving, 98, retired actress, died May 3 in Bexhill, Eng. She started in the old Gaiety chorus in 1885, as Birdie Irving. Later, after many musicomedy appearances, she made a name in "The Geisha," "San Toy," "A Country Girl" and "The Girl from Kays" around the turn of the century.

In 1905, she went into management herself. A further big hit came with "Lady Frederick," and she played the title role for over a year. Miss Irving continued with star roles until her retirement over 30 years ago.

She toured both Australia and South Africa, and in 1939 made her first Broadway appearance in "The Red Mouse," remaining in the U. S. for over six years.

ROWLAND BROWN

Rowland Brown, 62, former director-writer, died of a heart attack May 6 in Bolton, Cal. He launched his film career in 1928 as a laborer at Fox Films, becoming a prop boy and gagman before turning to writing.

Among Brown's writing credits are such films as "Doorway to Hell," "Angels With Dirty Faces," "What Price Hollywood," "Blood Money," "Johnny Apollo." Pictures he directed include "Quick Millions," "The Scarlet Pimpernel," among others.

Surviving are his wife, three sons, daughter, brother and sister.

HUGH T. GRAHAM

Hugh T. Graham, 64, general manager of operations for CBS-TV, died of pneumonia May 11 in Tarrytown, N. Y.

He joined CBS in 1937 as manager of unit management and control services. He was named director of studio operations two years later and in 1950 was appointed director of live operations for the network. Prior to joining CBS, he had been associated with NBC in staging productions.

His wife and three daughters survive.

MAX MILLER

Max Miller, 68, veteran vaude comedian, died May 7 in Brighton, Eng. Born Thomas Sargent, and known as "The Cheeky Chappie," he started as a boy with a circus at 25c a week. It was in World War I that he became an army entertainer and, after demobilization, joined a ukulele concert party where he met his wife, who survives.

As a solo vaude comedian Miller was noted for his cheeky patter and smile as he reeled off a series of gags, many blue and all with a double entendre. One of his gimmicks was a "Blue" joke book which he produced for his more dubious material and a "White" one for the cleaner stuff.

Another gimmick was his costume, a flamboyantly multi-colored suit of silk plus fours and an equally elegant dressing gown, topped with a smart white velour hat.

He made a number of films, including "Educated Evans" and "The Good Companions," and at one time was a big disk seller. For some years he had been in the $2,000 a week class, but for the past two or three years he had been in semi-retirement following a heart attack. Miller made four Royal Variety show performances.

MARK A. J. HEALY

Mark Arthur Joseph (Tim) Healy, 64, Hollywood director of Advertising Code Administration of Motion Picture Assn. of America, died of a heart attack May 6 in Hollywood.

After an early career in the investment biz and assistant chief postal censor for U.S. Office of Censorship in Washington, Healy entered the film industry in 1941 in connection with the wartime code for motion pictures and the examination of film entering and leaving the U.S.

He joined the MPAA in 1946 as assistant manager of its London office, the following year became MPAA's Near and Middle East rep and in 1951 was shifted to a similar post in Spain. He swung over to the MPAA's Production Code Administration staff in 1956 and in April, 1958, succeeded the late Simon Levy as Hollywood director of the ACA.

His wife and two daughters survive.

CLIFTON JAMES

Clifton James, 65, actor, died May 8 in Worthing, Eng. During an Army concert he impersonated Field Marshal Montgomery so impressively that British intelligence hit on a daring scheme. James was trained to study Montgomery's every movement and gesture and to hoodwink the Germans.

While Montgomery was preparing for the invasion of Normandy, James, impersonating Monty, was in the Mediterranean. It was a difficult role for the actor, but rewarding, for he was given the full Field Marshal treatment.

Later, James wrote a book about his experiences and played the part in a film, "I Was Monty's Double." But, though a competent actor it was the only star role he ever achieved.

MARIA MATYAS

Maria Matyas, 57, an opera singer who created the role of Jock in "Jock and the Beanstalk" and who was known for other key operatic roles, died April 16 in Cornwall Bridge, Conn.

She made her debut in Chicago in 1939 as a mezzo-soprano in the opera "Marta." She had appeared with the American Opera Company in "Yolanda of Cyprus" and had played the role of Hansel in "Hansel and Gretel." Matyas made her Metropolitan Opera debut in 1957 in "Aida." She remained on the Met's roster of artists for many years, besides being a concert soloist.

Her husband, mother, two brothers and a sister survive.

NINA C. KELLIN

Nina Calcerman Kellin, 44, former dancer with the Martha Graham Co. and wife of actor Mike Kellin, was found dead May 11 in a wooded area near Warrensburg, N. Y. There were no signs of violence. She had been missing since May 2. In a recent letter to a friend, she intimated that she planned suicide. Mrs. Kellin had also appeared with the Anna Below Dancers and the New Dance Group.

Kellin, who had been appearing in Bertolt Brecht's "Mother Courage" on Broadway, failed to appear in the closing performance following the town. The couple had been amicably separated.

Also survived by a daughter.

JOHN C. BECHER

John C. Becher, 81, music designer and builder in Chicago for 60 years, died May 3 in Sarasota, Fla. He founded Becher Bros. art studio in 1888 in Chi, which did nearly all the work for the legitimate theatre and most film companies in the Windy City as the old Essanay Studios.

When touring companies started bringing in their own scenery and motion pictures moved to California, Becher switched to ice shows, industrial shows and to permanent exhibitions such as the W.E. "Yesterday's Main Street" at the

CHI LOOKS BIG FOR '63-'64

Madrid Producer Bells Reviewer; Other Critics Boycott His Drama; Next Bout: Merrick Vs. Taubman?

Madrid, May 14.

When Tirso Escudero, proprietor of the Teatro de la Comedia, slugged legit critic Antonio Rodriguez de Leon recently at the opening of the Spanish version of Langston Hughes' "Tambourines to Glory," billed here as "Mulato," other reviewers boycotted the show. Instead of reviewing it, nearly all of them wrote scathing articles about the impresario who had strong-armed their colleague.

De Leon indicated that he would take the theatre owner into court for assault and battery. The impresario, on the other hand, argued that the reviewer had a beating coming to him for a personal attack that went beyond the realm of play appraisal.

De Leon was on Escudero's blacklist following a series of articles in a one-man campaign to raise legit standards in Madrid. Invited to the opening as guest of the Comedia resident company director, the critic was set upon by Escudero and his friends in the theatre lobby.

In a letter to the editor of Madrid's leading newspaper, ABC, Jose Maria de Quinto and Alfonso Restre condemned the incident and urged all branches of theatre activity, including the critics, to show tolerance and civility toward creative aspects of the theatre. Several of the reviewers expressed sympathy with the situation of Hughes, whose play occasioned the episode and who was thereby put in the middle of the situation.

It's a Hard Life

Things have been tough all over for critics this season. Another recent target of a protest punch was Bernard Levin, of the London Daily Mail, the perpetrator in that case being the husband of a thesp who'd been panned. Elliot Norton, of the Boston Record American, got off with a public rebuke by Broadway producer Shepard Traube after rapping the tryout, "Memo."

It's been mostly verbal punishment in New York, too, with David Merrick waging a campaign of ridicule against Howard Taubman, of

But No Belabled Run

Lafayette, Ind., May 14.

Construction will start soon on a unique outdoor theatre with 5,000 seats, a 37-by-65-foot pool which can be drained for use as a dance floor or orchestra pit, and a 200-ton concrete roof propped on a steel tripod over the stage. To be called the Stapler Center of Performing Arts, it is being financed by a $200,000 gift from Cannes Stapler, and will be situated on Duhon Hill at Purdue Univ.

The structure will include dressing rooms flanking the stage, and an assembly room. Stapler is vice-president of research for Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., Toledo.. Occupancy is expected by next November.

It's Definite (Almost): Stratford (Ont.) Troupe To Play London, Aussie

Toronto, May 14.

It's apparently just about definite that a company representing the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival will play London and Australia next spring. Michael Langham, artistic director of the Ontario operation, has confirmed the plan, which has been the subject of speculative reports for the last year.

"We will go to the Aldwych Theatre in London in the spring and hope that the new theatre in Adelaide, Australia, will be ready in time for next season," said the stager. "I expect we will take one revival and one new production—not by Shakespeare.

"I think there's almost too much Shakespeare being arranged for 1964, it being the 400th anniversary of his birth. We would put the new production on here at Stratford, Ontario, when we return."

Langham noted that he had expected to leave Stratford, at the completion of last summer's tenure and had committed himself to a number of outside things. His schedule will be tight and is a matter of opening dates.

Besides staging "Troilus and Cressida" and "Cyrano de Bergerac" at Stratford this summer, he is to direct a Broadway musical, "Baker Street," early in the fall and then an unspecified straight play starring Christopher Plummer. Contrary to expectations, the latter will not be in "Baker Street."

SEE FAST START, ADDED THEATRES

By LES BROWN

Chicago, May 14.

Largely because of a theatre shortage, the waning season will go down in Chicago legit annals as perhaps the alltime poorest, but with the Opera House and Studebaker now pressed into service the 1963-64 term already looms as a boom following the bust. Several factors suggest that the forthcoming season, which technically begins June 1, could top the record $5,-949,138 gross registered in the 1961-62 semester.

It will get off to a fast start with four of the available theatre premises to be active much of the summer. Only two theatres were lighted during the summer of '61-'62, one of them only part time. There are four musicals in the new lineup, and tuners of course always have a way of fattening a season's aggregate gross.

The '63-'64 fare includes a number of award winners from the two previous Broadway seasons, such as "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" "Beyond the Fringe," "A Man for All Seasons" and "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying," all figuring to be strong benefice contenders.

The 11 shows set to date, including a pair of holdovers, already match the total that will have played the entire 1962-63 season in Chicago. Not included in the new season tally are the shows that may comprise the projected summer season at the Studebaker under the aegis of Arthur Morse, who is letting his Edgewater Beach Playhouse sit this one out.

Under a sublease arrangement, Morse is planning to bring in the New York companies of "This Was Burlesque" and "The Blacks" and

Planchon Troupe To B'way in 1964

Paris, May 14.

Roger Planchon, head of the Theatre de la Cite in Lyon, will take his legit repertory group for a Broadway stand in June, 1964. This is probably one of the first times a French provincial theatrical group will hit Broadway. It has usually been reserved for Parisian groups or Paris-based state subsidized companies.

The booking also underlines the growing decentralization of theatre in progress since World War II. Most sections of France have their own legit groups underwritten by the federal government, local prefectures and cities and private subscriptions and ticket sales.

Planchon made a dent in Paris some years ago when his inventive direction and interpretation of classics raised big press and cons among critics and the public. Business and the general reaction was favorable and it showed that unusual theatrical forces were in operation in other parts of France but Paris.

Planchon starts on a long foreign begins this week while a new theatre and cultural center he will head, is being built in Lyon. The project will include legit, film showings, discussion groups and music.

On its immediate tour the company of Hungary, Poland, Bulgaria and Rumania, then to the Holland Theatre Festival and finally to Russia next September. The troupe's repertory will include Planchon's burlesque of "The Three Musketeers" and new versions of Moliere's "Georges Dandin" and "Tartuffe."

The company is Paris for a few months next winter before the Yank tour.

Hal Prince Gets 'Corner' As B'way Tuner Prospect

Hollywood, May 14.

"Love Is Just Around the Corner," a novel by Lester Atwell, has been acquired by Harold Prince for adaptation as a musical comedy for Broadway. George Abbott will stage the show, with Barbara Streisand and Dick Shawn as possible leads. No one has been set to supply the book, tunes or lyrics.

On Prince's more immediate schedule is a straight comedy, "She Didn't Say Yes," by Lennie Coleman. It's slated for a strawhat tryout tour this summer with a cast headed by Joan Caulfield, Peggy Cass and Joan Hackett, and is figured for Broadway in the fall. Prince currently has "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" and "She Loves Me" on Broadway, and "Take Her, She's Mine" on tour.

London 'Succeed' To Recoup 150G Cost in Mid-Aug.

London, May 14.

On the basis of its present boxoffice pace, "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" should be in the black by mid-August. The Frank Loesser-Abe Burrows musical, presented at the Shaftesbury Theatre under the management of Dorchester Productions, opened on March 28 and is calculated to take 20 weeks to pay off its $150,000 investment.

With its top of $4.25, the show is currently grossing around $35,-000 weekly, representing capacity biz at all evening performances, but with moderate earnings for the Wednesday and Saturday matinees. The theatre gets 40% of the gross for rental and services, and an additional 13½% is paid in royalties. The company expense averages around $6,200, and the operating net is about $7,500.

Ticket brokers have played a substantial role in the click of the production. The Combined Theatre Libraries, plus a number of independent ticket agencies, had a stake of over $265,000, which had to be amortized over a 26-week period. Currently, reservations made through the brokers are accounting for roughly $3,000 a night, indicating that the Libraries will have gone through their guarantee substantially ahead of the deadline.

Dorchester Productions, operating under the managing directorship of Arthur Lewis, aims to go into active independent management, over and above its activities at the Shaftesbury. Lewis is considering several projects, and will continue negotiations when he returns to New York at the end of May for a brief visit. The company is contemplating joining the Society of West End Theatre Managers.

Posh Turnout and Mixed Reviews For Preems of 'Hamlet' and 'Miser' At Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, Mpls.

By ROBERT REED

Minneapolis, May 14.

A novel legit plant, blending elements of the very old and very new, emerged here last week with the opening of the Tyrone Guthrie repertory theatre. The project, combining classic repertory with an ultra-modern, rainbow colored adaptation of the Elizabethan stage in a midlands setting far from the Broadway scene, had an auspicious debut, covered by critics from various cities in the U.S., Canada and Australia and by wire services and national mags.

The initial offerings in the 28-week, first season are "Hamlet," which opened last Tuesday night (7) and Moliere's "The Miser," bowing Wednesday night (8). Chekhov's "Three Sisters" will be added to the repertory June 18 and "Death of a Salesman" is due July 16.

The inaugural season is nudging toward boxoffice success, but the Guthrie company may have to wait a bit for critical approval, judging from reviews of its first two efforts. Tyrone Guthrie's modernized version of "Hamlet," starring George Grizzard, met with mixed reviews mostly unfavorable, from the out-of-town critics.

Walter Kerr, of the N.Y. Herald Tribune; Howard Taubman, of the N.Y. Times; Herbert Whittaker, of the Toronto Globe & Mail, and Kevin Kelly, of the Boston Globe, praised it, but pans were written by Claudia Cassidy, of the Chicago Tribune; Sidney Harris, of the Chicago News; Nathan Cohen, of the Toronto Star, and William Glover, of the Associated Press. "The Miser," starring Hume Cronyn and staged by Douglas Campbell, fared better.

There was nothing mixed or lukewarm in the audience response to the two entries. First-nighters, who paid a reasonable $10 apiece to attend the preems and champagne cocktail parties in the theatre foyer after the final curtains, gave both casts standing ovations. And while the unfavorable notices disturbed the actors, there was not

Prophet Without Honor

Paris, May 14.

The Paris Opera has signed Maurice Bejart to stage the Berlioz "Damnation of Faust" next season.

Bejart is the French choreographer who, despite a rising reputation in the past few years, couldn't get a nod at home, and began getting local attention and praise after he was "discovered" by the Brussels Opera House, where he has been in charge of ballet for the past three years.

Thea. of Nations Future in Doubt

Paris, May 14.

The Theatre of Nations, currently in its seventh season at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre, may be due for major reorganization next year. A. M. Julien, who conceived and started the project in 1954, may be replaced as head, or may conceivably move it to another city or even another European country. He has given his staff severance notice as of July 9, when the present season ends.

A special committee, representing the city of Paris, the national Ministry of Culture and the Department of the Seine, has issued a report recommending a revision of the festival setup, notably with an elected president, not necessarily Julien, who would appoint a director general to have actual charge of the operation.

Although the TON receives $160,000 annual support from the Ministry, the city of Paris and the International Theatre Institute under the sponsorship of UNESCO, the question of final authority appears uncertain. Julien has run it primarily as a private affair, and considers it his personal project, but the three official groups take the stand that it is a public enterprise.

It remains to be seen whether it will be held again next year, either as the TON or under some other name, and if so, whether it will still be a Julien venture or a national and municipal operation, possibly with ITI support. There's also a question whether Julien will try to move it elsewhere and, if so, the Ministry and the city of Paris will attempt to continue a similar, rival operation here.

The situation is the subject of widespread conjecture in Paris legit circles, with a few observers predicting some sort of compromise to continue TON in Paris under a slightly revised setup, but with Julien's authority curtailed.

Van Johnson in 'Yankees' Slated for Colonie, N.Y.

Albany, May 14.

Van Johnson, who established a new boxoffice record at the Colonie Summer Theatre near here in last summer's opener, "The Music Man," will return the week of July 16 in "Damn Yankees." The musical was the first production staged in the tent six years ago by Eddie Rich.

Other shows set for the summer include Genevieve in "Irma La Douce," Walter Pidgeon in "Lord Pengo," Tab Hunter in "The Tender Trap," Margaret Whiting in "Wildcat," Dorothy Collins in "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," Carla Alberghetti in "Carnival," Joan Caulfield and Peggy Cass in a tryout of "She Didn't Say Yes" and Robert Cummings in "Holiday for Lovers."

Both Mpls. & St. Paul To Have Own, Same TC Subscription Shows

Minneapolis, May 14.

For the second successive year, both Minneapolis and St. Paul will have identical Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription schedules next season. That's the result of the decision by local circuit owner Ted Mann again to interrupt the regular film policy at his loop 2,800-seat Orpheum to play the occasional touring stage shows. The 1963-64 subscription season previously had been inked for the St. Paul municipal Auditorium.

Next season there'll be only six TC-ATS shows for each of the adjoining cities. That will be less than the current season, which ends here the week of May 20 with "Stop the World, I Want to Get Off." The latter is an exclusive Twin Cities' engagement locally because Minneapolis didn't get "Camelot" and St Paul did for its seventh subscription item. Then Orpheum stage was a trifle too small for the production.

The Mann deal again calls for the shows to play at least a week here, and then to move to St Paul for a minimum of one stanza. After several years without any touring shows except grand opera at the U'niv of Minnesota's Northrop Auditorium, because of a lack of a theatre to house them, the impending subscription season will be the third successive here.

When Minneapolis lost out on TC-ATS, St. Paul had it exclusively for several seasons. Inasmuch as the cities are adjoining, it isn't a hardship for the residents of one to go to the other for their entertainment.

Ronald Lobrooter Reopens

London, April 30.

Ronald Peters, [illegible] Peter Myers, [illegible] Ronald Cass [illegible] Lyric, Shaftesbury Ave., London, [illegible] Peter Myers, Ronald Cass, Vivienne Martin, Peter Bayliss, Thomas Thumb, Jimmy Thompson.

Peter Myers and Ronald Cass have taken a trip down memory lane, recalling some of the great artists and the hit shows that have played the heart of London's theatreland since the turn of the century. The idea seems better in theory than in practice, particularly as the appeal is primarily to oldsters who are not likely to relish staying up for entertainment starting at 11 p.m. Youngsters, on the other hand, will probably find it dull and old hat.

One of the fundamental errors in this 50-minute revue is that few of the song numbers recalled from the good old days are familiar to modern audiences. Trying to recapture the magic of Daly's, the Alhambra and other Leicester Square theatres is difficult assignment at best, especially when there is little emotional bond between stage and audience.

So the performers who try to recreate the chemistry that made Jack Buchanan, a hero of the 20s and 30s, that explains the Co-optimists as a show's phenomenon, or the fascination of Fred and Adele Astaire as a team, have an uphill task.

Apart from its nostalgic content and its tenuous link, the subject matter is often trite and indifferent. It is not just that tastes have changed, but that Gillian Lynne's staging has not succeeded in reproducing the glamour and glitter of the old days in Leicester Square.

The only item that comes vividly to life is a sketch from the revue, "High Spirits," and this is largely attributable to a superb impersonation by Ronnie Stevens as the femme accompanist of a concert group entertaining the troops in Korea. It is a superb, drodgery [sic] labored, which will have any audience rolling.

For the rest, the cast tries hard, but makes only a modest impression. Paula Hendrix, Pip Hinton and Vivienne Martin take care of the dainty side, and Peter Bayliss and Jimmy Thompson add their weight. The staging tends to be leisurely, and the unrevolving door is attractive in a simple, economic way.

The Importance of Being Oscar

London, April 30.

Peter Bayliss in association with [illegible] Theatre, London, [illegible] Peter Bayliss.

Michael Mac Liammoir, one of the great young solo entertainers, is back for a three-week engagement at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre in London, while the regular company is touring the Continent. He will alternate "The Importance of Being Oscar" with "I Must Be Talking to My Friends."

"The Importance of Being Oscar," which he did in London about two years ago, is an artistic and literary feat, and Mac Liammoir holds the stage and captivates his audience for the best part of three hours. His dramatic biography of Oscar Wilde is presented with warmth, integrity and a touch of reverence which adds to the performance.

The stage is bare, apart from an octagonal rug, a sofa, armchair, table and a pedestal holding a bouquet of lilies. Against that sparse background the star brings to life some of the great epigrams and pointillating works of the celebrated author at the height of his career, including, in the first half a large excerpt from "The Picture of Dorian Gray," and the scene from "The Importance of Being Earnest" in which Lady Bracknell rejects her daughter's suitor.

The second part is devoted to the period following his conviction, and the highlights here include a moving reading of "De Profundis," and a powerfully dramatic recitation of "The Ballad of Reading Gaol."

The presentation, impressively directed by Hilton Edwards, rates as one of the outstanding features of the current legit scene. Myro.

I Must Be Talking to My Friends

London, May 7.

Peter Bayliss in association with [illegible] Theatre, London. Michael Mac Liammoir.

Michael Mac Liammoir's second solo show, in his current Aldwych season is new to London, but it is full of the warm, rich quality which derives from Irish literature and humor. Like "The Importance of Being Oscar," it is a combined dramatic treat of unusual dimensions, and in the highest traditions of one-man entertainment.

Such is the profusion of Irish writing that the modern Irish playwrights, including Sean O'Casey, Samuel Beckett, and Brendan Behan, are dismissed with little more than a passing reference. The bard's share of the entertainment is devoted to such great Irishmen as William Butler Yeats, James Joyce, George Bernard Shaw, and a slight recap on Oscar Wilde.

There is also Robert Emmet's moving and powerful defense of his own character after he had been sentenced to death, and, in striking contrast a scene from Richard Brinsley Sheridan's "The Rivals," in which Lord Foppington meets with his tailor, shoemaker, hatter, et al. One of the lighter delights of the program is a lively, witty and perceptive dissertation on the stage Irish, a natural for Mac Liammoir's undoubted talents.

This anthology of Irish literature, tracing the course of the history of that country, is a masterpiece of construction and, under Hilton Edwards' guidance, the star's impeccable performance brings it poetically to life.

Cincy Park Schedule

Cincinnati, May 14.

"The Devil's Disciple" opens tomorrow night (Wed.) for a three-week run at the Playhouse in the Park here as the third of eight repertory company presentations to be produced by Brooks Jones for a five-month season which began April 3 with "The Lady's Not for Burning." The opener was followed by "The Hostage" and "Disciple" and is to be trailed by a bill of three one-acters, "The Emperor," "The Caretaker," "Twelfth Night" and "The Fantasticks."

The program of one-acters, which will be presented for a fortnight starting June 5, comprises Edward Albee's "The Zoo Story," Samuel Beckett's "Act Without Words" and W. B. Yeats' "Calvary." Jones was formerly producer at the McCarter Theatre, Princeton.

YALE'S DRAMA SCHOOL MAY HAVE STRAWHAT

Harwood, May 14.

The Yale drama school may operate a tent theatre most years at nearby Waterford. The project is being considered by Waterford officials and Yale authorities. The proposed site is the New London shoreline suburb, a well populated resort area on the New York-Boston highway.

Details for the project, tentatively tagged the Yale Summer Drama Festival, are still sketchy. Backing the project is F. Curtis Canfield, Yale drama school dean, who is considering the possibility of presenting plays, operas and musicals under canvas. The venture depends at the outset on the cooperation of Waterford officials, have expressed tentative interest. One limitation placed on the town by Canfield would be freedom from interfering in the maintenance, operation and offerings of the theatre.

The Yale operation would center around a 24-room mansion, Hammond House, situated on a 95-acre tract. Waterford recently paid $750,000 for the property. The theatre would be a non-profit venture, and would involve Yale drama school undergraduates as well as alumni. Financing would be obtained from the college itself and the alumni.

Raymond Burr in 'Waltz' To Open Det's Northland

Detroit, May 14.

The Northland Playhouse will begin its eighth season June 4 with Raymond Burr in "Anniversary Waltz." The same actor opened the season last year — in "Critic's Choice"— and set the house boxoffice record.

Burr's two week engagement in Northland's plastic geodesic dome theatre, will be followed by Tab Hunter in "Tender Trap," staying a week. Ann Sothern is scheduled to appear in a new show "God Bless Our Bank," June 25 for one week. Groucho Marx is expected to follow in "Time for Elizabeth," also for a week.

Menasha Skulnik will be seen in "Come Blow Your Horn," beginning July 9 for a week. The first musical of the season for Northland, "Carnival," will star Ann Blyth for two weeks, beginning July 23. Producer-general manager Ken Schwartz is lining up August productions, negotiating with Diana Dors to be seen in "Remains to Be Seen," Merv Griffin in "The Moon Is Blue" and Dennis Day in "Brigadoon."

Herb Rogers Combines Music, Penthouse Spots

Chicago, May 14.

Herb Rogers is shuttering his 14-year old Music Theatre this season and is merging its operation with that of Penthouse, his other summer theatre in suburban Highland Park. The producer is increasing the Penthouse seating to 2,000 and will present a mixed season of straight plays, musicals and variety shows through Labor Day. It's the 10th year for the Penthouse.

The straight comedies, grouped at the opening of the season, include Menasha Skulnik in "Come Blow Your Horn" and Raymond Burr in "Anniversary Waltz," with a third play to be set for the week of June 11. For the musicals, which will run two weeks each in midsummer, Rogers has booked Larry Parks and Betty Garrett in "High Button Shoes" and Merv Griffin in "Oklahoma." He's still lacking a star for the third tuner, "Flower Drum Song," set for Aug. 6-18.

The miscellaneous shows include a concert of Theodore Bikel and Geula Gill and Oranim Zahar the week of June 17, Allan Sherman's one-man show the week of Aug. 26 and a Steve Allen-helmed variety show the final week of the season.

On the Penthouse staff this year are Vern Taylor, general manager; Peter Fuchs, music director; Joel Schnee, choreographer; Nate Caldwell, stage manager; and Ed Hoyle, publicity.

Craig Stevens, the television actor, will make his Broadway debut next season costarring with Janis Paige in the musical, "Here's Love." William and Jean Eckart are designing the sets for the tuner, for which Elliot Lawrence is musical director and vocal arranger.

B'way See-Saws; 'Loves Me' $49,636; 'Forum' 56G, 'Woolf' 39G, 'Little' 38½G; 'Strings' $33,089, 'Too True' $17,303

Broadway was spotty last week, with moderate to substantial fluctuations. Business was generally good the first few nights, but sagged over the weekend. Holding to the pole setbacks were "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" and "Never Too Late."

There were two closings last Saturday (11), "Calculated Risk" and "Mother Courage and Her Children." Opening this week are the N.Y. City Center repeat of its recent revival of "Oklahoma" tonight (Wed.) and "The Beast in Me," which postponed its preem from last night (Tues.) to tomorrow night (Thurs.).

"Tchin-Tchin" closes next Saturday (18) and "last weeks" are being advertised for "A Man for All Seasons" and "The Sound of Music."

Nobody Loves Me

New Hope, Pa., May 1.

[illegible]

Seldom has an author done as much with as slight a plot as Neil Simon has with "Nobody Loves Me," which kicks off the 25th season at the Bucks County Playhouse. The comedy peters out in the third act, but if the playwright can supply an adequate finale, he could have a companion hit for his sleeper, "Come Blow Your Horn." The new piece already has been sold to films, and producer Michael Ellis hopes to bring it to Broadway in the fall.

An adroit jokesmith, Simon gets laugh on top of laugh with his sketchy tale of a scatterbrained, immature newlywed and her slightly stuffy lawyer-husband in their sixth-floor Greenwich Village walkup. Add to this attractive couple the bride's over-protective widowed mother and an aging but ageless international playboy neighbor whom the bride tries to promote for her mama.

What gives this frothy comedy a semblance of substance is the author's ability to make his characters human. The young couple could be any newlyweds. Their uneven relationship is believable and sometimes even poignant, despite the flippant framework.

Elizabeth Ashley is delightful as the bride. Robert Redford is likable as the husband. Mildred Natwick is crisp and droll as the mother, and George Voskovec is properly debonair as the playboy. Herbert Edelman scores in the bit of a telephone man who almost doesn't survive his six-floor climb.

Mike Nichols gets the laughs in the right spots with his staging and Ben Shecter's simple setting is in good taste. Bill.

The Parsley Life

Los Angeles, April 27.

[illegible]

Syrian-Americans, their characteristics and their conflicts provide the cultural foundation for this slight new three-act comedy by Al Aarmely. The play may offer special appeal, but the average American customer is apt to be neither enthralled nor more than sporadically amused. Except for several lively performances, the John LeVan Associates-Shirley Kuchera presentation, produced and directed by LeVan, fails to rise above, and in some respects subtracts from, its written material.

The plot concerns the plight of two Syrian immigrants who, in order to qualify for U. S. citizenship, must marry Americans. Friends and relatives provide likely marital candidates, but the love affairs evolve erroneously, as expected. Syrian falls for Syrian, Yank for Yank, and that's how it ends after a third act that explodes into out-and-out farce after two acts of attempted adherence to reality.

The most provocative performance is by Laura Mason as the sultry Syrian husband-seeker, and most ingratiating is Mike Fatobi's as the male Syrian who loves her but reluctantly goes through the paces of wooing an American lass, lightly played by Carol Byron. Shelley Morrison and Allen Joseph have goals as the Syrians in whose shade the romantic sparks fly.

Mike Tandy's set and William C White's lighting are satisfactory. The associate producer of this attraction, which will run weekends at the Horseshoe, is Lawrence Schwab. Tube.

Spoon River Anthology

Los Angeles, May 2.

[illegible]

The Univ. of California at Los Angeles extension center's increasingly significant Theatre Group has apparently found a particularly strong niche in the field of staged dramatic readings. Following the success of John Dos Passos' "U.S.A." and Dylan Thomas' "Under Milkwood," in the poetic drama medium, the group has opened another poetic collection that looks to gain equally high praise and audience response.

Edgar Lee Masters' delineation of the assorted personalities in a typical American community has the quality of a fully developed folk portrait. In character studies that represent every area of human reaction, the poet has pointed to the emotions, intellect, environmental conditions and overall attitudes that, in one collected anthology, present a rich composite of the basis of our culture. It is a work of strength and impact, of simple design but carrying a rich message.

In Betty Garrett, Robert Elston, Joyce Van Patten and Charles Aidman, producer-developer Lamont Johnson has found superior performers who achieve the true meaning of the work. All four glide easily into a wide variety of character changes—the town prostitutes, teachers, farmers, immigrants, ministers, a lone Jewish clothier, village idiot and local dandy. If one were to be singled out, it would be Miss Garrett, superb in every vastly-different characterization, both comic and tragic.

Spelling the actors are singers Stephen Pearlman and Naomi Caryl Hirshhorn, who flank the stage and interject warm folk tunes to complement the poetry and its diverse moods. Aidman conceived and directed the presentation, only a portion of Masters' original collection of tales from his Illinois home town. It is a handsomely developed production, paced well and smoothly handled.

Lighting by Arvid Nelson effectively aids the material. Myles Harmon's simple set a complement to the performers. The show will run thru June 6, then tour several S. Calif. campuses. Dale.

Open Book

Pasadena, April 19.

[illegible]

Although offered as a pre-Broadway production, Hugh White and Nat Perrin's "Open Book," as presented on the Pasadena Playhouse Mainstage, is only a galley proof. The nucleus of a warm family comedy is evident, but the loose ends and uncertain staging indicate careful editing is required before it will be ready for even an off-Broadway production. The play, with some work, could become a staple for stock, but lacks the finished format demanded by Broadway.

Clarke Gordon's staging indicates that the play, at present too quicksilvery and loaded with meaningless incident, is being performed at an accelerated pace in order to get everything in. Arthur O'Connell and Martha Scott capture the flavor and personality of a 1912 Kansas couple whose most serious problem has been trying to live up to mama's locally prominent family.

The authors' evident concept, that a group, if kept talking long enough, will eventually tell the truth may be valid, but it's also true that a lot of confusion would be stirred up in so doing. White and Perrin will need to delete some of the confusion. Everyone plays too hard, trying to maintain the pace that proves as exhausting for the audience as it must be for the cast.

Some lines will get bigger laughs when the correct timing is worked out. Deletion of some extraneous stage business, a tightening of the directorial reins, the correction of a few technical errors (better ensemble playing and considerable rewriting are indicated). The chucklesome dialog doesn't reach the uproarious stage, but is good enough to make the extra work worthwhile.

O'Connell, a fine character actor whose reputation has been built on solid supporting parts, tends to embroider the leading role with a few plot-slowing bits, but his general performance is warm and sympathetic. Miss Scott has her best single moment when, in a bit of extreme exasperation, she uses a "rather strong" expression and immediately realizes that her young daughter knows what it means. Miss Stewart, Greene, Douglas and Maurice Manson give their solid supporting roles assurance and spirit, although Douglas's explanation of his background needs more definition. Kerry Grover and Bob Anderson are effective in lesser parts.

Don Roberts' set is an asset, not only creating the comfortable but overdone decoration of that period but, with the subtle touches of beginning deterioration, underscores mama's dissatisfaction with the house and makes credible the melodramatic ending. William W. Young's lighting blends the excellent set with the plot's many moods. Joseph Markham's costumes are good and, particularly for the ladies, most becoming. Robe.

Legit Followup

Tchin-Tchin

(BARRYMORE, N.Y.)

"Tchin-Tchin" is in good hands. With Arlene Francis and Jack Klugman giving fine performances in the roles vacated by Margaret Leighton and Anthony Quinn, the Sidney Michaels adaptation of the Francois Billetdoux play is still effective though somewhat far-fetched.

Miss Francis, as the prim and unhappy Pamela Pew-Pickett, is something of a revelation. It's no surprise that she handles the comedy deftly, but her talent as a dramatic actress is less wellknown. Once or twice she borders on excessiveness, but she generally gives a restrained, skillful, and thoroughly sympathetic portrayal.

Klugman is a less magnetic stage personality than Quinn, but since the role is that of a man incapable of vigorous action, that's not a liability. He is both amusing and touching, and does full justice to the part. Charles Grodin, of the original cast, continues to give a delightfully satirical performance as the obnoxious son, Bobby Baby.

Program credit for direction now goes to Warner Leroy, who was at the show's helm when it went into rehearsal but was replaced out of town by Peter Glenville. The latter had sole billing as stager when the play opened in New York last October, but is not mentioned now. Leroy's staging, if memory serves, is not radically different. It is perhaps a bit broader with the comedy and less subtle on the whole, but it is lucid and it works. "Tchin-Tchin" is in healthy stage condition. Its boxoffice potential remains to be seen. Kenn.

Leonard Field Options 'Oscar,' a French Comedy

Broadway producer Leonard S. Field, back in New York after launching his London production of Murray Schisgal's play, "Luv," at the Arts Theatre in that city, has acquired the U.S. rights to the longrunning French comedy, "Oscar."

Field is now seeking an adapter for the Claude Magnier play.

That recent VARIETY story about the N.Y. Drama Critics Circle must have hit an exposed nerve. Apparently it's not cricket for outsiders to write about the club, for several members reacted with indignant columns on the subject. Whitney Bolton, of the N.Y. He omitted at least one such case, however.

"A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" must be one of the few Broadway musicals to play a full year with the entire original cast, including showgirls. According to Gordon Cramer, boxoffice head of the Alvin Theatre, N. Y., the show has broken the house boxoffice record, grossing more than $2,300,000 in its first 52 weeks. . . . Herald Tribune, and Howard Taubman, of the Times, making a special effort to be "constructive," that is, helpfully kind, in their reviews of "Hamlet," last week's opening production at the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, Minneapolis, or did it just read that way?

The Sacandaga (N.Y.) Summer Theatre, which shuttered during the season last year, probably won't relight this season on a regular basis, but will be available for local activities. James T. Brotling, president of the Sacandaga Community Theatre Assn., says there have been a few replies to ads offering the house for rental, but it's now probably too late for such a deal this year. The spot, which replaced the original wooden building burned some years ago, was dark in 1961, reopened for a time last summer under lessee management, but folded when Treasury agents, assisted by State Police, seized the boxoffice receipts for alleged non-payment of withholding and admission taxes.

PARLIAMENT IN BONN TO CONSIDER 'DEPUTY'

Bonn, May 14.

The West German Parliament is now getting into the act about the controversial play, "The Deputy," by Rolf Hochhuth. With church and theatre groups stirred by arguments whether the drama is an unfair attack on the policies of the late Pope Pius XII in regard to the Nazi slaughter of the Jews, the Archbishop Corrado Bafile in Bonn, has asked the West German Parliament to consider the question.

The Archbishop, at the request of the late Pope's sister, is bringing this action before the German Federal Parliament through Cologne judge Dr. Karl Panzer, who has made a study of the drama and its references to Pope Pius XII. It was originally planned to bring an action in the Berlin court, since the drama was given its world premiere in Berlin recently. But at the suggestion of Judge Panzer, it was decided that the local court action might have little effect.

It was also considered bringing action in Hamburg, but the performance of the play slated there has been cancelled. Frankfurt City Stage General Manager Harry Buckwitz is planning to offer the drama on the city stage repertoire this fall.

Now, 20 members of the Christian Democrat Party bringing the topic up before the Parliament, with the plea that an anti-Pope drama may antagonize other countries against Germany for trying to blame someone else for the Nazi misdeeds.

Equity's 50th Anni Spotlights Anew N.Y.'s Excellent Theatre Collection

By ROBERT DOWNING

In connection with the 1963 celebration of the 50th anniversary of the founding of Actors' Equity Association (1913), the Museum of the City of New York, beneficiary of an all-star golden anniversary show presented by Equity at the Majestic Theatre May 5 (see VARIETY 5, 8, 63), opened a special exhibition at the Museum on May 3 to honor the actors' union and also to pay tribute to May Davenport Seymour who has been curator of the Museum's Theatre & Music Collection since 1926.

Miss Seymour, born in 1883, was formerly an actress, the daughter of William Seymour, prominent actor-director. She is related to the Davenport acting clan, and her brother is the actor, John Seymour.

She made her debut in her father's stock company in Cincinnati when she was 16, in a company of which Mary Boland was also a member. In New York, Miss Seymour appeared in several productions directed by her father, including "The Lady of Lyons" at the Garrick, and "The Little Princess" at the Savoy. She appeared under Charles Frohman's management, and acted with such stars as Nat Goodwin, Grace George and Ethel Barrymore. In 1908, Miss Seymour married and retired from the stage.

In a sense, her retirement ended in 1926 when she volunteered to arrange the first theatre exhibition for the Museum of the City of New York, then housed in Gracie Mansion. The exhibition took place in the Fine Arts Building in W. 57th St. in October and November of that year.

In 1932, the Museum moved to its present home in its own building occupying the block on 5th Ave. between 103 and 104 Sts.

While the present exhibition, tracing Equity's development on and off-Broadway during the past half-century, covers most of the Museum's second floor and some of its entrance lobby, the theatre collection is permanently housed on the fourth floor of the building.

Here, in compact quarters, and even under the eaves, Miss Seymour and her first assistant, Sam Pearce, together with volunteer helpers, preside over a treasury of theatrical lore.

When Miss Seymour came to the Museum, the theatre collection comprised about a dozen programs and perhaps as many photographs. Today, the files are choked with thousands of playbills, prints, clippings, photos, manuscripts, drawings and blueprints pertaining to the New York theatre—for the collection is limited to recording stage activities in New York.

From 1732 to Date

Playbills trace Manhattan stage history from 1732 to the most recent first night. On hand are also innumerable costumes, paintings and properties, and a library of nearly 5,000 books.

The collection has grown principally through donations from Miss Seymour's family, The Players Club, and friends in the theatre. Gradually, a large segment of the public has come to realize the importance of the work that is done here to preserve local stage records, and contributions of material arrive almost daily. Visitors to the collection, exclusive of crowds attracted to special exhibitions, include not only tourists but also scholars, writers and students in theatre. The department conducts an enormous year-round correspondence with schools, universities and private researchers in all parts of the world.

Miss Seymour and her assistants first learned from Equity's Council last August that their present exhibition might become a possibility. Unremitting labor on the project has been carried on since last December. On view, arranged by seasons since 1913 and carefully labelled, are playbills, photos, sheet music, costume sketches, props, wardrobe, wigs and memorabilia from literally thousands of productions.

Several stars loaned personal treasures for the show. Florence Reed donated her Mother Goddam costume from "The Shanghai Gesture," and Dennis King made available some of the habiliments he wore in "Richard of Bordeaux." Other costumes include those worn by Katharine Cornell, Maude Adams, Jimmy Love, Jeanne Eagels, Dorothy Stickney, Lunt & Fontanne, Doris Keane, Zero Mostel, Julia Marlowe, Ethel Barrymore and Helen Hayes. The late Mayor LaGuardia's honorary fire chief's helmet, once used in the musical, "Fiorello," is also displayed.

The only six existing costume sketches by Miles White for "Oklahoma" (others were destroyed by fire) are to be seen. Such designers as Jo Mielziner, Norman Bel Geddes and Donald Oenslager are represented by models of their stage settings. The handwritten manuscript of Eugene O'Neill's first Pulitzer prizewinning play, "Beyond the Horizon" (1920), is shown, as well as Anne Nichols' original script for "Abie's Irish Rose" (1922).

At the opening of this exhibition, Miss Seymour was presented with flowers from Equity by the union's vicepresident, Frederick O'Neal. She also received a scroll in which Equity echoed the sentiments of Eugene O'Neill, whose comment, upon first seeing his works shown in the Museum was: "Miss Seymour, you've made us wonderful!"

The exhibition will continue through Labor Day.

TORONTO'S CREST TO TRY REPERTORY SKED

Toronto, May 14.

Entering its 11th season next fall, the 900-seat Crest Theatre will have a repertory policy with three plays on the active slate at a time. The first trio will likely be Sean O'Casey's "Juno and the Paycock," John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men" and Garson Kanin's "Born Yesterday," opening Oct. 15, after an Ontario tuneup tour of two of the productions.

"Scrooge," a new musicalization of Dickens' "Christmas Carol" by Dolores Claman and Richard Morris, will enter the repertory Dec. 4, and "Hamlet" will be added in January, then Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," and subsequently "Far Country," "Little Foxes" and a comedy, as yet unpicked.

The Crest, still managed by Murray Davis, who co-founded it with brother Donald Davis and sister Barbara Chilcott, will also send out a touring company, starring Miss Chilcott, to do dramatic scenes and poetry excerpts in schools.

Previous 'Shop' Tuner

Editor, VARIETY:

It was interesting to note the review of "She Loves Me." Mention is made in reference to "Shop Around the Corner," the Margaret Sullavan-James Stewart film starrer, but perhaps many forgot MGM's remake (around 1949) titled "In the Good Old Summertime," with Judy Garland and Van Johnson.

Then, "Shop Around the Corner" has been put to music before this Hal Prince legit version, all based on the Hungarian play original, "Parfumerie," by Miklos Laszlo.

Aim 'Nineteen-Seventeen' As B'way Musical Comedy

A Broadway production of "Nineteen-Seventeen," a musical with book by Norman E. Goldblatt and songs by Gene Bone and Howard Fenton, is planned for next season by Marshall Jamison, vicepresident of Leland Hayward Productions.

Goldblatt, an executive at McCall Corp., did cartoon lines for James Thurber and his written material for several television comedians.

Saratoga Seeks Stake in Culture

Saratoga, N.Y., May 14.

Pledges of $144,500 have been received in the first phase of a drive to build a Saratoga Performing Arts Center, on the State Reservation, at an estimated cost of $2,400,000. Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller has promised that the State will provide approximately $600,000 in basic preparation (roads, etc.), toward the total amount.

A major orchestra, such as the New York Philharmonic, would divide the Center's summer season with the New York City Ballet, under the tentative plan.

Center would include an open-sided theatre seating 5,200, and surrounding lawn space for 7,000 additional patrons.

In March, a group of Saratoga County business men visited Lenox, Mass., to inquire about the impact of Tanglewood (summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra).

HISTORICAL PAGEANT AT TOWER OF LONDON

London, May 14.

The Tower of London will be the setting of a new Son et Lumiere show, "A Fair White Tower," opening May 27 and continuing into mid-September. Audiences will view the show from boats moored on the Thames.

The premiere performance will benefit the Fire Services National Benevolent Fund, in honor firemen who have preserved the Tower, from the days of the Great Fire through the blitz in World War II.

The presentation, sponsored by the London Tourist Board, is being produced by Talbot Haimault for Pageantry Productions. It will star Richard Todd, Virginia Maskell and James Hayter, and will have a cast of 25.

The show can be seen by an audience of about 1,000 people from six boats moored in the Thames opposite Traitor's Gate. Henry Lindsey Succeeds Paul Baker at Baylor U.

Waco, Tex., May 14.

Henry C. Lindsey, associate professor of speech and director of extension at Kansas State Teachers College, Emporia, has been named head of the Baylor Univ. drama department, which will become part of a newly created department of oral communications. He will succeed Paul Baker who resigned with seven other faculty members several months ago over the college administration's closing of Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night" in the middle of the campus run. Abner McCall, Baylor president, said at the time that the closing came because the play violated the institution's policy toward profanity in drama productions.

The new department of oral communications, to include drama, speech, speech and hearing therapy, radio and television, will be headed by Glenn R. Capp, a member of the speech faculty since 1934.

Kenley Sets Budget for Names For 2 Ohio Summer Stock Spots

Cleveland, May 14.

John Kenley is hiking his budget to $150,000 for featured players for his upcoming sixth strawhat season at the Packard Music Hall in Warren, O. The producer says the figure does not include costs of his chorus or pit orchestra or other production expenses for 15 shows, each running seven performances.

Nine musicals are skedded, with Anna Maria Alberghetti in "Fanny" as the opener June 4, "Tender Trap," with Tab Hunter and Ann Southern, is set for June 11. Kenley will team up Howard Keel, Inga Swensen and Elizabeth Allen in "Showboat" beginning June 18.

William Bendix and Merv Griffin are the names in "Come Blow Your Horn," June 18-23, followed by "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," July 2-7 with Phyllis McGuire, of the McGuire Sisters, and Peter Palmer in the top roles. Ann Blyth in "Carnival" is set for July 9-14; and Patricia Morison, William Lewis and Richard Fredericks in "Song of Norway," July 16-21.

The Warren series will also include Edie Adams in "Rain," July 23-28; Bobby Rydell, Larry Kert and Barrie Chase in "West Side Story," July 30-Aug 4; Pat Boone in "Sunday in New York," Aug. 6-11 and Carmel Quinn and Ed McMahon in "Wildcat," Aug. 13-18.

The final three productions will have Bob Cummings and Julie Bishop in either "Kiss and Tell" or "Holiday for Lovers," Aug. 20-25; Brenda Lee in "Wizard of Oz," Aug. 27-Sept. 1, and Genevieve in "Irma la Douce," Sept. 3-8.

The producer is again giving his stars the kind of guarantee-and-profit-sharing-percentage deals that enabled Hugh Downs to take home $14,000 for his share of "Under the Yum-Yum Tree" two seasons ago. Guarantees this year will range from approximately $6,000 for Merv Griffin to $10,000 for Miss Alberghetti, Keel and Boone, Kenley said. All of his Warren shows and names are also doubling alternate weeks at his strawhat in Columbus, O. It will be the third season for the Columbus house.

Although his directorial staff has not been firmly set, two of the stagers will be Rudy Tronto and Leslie Cutler, who have worked at Warren before.

Otherwise on the summer stock front hereabouts, the Musicarnival Tent Theatre is chopping its schedule down to five summer tuneshows here. It will also cut the length of its 10th Equity season for the sake of economy. Operated by Johnny Price Jr., as producer and Robert Bishop 3d as company prez, this stand in nearby Warrensville Heights had its grosses badly dented last year by cold weather and hurricane.

A big wind ripped the top of the tent to pieces. That imposed goose-pimple hardships on audience as well as singers and dancers who had to work under starlight in last two musicals.

Musicarnival's calendar includes "Can-Can," June 24-July 7; "Merry Widow," July 22-Aug 4; "Brigadoon," Aug. 5-18, and "Unsinkable Molly Brown," Aug. 19-Sept. 1. Price thought he had secured the stock rights to "Milk and Honey" for July 8-21, but had to cross it off his list.

The cancellation was made when Milton Krantz, manager of the legit Hanna in downtown Cleveland, protested strongly to the New York producers of "Milk and Honey," which is booked for his own house the week of May 26.

Donald Dunkelberg and Harry Meadows, local actor-producers, have leased the Chagrin Falls Valley Playhouse for a stock season. Semi-pro local talent is being used.

Just Another Cabby

London, May 14.

Ever since the Princes Theatre was renamed the Shaftesbury, the new owner, Arthur Lewis, manager for Dorchester Productions, has been trying to educate London cab drivers.

Persistently, he directed a cabbie to the Shaftesbury, only to be reminded that that theatre was bombed out in the blitz. Last week he threw in the sponge and asked a taxi to take him to the Princes.

The reply was, "You're behind the times, sir, it's now the Shaftesbury."

Cohen's '64 'Barnum' Recalls Kiralfy's Spec During Chi's '93 Expo

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Alexander H. Cohen's forthcoming "Barnum" recalls an earlier extra territorial sideshow to a Word's Fair. That was Kiralfy's spectacular extravaganza, "America," which electrified visitors to the Columbian Exhibition at Chicago in 1893.

"America" was first produced at the Auditorium, Chicago's answer to New York's Metropolitan O. H. in the days when Chi was bustin out all over. It was a splendiferous show put on by the master showman whose "Around the World in 80 Days" at Niblo's was still memorable. It was later produced at the Metropolitan with a milder reaction.

That "midway" should be regarded as a dirty word is due to the silly legend that has come down from "The Streets of Cairo" and fostered by generations of "Little Egypt" in the honkytonks. The so-called "hellydance" or "Danse du Ventre" now commonplace, excited more mirth then censure in '93.

The Midway Plaisance had numerous other attractions; the Ferris Wheel, the Vienna Cafe, Hagenbeck's Circus etc. all quite innocuous.

The hellydance introduced a new word to the American parlance, "hootchy-kootchy," and it became the progenitor of all the Charlestons, Black Bottoms, Twists, Rock & Rolls in the line of succession. The lower west side Syrian district in Manhattan was known as the "hootchy-kootchy colony." "Turkish Corners" became part of American interior decoration and the "allep-oop" of Arabian acrobats resounded in vaudeville. A troupe of Dancing Dervishes, the victims of an absconding manager, appeared in the City Hall with an appeal for help but couldn't whirl a dollar out of the city treasury.

Apart from the Midway there were no "extras" at the Chicago Fair. All the magnificent exhibits for miles in extant were open for the entrance fee of 50c and as a result on a big day 700,000 people attended. It is curious that in an age of scientific marvels show biz has to be recruited to balance the budget. The Midway was an insignificant factor in '93.

JULIEN-LARS SCHMIDT PARIS LEGIT PARDS

Paris, May 14.

A. M. Julien, head of the Theatre des Nations and former head of the Paris Opera, has formed a partnership with Lars Schmid, producer-husband of Ingrid Bergman, for the presentation of plays in Paris. They will concentrate on "international" entertainment, hoping for wider distribution than simply France.

Without a firm organization, the two partnered financially on the production of three plays this season, "Sunday in New York," still current and a smash; "Hedda Gabler," with Miss Bergman, which had a respectable run and showed a profit, and "The Little Foxes," with Simone Signoret, which was mild, but lost no money.

Now they are incorporated and plotting four productions, one a musical, for next season.

'Daisy Miller' to Follow 'Writing' on Phoenix List

"Put It in Writing," which opened last Monday night (13) at the Theatre de Lys, N. Y., is the fourth of this season's presentations for Phoenix Theatre subscribers. The fifth offering of the semester at the namesake showcase on the upper eastside will be Bert Greene's adaptation of the Henry James novel, "Daisy Miller," which legit designer Stewart Chaney and Theatre 12 are co-producing for an opening next Wednesday (22).

"Daisy" is being directed by Dennis Vaughan.

Off-Broadway Reviews

The Lion In Love

Gerald Krone, Dorothy Olim & Irving Burleson presentation of a drama in three acts, by Shelagh Delaney. Staged by [illegible] [illegible]. At One Sheridan Square, N.Y.; $5.00 top weeknights, $6.00 weekends.

Cast: Hilary Beckett, John Clark, [illegible] [illegible], Stuart R. Geddes, Bette Henritze, [illegible], Ken Jenkins, [illegible], Guy Spaull, Nonie Stewart, [illegible], Jane [illegible], John J. Hill, [illegible].

If, as reported, Shelagh Delaney wrote her first play, the successful "Taste of Honey," in three weeks, she must have dashed off "The Lion In Love" in three days.

Like "Honey," this second play deals with a teenage English girl and her hard-drinking mother. But resemblances end there, for "Lion" lacks the earlier work's sharpness or vitality. It is a shapeless, tedious drama, offering little to make spectators want to return after the intermissions.

There are six major characters, in addition to the mother and daughter, and all are vaguely drawn. It becomes apparent in the final act that the mother is supposed to be the central figure, but Miss Delaney does little to probe her character or build sympathy for her, and the play just rambles to a close. Many of the scenes are puzzlingly irrelevant, and there is a fatal lack of dramatic conflict and focus.

The production adds insult to injury, with staging that ranges from fair to embarrassing and several actors who are miscast. Nonie Stewart has a few good moments, but the mother remains more of a caricature than a person. Bette Henritze and Guy Spaull perform professionally, however, and Hilary Beckett, Stuart R. Geddes and Ken Jenkins are young players who show promise.

The most interesting aspect of "Lion in Love," is unfortunately the amusing attempts of the cast to affect Lancaster accents. All speak in different styles, but make great efforts to say "oop" for "up" and "luv" for "love." Incidentally, the sight lines at One Sheridan Square, with its sunken stage and unraked seating, are unsatisfactory. But it doesn't make much difference at "Lion in Love." Kenn.

The Chief Thing

Thirteenth St. Theatre presentation of a drama in three acts, by Nikolai Evreinov. Staged and produced by Ira Morrad. [illegible]

Cast: Ronald [illegible], Andrea Lambert, Martin J. [illegible], [illegible], Bernard [illegible], [illegible], Betty Acosta, [illegible], [illegible], B. Patrick [illegible], [illegible], [illegible] Cherry, Harold [illegible], [illegible] Adams, [illegible], [illegible], [illegible] Wiener, [illegible], David Harris, [illegible], Lili Galanica, Pat Garland, Mary [illegible].

Comparisons between Luigi Pirandello and Nikolai Evreinov, author of "The Chief Thing," are inevitable. Both dealt with themes of illusion and reality, and both used the theatre and actors as settings and characters for their plays. Evreinov, however, was more deeply concerned with the religious connotations of illusion, and, if the revival at the Greenwich Mews is indication, he was not the craftsman that his Italian contemporary was.

Evreinov, who wrote this play in 1919 and died in exile from his native Russia in 1953, maintains that "the illusion of happiness is the chief thing." His leading character, a fortune teller who also is some kind of saint or divine figure, hires three actors to bring love into the lives of the lonely residents of a boarding house. They succeed brilliantly, and then reveal themselves as actors on Shrove Tuesday, amid much murky, enigmatic religious symbolism.

There are several amusing scenes in "The Chief Thing," some at the expense of the theatrical profession. But the acting is uneven, and Ira Morrad's staging doesn't get the laughs it should. There is no program credit for translation, and it is conceivable that the version used is inadequate. Whatever the case, the revival of the Russian play is only sporadically absorbing, and seems an unlikely bet for Off-Broadway success. Kenn.

The Blue Boy In Black

Ashley Feinstein presentation of a comedy-drama in three acts, by Edmund White. Staged by Ashley Feinstein; sets and lighting, Lloyd Burlingame; costumes, Theoni V. Aldredge; [illegible]. Features Billy Dee Williams. Opened April 30, '63, at the Masque Theatre, N.Y.; $5 top weeknights, $5.50 weekends.

Cast: Cicely Tyson, Billy Dee Williams, John Millerman, Alice Drummond, Stan Watt, Lois Retter, Anthony Rodlera.

During its early moments, "Blue Boy in Black" seems to be an uncomplicated, satirical comedy on race relations in which the Negro servants best their white employers by pretending to be stock types: stupid, childish and obsequious. But it soon becomes clear that playwright Edmund White has more in mind. Just what that is, however, never becomes clear.

His leading character is a scheming, bitter maid, played by Cicely Tyson, who breaks up her novelist-employer's marriage, dominates him cruelly and completely, and becomes his second wife and a famous novelist herself. She is a megalomaniac, relentlessly set on what seems to be heartless revenge on whites. But at the end she is alone and hysterical, and regresses to the "Topsy" role she played at the beginning.

White has written amusing dialog, but he has also fashioned absurd and tasteless lines. His aim remains obscure, and he fails to provide the audience with clues to the peculiar goings-on. There is, for instance, a lot of conversation about a painting of the Blue Boy, which somehow represents the leading character's deepest desires; this is never clearly explained, and like much of the play, is bewildering and ineffective.

Cicely Tyson proves again that she is a talented actress, though trapped in an impossible role, but Billy Dee Williams is stiff and understandably uncomfortable as her love. John Millerman, Stan Watt and Alice Drummond are okay in smaller parts, and the sets, by Lloyd Burlingame, and costumes by Theoni V. Aldredge are fine. But "Blue Boy in Black" is an unrewarding evening. Kenn.

Save Me a Place at Forest Lawn and The Last Minstrel

Arthur Lehman Loeb & Denis Duncan presentation of two short plays by Lorees Yerby. Staged by Denis Duncan; lighting, Robert [illegible]; sets and costumes, [illegible]. Opened May 8, '63, at the Pocket Theatre, N.Y.; $4.50 top weeknights, $5.50 weekends.

Cast for "Save Me a Place at Forest Lawn": Margaret Hamilton, Ruth McDevitt.

Cast for "The Last Minstrel": Ernest Austin, George Ebeling, Frances Foster, Melvin Stewart, Soda Thompson.

There are fine actors in the new double-bill at the Pocket Theatre, and playwright Lorees Yerby is not without talent. But neither "Save Me a Place at Forest Lawn" nor "The Last Minstrel" is satisfying drama, and the evening is interesting but not successful.

The curtain-raiser, "Forest Lawn," is a duolog between two old friends in a cafeteria. They recall old times, bicker, discuss their fears of death, and reveal a secret or two. But although there are touching moments in this study of loneliness and old age, many of the lines are flat and lifeless, and there is little momentum. Ruth McDevitt and Margaret Hamilton are both admirable, however.

"The Last Minstrel" is more interesting, and it begins promisingly. Miss Yerby has written marvelous foolishness between a mother and son, indicating that her forte is comedy. But the play soon becomes a somewhat clumsy attempt to dramatize today's racial conflicts by reversing the existing situation, presenting Negroes as the dominant group and whites as down-trodden, second-class citizens. At the end, the whites don white-paste makeup and blonde wigs and entertain an audience by degrading themselves in a white minstrel show.

There are reminders of Edward Albee and Jean Genet in this second piece, but although the gimmick is intriguing, Miss Yerby plays her trump cards early, and the work drags on to a tiresome conclusion. Once again the acting is fine. Melvin Stewart, George Ebeling, and Frances Foster do well, and Ernest Austin is excellent as the boy. But the evening's standout is Soda Thompson, an uncommonly gifted actress who is hilarious as the self-centered mother. She deserves a juicy role in a better play. Kenn.

Piano Tuner Season At Memorial Hall, Dayton

Dayton, May 14.

Paul Shawhan, a Montgomery County Commissioner, horse trainer and real estate agent, has signed an agreement to present six weeks of summer shows, mostly musicals, in the Memorial Hall here, with an option to possibility of extend the season for two more weeks.

The rental will be $1,100 a week, with the county holding concession rights, estimated to bring in about $125 a week. Shawhan, who formerly did acting himself, will be the sixth producer since the summer theatre started at the hall in 1957. The house was dark in 1959, and the 1960 season had two producers.

James Alex, of Dayton, produced shows the last two seasons, at a claimed loss of $100,000. His rent last year was $1,200 a week, plus a percentage of the gross after taxes above $20,000. Few shows hit that figure. Alex also had concession rights.

Shawhan figures he will have to gross $20,000 a week to break even. The Memorial Hall seats 2,550.

the Times, sporadically at Walter Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, and, when the impulse seized him, occasionally against a few other offending reviewers. He apparently compounded his misdemeanor in the case of Taubman by writing a letter of apology for comments made in a television program.

Neither Taubman nor the Times management appeared to be amused or forgiving over the situation, but none of the other critics has suggested the sort of reprisal used in Madrid. But then, Merrick hasn't actually assaulted a critic, at least not physically—not yet.

Shows Abroad

The Comedy of Errors is a natural to delight both kids and adults.

Because of the general air of gaiety generated by the proceedings, it is hard to understand why John Wyckham and Williams decided in favor of such stark and austere decor. There is an all-black surround to the stage, with only a platform of polished wood on three levels (like an elongated staircase) to decorate the scene. The costumes, being more colorful, are certainly more appropriate.

The easygoing nature of the comedy hardly strains the resources of the cast. Donald Sinden makes a dignified duke as Solinus, John Welsh bears himself well as the merchant of Syracuse who faces a death sentence for illegal entry into Ephesus. Ian Richardson and Alec McCowen have obvious fun as the Antipholus twins, and ditto Clifford Rose and Barry MacGregor as the Dromio twins.

Diana Rigg is an attractive and perplexed wife, Janet Suzman an appealing sister, and Susan Engel stands out as a courtesan who is also confused by the identical twins. Derek Smith's comic conjurer is one of the delights of a very enjoyable production.

When the Gravediggers Come

Melbourne, May 1.

Although "When the Gravediggers Come" was a co-winner of the 1961 Sydney Journalists' Club Award, it can hardly be considered of Aussie conception. Its author, born in Austria, has been a migrant spending the war years in China but now finally settled in Melbourne.

The play's is a Chinese town in 1949, with the inevitable arrival of the Red Army awaited with mixed feelings (for "Gravediggers" of the title, read "Communists"). The author spins a complicated web, more suited to novel form, since character come and go, with little or no build-up, tantalizingly revealing little of their backgrounds, yet dropping assorted, vague hints. Whether the writing or haphazard presentation is to blame, the show tends to be confusing.

The town is seemingly populated by a group of maniacal White Russians, headed by an ex-Czarist officer apparently planning the assassination of Stalin, plus two Eurasian brothers, prostitutes of undetermined race and many Chinese. The performances are adequate, with no standouts. The dual setting is serviceable, but no more.

Les Parachutistes (The Paratroopers)

Paris, April 27.

[illegible]

Jean Cau, a journalist and prize-winning novelist, has written a first play, "Les Parachutistes," which shows an instinct for the stage and understanding of the implications of fratricidal war such as the recent Algerian conflict. He shows a tendency toward grandiloquence, however, and the cruelty and destructiveness of war on a rationalized basis.

Although the author's intention's apparently to give his theme universality, the play is likely to have its maximum impact in France, where it has already aroused controversy. It appears to have little potential for export, at least for Broadway.

The characters include two groups, the first Algerian, including a native prostitute for the paratroopers, and the second the latter troopers themselves. The Algerians tend to talk in heroics, and the French as hardened professional soldiers.

The show is vigorously staged and acted, and should do for a moderate Paris run.

Divines Paroles (Divine Words)

Paris, April 27.

[illegible]

A Spanish play, "Divines Paroles" ("Divine Words"), written in 1920, has been given its first French production at the state-subsidized Theatre De France. A mixture of naturalism, expressionism and surrealism, and peopled with grotesque, lustful peasants in impoverished Spain, it has strange brooding power, insight and depth enough to be a good addition to the repertory of this nationalized house.

On a series of ramps resembling boulders, with houses, a church and other settings moved on floats, the drama involves an adulterous woman and the sainted husband who saves her from the cruel, hypocritical mob of villagers.

Roger Blin has staged the play solidly to project the primitive passions involved. Andre Acquart's adjustable sets project the various locales and Bois-Pipe has provided good background music. Catherine Sauvage, a singer, in her first dramatic role has the right fire and abandon as the hot-blooded woman tied to a man she despises, while Blin, doubling as director and male lead, gives weight to the complicated jealous husband.

Incidentally, another Valle Inclan play, "Bohemian Lights," has been produced at another state-operated house, the Theatre National Populaire.

Lumieres de Boheme (Bohemian Lights)

Paris, April 30.

[illegible]

This is the second play by the Spanish playwright, Ramon Maria Del Valle Inclan, who died in 1936, to be done by a state subsidized legit company. Written in 1920, it details the odyssey of an aging, blind poet looking for some ray of beauty in the lower depths of Spain in the '20s.

There is nothing realistic, but a poetic allegory of a man's quest and fall. The hero wanders through lowlife bars, is thrown into prison unjustly, finds solace with a condemned anarchist worker and finally dies near a rubbish heap while his guide robs him of his wallet.

The staging by George Wilson provides proper pacing and outsize dramatic impetus, while Jean Le Marquet's suggestive sets fit in with this seeming restatement of the Don Quixote story.

"Lumieres de Boheme" ("Bohemian Lights") appears to be a hit addition to the repertoire of the Theatre National Populaire. Wilson's enactment of the poet, plus his deft staging, are the mainstays in its success.

Le Satyre de la Villette (The Satyr of La Villette)

Paris, April 27.

[illegible]

"Le Satyre de la Villett" is a slight, inadequate treatment of the nymphet theme already promulgated widely by "Lolita." It involves a lecherous newscaster who runs off with a serpent-tongued girl of 12 in order to escape television, his mother and the assorted pressures of contemporary life.

The characters are generally exaggerated, the performance is brisk, the scenery is colorful and the overall effect unsatisfying.

Jack Brown to Operate White Barn, Near Pitt

Pittsburgh, May 14.

Jack Brown, a local actor and a graduate of Carnegie Tech, will operate the White Barn strawhat near here with a resident company of Equity members. He appeared in White Barn productions while Clay Flagg and Carl Low operated the spot.

Shows already set for the summer include "A Thurber Carnival" and "The World of Susie Wong." Fred and Virginia Jones own the property.

Guthrie Theatre

the prospect, as on Broadway, of having the shows close, since the 20-week season is set.

It may be significant, however, that while the theatre was full for the first-night opening of "Hamlet," some 300 of the 1,437 seats were empty the following night when "Miser" preemed. There were also dozens of formally attired young people in the second night audience which seemed to indicate that the carriage trade had attended the theatre's unveiling, then had sent their youngsters to the second night opening.

In any case, the venture appears certain of winding up its initial season in the black by Sept. 22 when the showhouse goes dark. The season sale for the four-play series has ballooned to 21,516 tickets.

Needs 75% Capacity

The annual operating budget for the 120-member company, including 36 actors, is $600,000, requiring 75% capacity. A week prior to opening night, the advance totaled $331,150, over half of the break-even budget. Nearly 100,000 of the 211,230 available tickets had been sold.

This classic repertory theatre was the brainchild of producer Oliver Rea and director Peter Zeisler, now respective administrative director and production director. Joining with Guthrie, they studied several large cities before settling on Minneapolis.

A community fund-raising campaign produced the $2,200,000 needed to build the theatre, hypoed by a $500,000 donation from the T. B. Walker Foundation, a local philanthropic organization. The Tyrone Guthrie Theatre Foundation was set up to operate the house, and the Minnesota Theatre Company Foundation was organized to handle repertory productions. The latter received a $118,000 Ford Foundation grant for initial, non-recurring expenses. In reserve is another Ford grant of $210,000 as a hedge against operating losses during the first three years.

Among the name performers enlisted for the opening season, in addition to Cronyn and Grizzard, were Jessica Tandy, Zoe Caldwell and Rita Gam.

Minneapolis Tribune whose editor, John Cowles Jr., is president of the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre Foundation, ran both approvals and pans by the visiting crix as well as reviews by the sheet's own reviewers and columnists. Out-of-towners generally praised the new playhouse, which still requires some external decorating.

Arbitration Formula for Union Shares of Former City B.O. Tax

A formula has been established for the apportionment among theatrical unions of the coin saved by Broadway productions from the repealed 5% New York City admission tax on legit tickets. The sharing setup is covered in decisions handed down recently by Burton B. Turkus as arbitrator in two separate cases involving the League of N.Y. Theatres and the nine unions with which the organization of Broadway producers and theatre owners now has contracts.

The tax was lifted 18 months ago on the proposition that the remittance be diverted to pension and/or welfare funds of the various legit unions. Disagreement between Equity and the League over what the former's share of the repealed tax was to be led to the initiation of an arbitration proceeding by the union. An arbitration action between the eight other legit unions and the League was also instituted in respect to distribution among those unions of the coin saved by the tariff repeal.

In the Equity-League hassle, the actor union contended it was contractually entitled to a 60% share of the remittance, and the League argued that Equity's share was to be on a proportionate basis with the other unions. The other arbitration was to determine the proportion of the remittance due the eight unions other than Equity.

The apportionment formula devised by Turkus covers five separate categories of productions. Getting the heftiest shares are Equity, Local 802 of the musicians' union and the Stagehands Theatrical Protective Union #1. The six other unions involved are the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers, the Treasurers & Ticket Sellers Union Local 751, the Theatre & Amusement Service Employees Local 54, the Theatrical Wardrobe Attendants Union Local 764, the Ushers & Doormen's Union Local B-109 and the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 30.

The percentage allotments in each of the categories to Equity, the musicians, the stagehands and ATPAM are as follows:

Productions without musicians: Equity, 64%; stagehands, 17½%; ATPAM, 5%.

Dramatic with musicians contract houses of one to four musicians: Equity, 60%; stagehands, 17%; musicians, 9%; ATPAM, 4.45%.

Musicals or dramatic with five to eight musicians: Equity, 50%; stagehands, 16%; musicians, 10%; ATPAM, 4.40%.

Musicals with orchestra of nine to 15 musicians: Equity, 50%; musicians, 16%; stagehands, 15%; ATPAM, 3.75%.

Musicals with orchestra of over 16 musicians: Equity, 50%; musicians, 20%; stagehands, 13%; ATPAM, 3.75%.

The repealed tax coin, which had been kept in escrow by the League pending the settlement of the arbitration proceedings, is figured to have passed the $2,000,000 mark. Because of the Federal tax on admissions, the net relief afforded Broadway productions on the scratching of the city tariff is 4.25%.

Half of the repealed coin which goes to Equity can be applied against the contributions the producers are to make to the union's pension fund on weekly salaries no higher than $1,500. Equity's demand for a pension plan and the League's initial refusal to accept such a condition in its 1960 contract negotiations with the union was the cause of that year's 11-day Broadway blackout. A pension program, covering a six-season spread, was eventually adopted. It called for employer contributions on actor salaries of 1% from June 1, 1960, to May 31, 1961; 2% from June 1, 1961, to May 31, 1963, and then 3% from June 1, 1963, to May 31, 1966.

Turkus also stated in his ruling on the Equity-League dispute that productions on the road shall contribute to the union's pension fund in accordance with the League-Equity formula for such payments. However, certain credits that might derive from the repealed N.Y. city tax to Broadway producers with shows out-of-town and to touring shows that come to Manhattan can be used to offset payroll percentage contributions on road entries.

Author of 'The Deputy' Gets W. Berlin Prize

Berlin, May 14.

Rolf Hochhuth has received the Young Generation prize, amounting to $1,250, presented by the City of West Berlin, for his play, "Der Stellvertreter" ("The Deputy"). The selection has brought protests from Catholic circles in Berlin. The Hochhuth drama centers on the idea that the late Pope Pius XII didn't do enough to prevent the Nazis from committing their gruesome crimes on the Jews.

Performance rights to the Hochhuth drama have been acquired by a number of West German theatres. All have to wait until 1964, however, as Harry Buckwitz, director of Frankfurter Buehnen, has an agreement with Rowohlt-Verlag, Hamburg, which controls the rights. SFB (Station Free Berlin) and Hessischer Rundfunk (Frankfurt) were scheduled to broadcast the work last week.

Lars Schmidt has obtained the rights for all Scandinavian countries, and the play has also been sold for performances in various European countries, besides England and Israel.

Stresemann Directing This Year's Berlin Fest

Berlin, May 14.

There will be no permanent successor to the late Dr. Gerhart von Westerman, the director of the annual Berlin Cultural Festival since its beginning back in 1951. The head of the local Festival will hereafter be appointed on a year-to-year basis. Dr. Wolfgang Stresemann, manager of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, has been made this year's head. Composer Nicholas Nabokov will direct the 1964 festival. Both Stresemann and Nabokov, incidentally, are U. S. citizens.

This year's Berlin Cultural Festival will mainly concentrate on music, especially Wagner and Verdi operas. Other top events will be the guest appearances of the Dutch Concertgebouw Orchestra and reportedly Darius Milhaud, who will conduct his own works with the local Philharmonic.

The 1963 Festival has been postponed for a week to Sept. 20-Oct. 15. The delay is because the city's new concert hall, the Philharmonic can't be opened before Sept. 20.

West Berlin's new Cultural Senator is Dr. Adolf Arndt, of the Social Democratic Party. He replaces Prof. Joachim Tiburtius, of the Christian Democratic Union, who now has a seat in the festival's advisory council.

to the sight-and-sound medium as a natural followup to what they've seen in the magazine.

First major project with the magazine is a special on the motion picture industry around the world, which will be the lead feature in Life's combo issue that comes out around the first of the year. Show is in pre-production stages, and bankroller, should be posted within the next few days.

Other projects include the company's first feature film, "Young Cassidy," which will be produced this year.

Formed three years ago with the basic idea of supplying networks with factual, entertaining programming, but unlike the web's own pubaffairs offerings, Seniant's producers besides proxy Graff are Robert Glenn Jr., veepee, who was an NBC producer of specials and the "Wisdom" series, a senior editor of Horizon mag and a former Life staffer; and Milton Fruchtman, veepee, who won a Peabody for his coverage of the Eichmann trial (where he organized a world network) and was exec producer of Lowell Thomas' "High Adventure" series.

Trio is proud of the fact that they are not "behind-the-desk" producers—and they top that by operating without a sales staff, figuring they can better promote the kind of "quality" programming they're interested in than a sales staff.

ducer Henry (Pete) Salomon when the series, based on World War II documentary footage, went into production in 1951. When Salomon died seven years later, Hyatt took over the later productions of Project 20.

Hyatt had nothing but affection and praise for Salomon, who, like him, had never worked at making a film until that year, 1951. Salomon thought he could put together a show with four men, including the first writer C. S. Forrester, and an editor. It turned out he needed more, one of whom was Hyatt, and this leads to the last record, perhaps the most rewarding in the frenzied tv business: With the exception of late Salomon, the Kleinerman and Clay Adams, both of whom went to CBS, Project 20 has the same production team it had in May, 1952, when "Victory at Sea" had finished its first season on the air.

stantially the same results." And, points out the agency, "We compared Nielsen—who got much criticism — against ARB — who apparently was found acceptable by the Harris Committee investigators." Statement, of course, overlooks the possible point of extra interest in Nielsen because the service is a virtual monopoly in national calculations.

After all the devotion to the numbers game however, Burnett concludes that it could be industry-wide audit groups might grow out of the investigations, and "This agency has recommended to the Advertising Research Foundation that they assume this role."

Columbia University Today, a quarterly of student origin, takes note that three of the "seven butchers of Broadway" are Columbia men, to wit, John Chapman '20 (News), Richard Watts '21 (Post) and Robert Coleman '23 (Mirror). A joint report on their views by Carey Winfrey '63 throws some unexpected detail into relief. For instance, that Watts went out for crew but gave it up and managed the fencing team instead. John Chapman, whose father was managing editor of the Denver Times that was, having neglected to study did a mock essay, asking why a clean-living American youth should be asked to admire a libertine like Bobby Burns and a dope fiend like Coleridge. This earned him an A, so he quit and became a newspaperman. Quote from Bob Coleman: "The best theatre, what I call intelligent theatre, introduces you to people who through conversation help to illuminate life."

If there is any doubt anywhere whether or not Shakespeare ought to be considered a living dramatist, Clifford Williams, resident associate director of the Royal Shakespeare Theatre in Britain gives proof positive and cites the evidence. Item: a letter the theatre received a few days back addressed "William Shakespeare, Esquire" from a girl in Grade 10 class, Beausejour Collegiate Institute, Manitoba, Canada posing a number of questions about Act 1 of "The Tempest." Typical was the one that went: "Wasn't Miranda a little young to fall in love and marry? She was only 15 years old."

4,000 Yank Sailors on Shore Leave Have Show Biz in Sydney Jumping

Sydney, May 14.

About 4,000 American sailors are currently in this key city on a 10-day stopover for Coral Sea Battle festivities. It's just like those last World War days with so many of Uncle Sam's boys on the local rialto with around $800,000 for recreational spending. The boys are covering a lot of entertainment territory—cinemas, legit, nightclubs and other spots.

Cinema trade is brisk with "Guns of Navarone" (Col), 10th week; "West Side Story" (UA), 47th week; "Longest Day" (20th), 10th week; "Mutiny On Bounty" (MGM), 10th week and "How West Was Won" (MGM) 10th week—the leaders.

Biz is likewise solid for combo ticket pix such as "Diamond Head" (Col), "Courtship of Eddie's Father" (MGM) and "40 Pounds of Trouble" (U-I).

Three legit shows current are "My Fair Lady" (repeat), "A Shot in the Dark," and "Show Boat" (revival).

It's solid trade in the key night spots such as Chevron-Hilton, Andre, Chequers, Latin Quarter and Spellbane. U.S. talent includes Rowan and Martin, Dennis Jo, Carmen Cavallaro and with Aussie talent backing the imports to good advantage.

Success at Last

Jack Gilford, in a philosophical mood in Sardi's restaurant the other night, observed that he wasn't upset over failing to win a Tony award for his supporting performance in "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," but that he was frustrated because, after appearing in three shows staged by George Abbott, he still calls the noted director "Mr. Abbott."

Spotting Abbott across the restaurant a few minutes later, he went across, greeted him and spoke for a moment. He turned and called out triumphantly, "George says it's all right to call him George."

Callas' European Tour Stalls U.S. Dates

London, May 14.

Concert impresario Sander Gorlinsky has set a new Continental tour for Maria Callas, which will tee off May 17 in Berlin at the New Opera House. She will play two other engagements in Germany, one at Dusseldorf on May 20 and the other three days later in Stuttgart.

Subsequently, Miss Callas will play a one-nighter at London Festival Hall May 31, then goes on to Paris for a concert, on June 5 at the Theatre des Champs-Elysees, and winds the tour, on June 9, at Copenhagen.

The three German dates will carry a top of $25, but the London concert at the Festival Hall is at $15 top. The boxoffice at the Festival Hall opened last Wednesday (1) at 10 a.m. and was sold out 90 minutes later.

Miss Callas will be backed for the entire tour, by a complete orchestra, batoned by Georges Pretre.

Gorlinsky is now finalizing arrangements for the star to do an American tour next season. It had been planned for her to play the U.S. this year, but her European commitments made this impossible.

Vic Samrock to Athens; Will Then Go to London

Broadway general manager Victor Samrock, who shares associate producer billing with Lyn Austin on shows presented by Roger L. Stevens, took off recently for Athens to arrange the importation by Stevens next season of the Theodore Kritas legit company. While there, Samrock will also confer with C. Kyprianos, who has Jean Kerr's "Mary, Mary," produced by Stevens in the U.S., under option for presentation in Athens.

From Athens, Samrock will go to London for the opening May 20 at the Prince of Wales Theatre of the first London production of "On the Town," which Stevens is producing in association with Oliver Smith and H. M. Tennent Ltd. He'll also discuss plans for the Stevens production on Broadway next fall of Peter Shaffer's double-bill, "The Private Ear" and "The Public Eye," which celebrates its first anniversary at the Globe Theatre, London, next Friday (10).

Woolley Left Shakespeare Folios to Yale Society

Saratoga, N.Y., May 14.

The will of Monty Woolley, filed for probate last Friday (10) in Saratoga Court at Saratoga, left $60,000 to Mrs. Gertrude Williams, his many-years housekeeper; an annual income of $3,000 to his sister-in-law and sole survivor, Mrs. James Woolley; a folio of original printings of folios of original Shakespeare plays to the Elizabethan Society of Yale Univ., his alma mater, and a cash bequest to the Actors Home in New York City.

The bearded star, who died May 6 in Albany Medical Center Hospital, at age of 74, also bequeathed his extensive collection of books to the Saratoga Public Library, cash sums to CARE, the Saratoga Hospital, where he was a patient there for several days, before being moved to Albany, and Moseley Home For Children in Saratoga County.

Spencer Eddy, his attorney and one of the executors, said the value of the estate could not be determined until the will was probated. Unofficial estimates placed the sum between $500,000 and $600,000. Woolley was unmarried.

10 Road Companies

Editor, VARIETY:

New York.

Harry Forwood wonders about the record number of road companies to any play. Young Mr. Forwood does not go back as far as 1900. In the 1903-10 season Joseph Weber sent out 10 companies of "The Climax," a four-character, one-set play by Edward Locke.

"The Climax" opened in New York April 12, 1909, and has been revived in 1910, 1919 and 1926, according to Burns Mantle. It originally starred Albert Bruning and Effingham Pinto.

Can't Tell Communist From Capitalist When They Sit Down To Buy-Sell Acts

By IVAN RUBLE

Moscow, May 14.

When the American capitalist meets the Russian Communist for the purpose of negotiating the exchange of entertainment they have one interest in common—money. There may be a lot of talk on both sides about showcasing "culture" but that is strictly secondary to the jockeying for profit.

Americans popping into Moscow to buy Russian talent for the U.S., or wishing to sell American talent for Russian halls, almost always come up against several basic hard facts: the Russians are tough traders; they want to get more than they give; they never make deals in a hurry, preferring to talk a lot and ponder a lot before exposing their views; the deals must be made via government channels and never on an individual basis, direct with the artist or the producer. What some Americans forget is that they, too, seek the best possible deal from their personal point of view and that their (the American) deals also must be shaped by government (Washington) channels. The only actual difference is that the Russian end of a transaction must be initiated and pursued with the government alone, whereas the American deal must be worked out by individuals—and then okayed, or negated, by government "experts."

In a recent VARIETY story (March 13) Edwin Rubin of General Artists Corp. of New York, upon returning to the U.S. from a Russian talent hunt, reported that he couldn't make any deals because Soviet conditions for deals are too rough. Everything he says is true. It is only his interpretation of the facts that is off-key. (Or seems so to observers here.) Best proof of which, and best answer to Rubin, being a story in the same issue of VARIETY and immediately next to his interview on page one, about Sol Hurok's activities. Hurok, pioneer in importation of Russian entertainment, has encountered the same difficulties dealing with the Russians over the years as Rubin complains about. But whereas these conditions kept Rubin from making any deals, Hurok has completed deal after deal, often taking tremendous risks, but nevertheless showing a goodly profit.

"If you want to make money," Hurok was quoted as saying here on his latest visit, "You've got to take risks."

This correspondent was present when Hurok spoke to a Russian cultural department official recently, trying to make a deal. Hurok "wept" bitterly and earnestly and convincingly about how tough things were, how many difficulties were put in his way, how much money he was risking, how little profit remained for him, etc. But he made a deal nonetheless and got his contract. Hurok risked about $500,000 on the Moiseyev Ballet deal and a bit more than that on the Bolshoi Ballet deal. Had either gone cold in midstream, or had they not turned out as successful tour attractions in the U.S., Hurok stood to lose these amounts, since the Russians refused to participate on possible losses.

Thus whether Rubin says 'no' to taking all the risks and sharing the loss, or whether Hurok takes the risk, it becomes a matter of individual showmanship, judgment, or perhaps in what makes an "impresario." Only Hurok winds up with a profit—as the Russians, government or civilian, are quick to point out.

This correspondent showed the Rubin interview to a high Russian official and tried to get a reaction. The Russian shrugged his shoulders. "Mr. Rubin knows how much he can pay and how much he can earn. He is a businessman. If the chicken is too expensive, don't buy it, don't burn it into soup. If we can't afford chicken soup, we eat borscht."

The fact that Russia pays one-way passage on these deals (on its own lines, so that it is, in fact, simply a bookkeeping maneuver) and the Americans have to pay one way in hard cash, has nothing to do with the situation, according to the Moscow reasoning. It still adds up as a simple matter of business. The show, or the actor, costs the American so much in cash, plus so much in transportation, plus so much in living expenses, which adds up to a grand total of so many dollars. What the American has to ask himself is: how does this total cost stack up against possible profit?

Hurok seems to find that it stacks up "okay." Rubin seems to find that it doesn't. (In Hurok's deal with the Royal Ballet of London, Hurok takes all the risks, also, according to understanding in New York, against all loss and sharing profit, if any—Ed.)

Assuming that a US-USSR deal is agreed upon, it must be okayed by Washington, which is not interested at all in the money angles, but sits in on the questions of what sort of entertainment is involved, how many individuals are involved, what cities they will visit at what period, etc. Thus, it was a Washington decision not to send "West Side Story" to Russia, despite the Soviet having given it the all-clear and the American end being ready to make the deal. On a reverse play, it was Washington which said no to a visit into the U.S. of the Russian Army Choir, despite the U.S. commercial channels and the Soviet government having agreed on terms. And it was Russia which rejected a Russian tour by the Ellington band, though the U.S. end was willing and ready.

Notable in the Rubin interview mentioned above was a "slipped-in" paragraph about American showmen on the scene in Moscow at the same time as Rubin. Half a dozen U.S. showmen mentioned as being there at the same time, all jockeying for deals with the Russians. Among whom was Frank Clabee of the U.S. State Department. It is Clabee who has to okay all deals from the Washington standpoint. And Clabee watches these deals, before, during and after their culmination with an eagle eye.

A current deal in the making is for the Harry Belafonte company to tour Russia. Both countries are agreed on the financial elements. But Washington is holding up the deal while jockeying goes on as to (a) the number of people in the troupe, Russia wants more, Washington wants less, (b) the number of cities and localities to be visited by the troupe. This latter is always a ticklish proposition. Some Soviet cities and localities (where factories and scientific or military work goes on) are out of bounds; Washington insists on an exact limitation in kind and in reverse for Russian troupes in the U.S.

Russian officials here insist that Clabee (and/or his predecessors in the State Dept.) are tougher than they are. This is, of course, a moot question. From Moscow it does seem as though Washington is sometimes hard to please. The real headache stems from the fact that Washington is a watchdog in these deals, whereas Moscow (government) is the central dealing agency.

will probably begin his Studebaker season with a moveover of "Mary, Mary" from the Blackstone. Marco can have access to the 1,200-seat house until Oct. 7 when, under different sub-lessees, the British revue "Beyond the Fringe" opens.

Two late-starters in the current season, "Milk and Honey" at the Shubert and "Threepenny Opera" at the Civic, both opening in May, may register more playing weeks as holdovers in the new season than in the present. "Take Her She's Mine" opens June 17 at the Blackstone for a run and barring any benefice disasters that should have the four principal houses engaged for at least part of the summer.

"A Man for All Seasons" is set for Sept. 20 at the Blackstone and presumably can run until "Never Too Late" moves in Nov. 4. "How To Succeed" is due Nov. 11 at the Shubert for probably the remainder of the season, and "Camelot" has a Dec. 2 opening at the 3,600-seat Opera House for a run up to 20 weeks. All four will be in the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription series, as will "Virginia Woolf" and possibly "Beyond the Fringe." TG-ATS may also add "A Thousand Clowns," still an uncertain entry.

There were a total of 18 shows in the record 1961-62 season and only two longruns, the 20 weeks of "Sound of Music" and 27 of "Bye Bye Birdie." If the forthcoming semester can chart as many shows, it's a likely bet to set the new alltime high gross in Chicago.

Aussie Equity, Musicians Fighting Talent Imports

Melbourne, May 14.

The Musicians Union and Actors Equity here are trying to vote overseas entertainers coming to Australia to work. The plan is being strenuously opposed by the Theatrical Proprietors' Association of Australasia.

Equity is trying to enforce a ruling that any overseas entertainment contain some Aussie talent in show. The musicians want one Aussie employed for every tooter brought from overseas and even then would like to accept overseas musicians only if they did not affect local employment. Equity wants to oppose visits by overseas artists if suitable acts can be found here.

The two organizations are now formulating plans which will call for theatrical managements submitting names of desired overseas artists for approval. That would precede signing of contracts or application to the Immigration Dept. for working permits.

State 'Guys' 'Wizard,' 'SP' For Charlotte Summer

Charlotte, N. C., May 14.

Among the headliners to appear at the Charlotte Summer Theatre during its 10-week season beginning June 18 are MacDonald Carey in "Guys and Dolls," Brenda Lee in "The Wizard of Oz" and Betty Johnson in "South Pacific."

Stanley Waren, the spot's producer, has been auditioning resident company talent in New York.

Bob Newhart to Play Legit Stand in Chi

Chicago, May 14.

Bob Newhart will play his first legit stint in a two-week stock engagement starting May 31 at the Chicago Melody Top. The summer theatre, which normally does musicals, will make an exception in comic's case because he doesn't sing.

He'll appear in a straight play to be selected. The theatre is in the western suburbs, not far from the comedian's family home.

Bits of London

London, May 14.

Annie Ross, Oscar Brown Jr. and Fred Emney have been signed for William Donaldson's presentation, "Wham! Bam! Thank You, Ma'am!" which starts rehearsals in June.

The Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, celebrated its 300th birthday April 30.

Flora Robson has been hospitalized with an eye infection and her understudy, Margaret Lane, has been substituting in "Close Quarters."

Peter O'Toole and Georgia Brown are being paged for Lionel Bart's next musical, "Maggy May."

Peter Bewberg has taken over the Aldwych Theatre for a month starting yesterday (Mon.) He'll present Micheal MacLiammoir in two separate one-man shows, "The Importance of Being Oscar" and "I Must Be Talking to My Friends." Another offering by the producer will be Vittorio Gassman in "The Heroes."

'Sitting On The Bench'

Inez Robb's syndicated column, "Sitting On The Bench," dated May 10 in the N.Y. World-Telegram & Sun, takes the American press to task for "sitting" on the Rockefeller romance as a prime example of "managed" news. She details (1) this has been an "open secret" story in every U.S. newspaper office for the past 18 months, citing that "starry" photo of "Happy" Murphy and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller at the latter's first inaugural ball in 1959; (2), no newspaper refrained from printing "unsubstantiated" stories about JFK's alleged first marriage (prior to Jackie); and (3) could this be because ". . . the American press (is) largely controlled and owned by members of the Republican party . . ."

Perhaps as best proof that there is a free press, at least so far as fresh within newspaper operations are concerned, was this footnote to her column: "Inez suggests she knows more about Rockefeller's life than we know. She has a typewriter and an allotted space. Why didn't she write it?—Editor."

Forbidden In Philly

Ralph Ginzburg, publisher of Eros, slick quarterly, blasted Philadelphia at his arraignment in U.S. District Court on charges of using the mails for non-mailable materials. "By indicting Eros as obscene," Ginzburg said, "Philadelphia has taken a major step toward characterizing itself as the most stuffy and puritanical city in the nation. 'Banned in Boston' can now be replaced by 'Forbidden in Philadelphia'."

In between blasts Ginzburg pleaded not guilty to 28 counts. Another 28 counts were lodged against three New York City corporations in which he is a principal: Eros Magazine Inc. (10); Documentary Books Inc. (9) and Liaison News Inc. (9).

Benjamin Franklin, Philadelphia's patriarch was described by Ginzburg as "a man who could take the sexual facts of life in his stride. He must be turning over in his grave over this indictment of Eros," the publisher declared. Judge Ralph C. Body set May 17 for preliminary arguments on a motion by defense attorney to have the case dismissed.

Moore's Research

Robin Moore, novelist-son of Sheraton Hotel chain board chairman Robert L. Moore, is getting material for his new novel based on guerilla warfare, via five-week workout with guerilla trainees in Viet Nam and Laos. He left yesterday (Tues.) for a tour with the Army at an unnamed base where he'll work out with paratroopers.

Moore is a member of the chain's board of directors and has been working in the public relations area. He has taken a leave of absence from his hotel posts while working on this tome.

Distaffers' Books

Emily (Mrs. Glen) Neville, wife of the editor of the N. Y. Daily Mirror, herself a Mirror and N. Y. Daily News alumna, has published her first novel for young people, "It's Like This, Cat" (Harper & Row; $3.50) and as the title indicates it focuses around a tomcat. The feline is background to a New York boyhood adventure, utilizing the panorama of the city as a backdrop to family fealty and teenage romance. Mrs. Neville has written many stories about children—they have five of their own, from six to 16—but this is her first published novel.

Barbara Bel Geddes, actress-daughter of designer Norman Bel Geddes, also drew on her own personal background with two young daughters and has put between covers what she calls a "happy" book—and it is all of that—which she blithely calls "I Like To Be Me" (Viking; $2.50). While she soars into fanciful delights about what and whom the central cartoon character would like to be, the conclusion remains that she'd "like to be me." In private life Miss Bel Geddes is the wife of legit director Windsor Lewis. Abel.

"The Famous Presidents of the United States" by Marvin Borie, screen writer and now editor of Screenplay Magazine, comes out this month, as a Dodd-Mead publication.

Sam Butz, 87, veteran Florida newspaperman, died at his Gainesville, Fla., home April 25. Butz recently gave a 16th Century edition of the Great Bible, which he and Mrs. Butz brought from England, to the University of Florida library as its millionth volume.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

San Francisco.

One of the difficulties L.A. has in overcoming the superiority of S.F. is inbred culture. By now with a 3-to-1 population edge L.A. may have as much or more art than S.F., but it is so scattered and so lost among the millions of hard-breathing carnivals that populate the land its art is hard to find. S.F., on the other hand, is such a snug town that if you move a few miles in any direction you either find what you are looking for or you fall overboard into the bay or the sea.

UCLA in L.A., for instance, has designated one of its buildings in honor of the late Kenneth Macgowan, who headed its theatre arts courses when he saw some depressing handwriting on a 20th Century-Fox wall 20 years ago. But S.F. not only has memories, it has a living Sam Stark.

Sam Stark's Golden Treasury

It not only has Sam Stark, it has three generations of his family's theatrical memorabilia and it puts them on exhibit on occasion. The moist eyes from resultant nostalgia raises the bay so high riggings of ships have difficulty getting under the bridges.

The last time Sam unleashed his treasures was at the University of San Francisco, which is a Jesuit college on one of its many hills. Father William J. Monihan handled that one. It was a smash success. On the wall into the exhibits were two small posters. One advertised Mr. Harry Arden, the retired actor and boy orator, and the other acclaimed T. N. Dentney "who will give an Illusion of Delirium Tremens." These were from 1860.

Facing the entrance was a tall glass case, wholly devoted to actors who have played Shakespeare's "Hamlet," all the American actors since 1870 and English actors dating back to 1790.

This whole exhibition consisted of programs, sometimes billboards, photographs of the actors and even little short bios. Nance O'Neil was one of the few women who played "Hamlet." She did this at the Greek Theatre in Oakland on Aug. 23, 1904. Tommy O'Toole played the gravedigger in that same performance, and he was over to see the exhibit.

In another case were props of De Wolf Hopper when he played the "Mikado" in 1886, which must have been before Hedda's time.

Which Queen Of Roumania, The Playwright?

Exhibits of Laurette Taylor show she opened in "Peg O' My Heart" in San Francisco before it went on to Broadway. The writer-producer, J. Hartley Manners, married Laurette Taylor but dedicated the play, according to this exhibit, to the Queen of Roumania.

A poster of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" showed it opened in 1852 and the original cast included W. J. Lemoyne, George Fox and a Miss Barber.

Ina Claire was represented in the exhibit and she attended the opening day. She is married to an attorney, William Wallace, and lives in Oakland.

Blanche Bates played in "Under Two Flags" and "Darling of the Gods." Her posters were on exhibit. Dustin Farnum's opening in "The Virginian" must have been in 1903 because they were in their 27th week in 1904. The producer was Kirke LaShelle. His son is an attorney in SF.

According to Sam Stark's revelations, David Belasco played in "Men and Women" in 1890. This was before he wore a Roman collar offstage.

Maude Adams played in "Romeo and Juliet" in 1899. Sarah Bernhardt's posters revealed a "farewell tour" in 1905. She was still having them as late as 1916.

Featured was a sharp photograph of the South San Francisco Opera House, which opened in 1888. Frank Daniels in "Little Puck" opened it. The house is still standing, but was condemned by the Fire Dept. so is not in use.

Then there was an etching of Joseph Jefferson, an English actor who lived in 1774-1832. He made his American debut in 1795 and headed the dynasty of the Jefferson family of whom Joseph Jefferson III, 1829-1905, achieved great success in his characterization of "Rip Van Winkle." Joe the Third was postered as appearing at the Globe Theatre, Boston.

Another display showed the Four Cohans and their signatures—George M. Cohan, 1878-1942, Jerry Cohan, 1848-1917, Helen, 1854-1928, and Josephine, 1876-1916.

Cole Porter's first musical on Broadway, "See America First" was fortified by a display of a rave review by Nat Sohr in the N.Y. Dramatic Mirror, March 4, 1916. What did VARIETY say about this patriotic traveling of Yale's composer?

There were posters of Frank Fay, and Jack Benny as the boy violinist, Bert Williams, Fanny Brice, Dolly Sisters, and even William Demarest at Keith's Palace in 1916.

Next were panels each one devoted to a star in different roles, and memorabilia which included Frances Starr, Virginia Harned, Leo Ditrichstein, Viola Dana, Elsie deWolfe, Mrs. Fiske, William Faversham, Marion Davies, Elsie Ferguson, Maxine Elliott, Otis Skinner, Arnold Daley, Ruth Chatterton, David Garrick, Mrs. Pat Campbell (three programs), William Gillette, Ada Rehan, David Warfield, William Collier, Mary Mannering, James Hackett, Lillian Langtry, Julia Marlowe, Richard Mansfield, Modjeska, Duse and a big double panel of the Barrymores—mother and father, Lionel, John Drew and Ethel and John.

'Stop Stealing Our Stuff'

There's a panel of negotiations from D'Oyly Carte's attorneys in longhand ordering the San Francisco company to stop pirating Carte's productions of Gilbert & Sullivan.

Other posters featured Marie Doro (in "The Billionaire"), Lillian Russell, Jefferson de Angelis, Edna May, Chauncey Olcott, Trixie Friganza, Marie Dressler, James T. Powers, Eddie Foy, Della Fox, Anna Held, Eddie Leonard, Weber & Field, William Crane, Vernon Castle, William S. Hart (as he played in "Ben-Hur"), Klaw & Erlanger, Wilton Lackaye, Frank Daniels, George Arliss, Ellen Terry, Richard Bennett, Henrietta Crosman, Sara Allgood, Fred and Adele Astaire, Amelia Bingham, Blanche Walsh, Rose Coghlan, James O'Neill, Billie Burke, Jane Cowl and Pauline Frederick.

In the hallways and stairs they had big posters of buxomly curvaceous gals, some with, some without, names—come-ons for the big show inside.

Started In Philly? Tiens!

In Sam's residence on Jackson Street the whole second floor is devoted to this research. There everything is card indexed. He has 30,000 photos and ticket stubs, 10,000 playbills. They run back at least a century. He has one review of every show that played Broadway since 1880.

Sam's grandfather started the collection in Philadelphia. He specialized in Shakespeare. Sam's mother and Sam himself broadened the collection. Sam even lured his wife Marriet into the field.

But you know what happens when you become an authority. Paradise telephone you from Paris at 3 a.m. to find out if Cole Porter sold soft coal or hard coal.

It is a lot of fun for people who research with the hope of being interrupted. Sam Stark likes interruptions and San Francisco is mighty glad in moving from Laguna he didn't pitch camp among the goofing stalls in LA.

The collection will eventually go to Standford. By then Palo Alto will probably be annexed to SF.

Minneapolis Repertory

stage. "A major advantage is being able to do four plays in one year," Miss Tandy said. "I couldn't do that on Broadway, or in case I could, three of the four would probably be flops."

Of importance to all members of the repertory company, too, is the absence of the five-day clause which face actors in Broadway shows, but which the repertory player escapes. The clause enables the producer to relinquish an actor's services at any time during the first five rehearsal days if he's dissatisfied with the work.

"There's a kind of security here that Broadway doesn't offer," Cronyn believes. "There's no axe hanging over your head, no necessity of trying to impress the director or producer during the first days of rehearsal. You know that you're set once rehearsals start, that you're going to be with this company for a long time come hell or high water."

A result of this security, the Cronyns say, is that company morale remains high. "The spirit of the Guthrie company is the finest of any I've been in," Miss Tandy says. "There's sanity in this type of production," Cronyn adds. Missing are the nervewracking New York rehearsals, the out-of-town tryouts with their numerous script changes and the doubts over Gotham critical reception which can negate many months' work.

The Cronyns say they're happy here, too, because of generally attractive working conditions and the stimulation sparked by working with Guthrie and Douglas Campbell, his associate director. Favorable conditions here include having a playhouse in close proximity to your residence, and "being able to go home at night when the show is over instead of to a hotel." It's also stimulating, the actor declares, to have an exciting theatre in which to rehearse and being able to work on the same stage "on which you know you're going to be performing."

However, repertory work of the Guthrie theatre variety isn't without some drawbacks, the Cronyns admit. "One disadvantage is committing ourselves to nine months," the actor explains. Although the first Guthrie season will be only 20 weeks duration, cast members have to spend virtually all their time here, from February through Sept. 22 when the curtain rings down. This produces security, but also rules out offers of other work in films and television.

The nine-month commitment amounts really to a full year and may discourage some top actors form joining the Guthrie company in future seasons, Cronyn believes. While availability of stars thus may be something of a problem for the local theatre in subsequent seasons, there'll always be enough first-rate people willing to come here, in the actor's opinion. Their availability, he believes, often may be influenced by such factors as their financial situation.

Having recently finished work in the films "The Birds" and "Cleopatra," respectively, Miss Tandy and Cronyn felt that they could accept the financially less rewarding aspect of repertory work. But they note that financial limitations will very likely prove to be a deterrent to many top b.o. figures in future years.

"The important thing, though, is that the theatre now isn't just Broadway any more," Miss Tandy concluded. "What is important is first-rate theatrical work."

Common Mkt. Needs U.S. Pix

distrib deals with the American companies.

This latter preference, the New York visitor emphasized, just didn't happen out of the blue. It is, instead, a consequence of the shrinkage in overall European film attendance. Time was, in the good old days, when a European producer could finance a projected film largely on the basis of making a number of separate distribution deals on a territorial basis. When the market began to shrink, and fewer and fewer pictures could be called "surefire" in advance, the territorial distribs became more tightfisted. The new government subsidies could not make up the difference, and banks, to insure their loans of increasing size, began to demand worldwide preproduction distrib deals.

Thus, says the American exec, the importance of the U.S. majors which now play "a constructive role" in European film affairs, especially as "a stabilizing factor" during the current series of crises in continental production. As he sees it, the American distribs, as well as producers, are way ahead of their European counterparts in reorganizing to meet the problems of today, meaning competition from tv and all sorts of other new leisure time-grabbers.

Exhibs' Necessity

Exec feels confident, too, that nobody would "dare" try to exclude U.S. pix from the Common M countries. Exhibitors, repping the CM's total of 25,000-plus theatres, would rise up and throw such protectionist rascals out. They need our pictures, and need them badly. The Euromarket is shrinking, he acknowledges, but the U.S. share of that smaller total is getting bigger.

Exec implied that one of the major problems which CM film producers must solve is the dilemma presented by the fact that today "75 to [illegible]% of all film revenues are made by no more than one-fourth of all the films put into release annually." In the exec's opinion, the U.S. companies have met this problem via their far-flung international production investments. "That is, they are making a higher percentage of winners."

Some figures, recently released in Par[illegible]ed to support the exec's analysis [illegible] the strength of U.S. pix in the CM scene. In the Italian market, for example, U.S. pix now account for 48.0% of total film receipts; against Italo pix' 41.9% and French pix' 2.2%. In the French market, French pix account for 38.17% of total receipts, followed the U.S. pix' 30.9% and Italo pix' 5.40%.

In the total Common Market, U.S. pix account for 35.9% of all revenues, while product from France, Italy, Germany, Belgium and Holland together account for 40%. That means a great dependence on U.S. filmmakers.

the bonifaces but business now has a built-in excuse to save money. It's as simple as that. What's more, the customer who formerly had this kind of "entertainment" lavished on him not only has complete awareness and understanding but magnanimous compassion. Result is that when a sales exec does spring for a pair of tickets or a lunch, it means even more than heretofore when everything was so freely "deductible."

However, Uncle Sam is expected to come out with a "freer" ruling on entertainment spending next month. If not, it may wreck still more joints.

News' Editorial

Many a New York boniface has clipped last week's N. Y. Daily News editorial, "Why Not Scrap This Law?", and mailed it to Washington. The News observed:

"The Internal Revenue Service's regulations under Congress' new law on expense account income tax deductions go on stirring up more and more unforeseen troubles.

"Their main effect up to now has been to scare large numbers of people out of business entertaining. That hurts restaurants, saloons, theatres, night clubs, etc., and kills off a lot of jobs in these areas.

"It seems more and more apparent that Congress made a mistake when it adopted this law—which in effect presumes every businessman to be a crook until he proves he isn't.

"Why not, then, just junk the expense account law?"

To this, all concerned say, "Yes verily!"

Phoenix's 8 El Foldos; All Blame Revenooers

Phoenix, May 14.

Eight niteries abruptly folded in the Phoenix area in the past 30 days, leaving in their wake a trail of bad checks, stiffed creditors and unpaid employees. An estimated 450 sundry restaurant employees were dropped into Phoenix's overpopulated unemployment pool. Cecil Underwood, business agent for Local 586, complains that these foreclosures have affected 34 musicians and reports that the el foldo clubs owed their respective house bands from $250 to $1,000.

This exodus started when Basin Street West was forced into bankruptcy. The Flame, a 40-year-old Phoenix landmark, Diamond Lil's, Andy's, Fascutter, La Maisonette, Black Angus and the Lazy K followed in rapid order.

Joe Banks head of the Arizona Restaurant Assn., cites three reasons for this condition; inexperienced management, undercapitalized but, Banks insists—and many observers agree—the major contributing factor to this mess, abrupt bistro departure is the IRD's expense account feulup. He reports that monthly business is off 18%. Projecting his figure to 12 months would predict a whopping $20,000,000 annual deficit. "I can see no reason for optimism about the future," comments Banks, "and until the tax people clearly spell out the regulations concerning expense accounts this entertainment depression will continue. Furthermore," Banks adds, "the Revenue Dept. must be made to realize the enormous volume of legitimate business consummated while being discussed in restaurants and taverns."

N.Y. Importers

recent purchase of two mid-Manhattan art houses, the Little Carnegie and Normandie, would seem to indicate that he will become an artie exhibition force locally, as well as film producer ("Long Day's Journey Into Night" and the upcoming "Fool Killer"). Unknown now is whether or not Landau's purchase of Jean Goldwurm's Little Carnegie will mean that Goldwurm (Times Film) will cut down on his foreign film purchases. At the moment Times has one of its biggest hits with the current Italo "Mondo Cane." This follows a couple of years more full of prestige ("Meda," "Frantic," "Eclipse," etc.) than of profit.

Other Familiars

Although a successful member of New York's importing fraternity for many years, Richard Davis took on new status last year when he affiliated with Columbia to handle its artie product after Ed Kingsley's death. The critical acclaim which met the French "Sundays and Cybele" launched his new Davis-Royal Films with great promise. Another familiar "new" face is Clem Perry, indie distrib as well as a vet of Rugoff Theatres and Lopert Films, who was just recently named to head Metro's art film activities.

Although still not a "giant" among the indies in terms of total number of releases or in terms of unlimited financial resources, Janus Films has in the last three years become one of the steadiest of the profit-turners, handling consistently high quality product acquired at the right price. As the result of its success with the Ingmar Bergman imports and others, Janus has branched out not only into its own 16m distribution but also coproduction (via the current "Sparrows Can't Sing").

Costs Going Up

Meanwhile, though all signs tend to indicate that costs of indie distribution will force more and more of the little guys out of business, the past year has seen the formation of more small and medium-sized distrib companies than in any one year of the past. Among them:

Audubon Films, headed by Radley Metzger and Ava Leighton, who seem to have hit the jackpot with the French exploitation meller-drama, "I Spit On Your Grave."

Seneca Prods., formed by three young New Yorkers, with the Japanese "Yojimbo" and French "Zazie" on its current sked. Ironically, the Seneca owners' own, made-in-New York production, "The Light Fantastic," will go out via Embassy Pictures.

Major Films, formed by William Reich, formerly American International Pictures' foreign distribution veep. First release: the Italo "Love and Larceny."

A.T.U. Films. First release: another Italo comedy, "Fiasco In Milan."

Maco Films, formed by Gabriel Doubkin, formerly number two man at the French Film Office in New York. First release: the French spectacle, "La Fayette."

Angel Productions, formed by Meyer Ackerman, Sandy Weiner and Argentine director Leopoldo Torre-Nilsson, to handle the U.S. release of the latter's pix. First release: "Summerskin," next, "Hand in The Trap."

sion must be granted as that of the theatre and literature.

"The time has now passed when the cinema was thought of as 'family entertainment,' with every film made being suitable for all ages," he reported. "Stories which, a few years ago, we would most definitely call 'questionable' are not now being found 'objectionable' by the public at large in light of changing tastes and conditions. It is a well-known fact that many films we banned some years ago—or cut drastically—are now shown on tv without protest.

"Because of the changing times, the work of the censorship board has changed in keeping with public preference. We no longer place emphasis on the cutting of films but on classifying them. In this way, films are directed to audiences for whom they are intended. We would point out that parents should assume their responsibilities where children are concerned and be guided by our Adult classification."

Italy Presses U.S.

Of the 202 American-made films, 144 were deemed suitable for family audiences, 30 were classified as Adult, and eight were placed in the Restricted category. Of the 47 British flickers submitted, 29 were suitable for family audiences, 13 were classified as Adult and only five were Restricted. One Canadian-made full-length film—Arch Oboler's "One Plus One"—was Restricted during the 12-month period.

Figures for foreign language films show the desire of ethnic groups for features in their native tongues, said the Silverthorne report, this resulting in the 30% increase in the number of Italian and German films brought into Ontario since last year.

Ontario censorship board received 512 features for examination from the following countries:

U.S.A.	202
Great Britain	47
Canada	1
China	1
Denmark	1
France	17
Germany	52
Greece	33
Hungary	1
Italy	135
Japan	5
Mexico	2
Poland	3
Russia	2
Sweden	4
Yugoslavia	4

The board looked at 17,725 pieces of advertising matter and rejected 251 — half the total of the preceding 12-month period.

Sixteen theatres in Ontario closed during the year; three drive-ins were opened. The total of licensed theatres in Ontario is 422.

Finance Ministry to increase its number of film import licenses. But he now thinks 300 should be the limit.

Although he points out that films from Communist countries have only slight market value here under normal conditions, Shiotagu says they could have a harmful impact with the pressurized support from such sympathetic groups as labor unions, teachers' associations and student organizations. He notes also that there will probably be only token financial demands for the showing of these films.

"This would be free propaganda for Communism," Shiotagu said. "It would not be wise for us to help them. These pictures, especially those documentaries dealing with scientific subjects, would have an effect on impressionable youngsters."

"The Japanese government is not so foolish not to realize this," he added. "The American film companies should also realize these circumstances."

All three networks went on the air about 7 a.m. Tuesday (14) morning, and followed Maj. Cooper through his early paces. Then there was a good deal of the usual hack and fill, the time consuming expedients broadcasters followed to keep hold of an audience until blastoff occurs. The tv network teams seemed to be most competent and relaxed, characteristics obviously growing out of the experience with five other U.S. orbital flights. But by about 10 o'clock in the morning, Eastern Standard Time, their competence could only keep matters from getting screamingly boring. Without that takeoff, the previous huff and puff was a waste. The estimate of loss, incidentally, includes time consumed on the air Tuesday.

All the webs, regardless of the immediate additional cost (on top of Tuesday's losses), will cover the ultimate takeoff. Sooner it happens, the more coin can be salvaged.

will look over the settlement. Membership will get copies of the agreement when it gathers for its annual meeting in New York on June 6. No difficulty is presently anticipated by the union as far as the ratification of the new deal is concerned.

Settlement may obviate a court dispute between the two parties in which the SDG had sought arbitration to settle a disagreement over how pension payments were to be made to makers. Directors wanted weekly pay regardless of how many days a lenser worked in that week and the FPA wanted to pay according to the actual days worked. The N.Y. Appelate division recently sustained the Guild's motion for arbitration but the pension matter has reportedly been worked out in the new pact agreement.

TV CRITICS NO LONGER OVERSET

Unions Yelp, 'It's Filmic McCarthyism'; But Can't Stop 'Women Weep' Reels

By ROBERT ROTH

Chicago, May 21.

Despite four negative reviews by the National Labor Relations Board in the past two years, an anti-union film, "And Women Will Weep," is still one of the most effective weapons in management fights against union organizing in the Midwest.

Chi labor attorneys were only mildly heartened by the most recent (and strongest) NLRB decision earlier this month which ordered a new election among employees of a suburban firm after sharply criticizing the use of "Women" by the company as a propaganda device.

In this particular case, NLRB chairman Frank McCulloch, speaking for the majority of the board, stated: "The motion picture is a much more powerful instrument than the printed or spoken word in arousing emotions and influencing attitudes. Not only is its initial impact greater, it also has a more lasting effect."

Tax Re-Compute On One Big Yr. Moving Nearer

Washington, May 21.

In the first Congressional action taken on President Kennedy's 1963 tax proposals, the House Ways & Means Committee Monday (20) gave tentative approval to a five-year income tax average plan designed to ease the bite on those with highly fluctuating incomes, such as farmers, athletes, novelists, playwrights, composers.

Treasury department estimates are that such people will save $40,000,000 annually if the provision is enacted.

If it passes, as is now expected, the provision would take effect with 1964 income tax returns.

RISING I.Q. AND PAY FOR BREED

Over the past four weeks NBC brought in to New York some 70 television critics/editors from 30 key cities around the country to "case" the network's behind-the-scenes 30 Rock precincts and to preview the web's '63-'64 programming schedule. From a purely public relations-publicity standpoint, it's paid off in handsome space dividends for NBC, and will probably continue to do so for months to come.

U.S. Big Biz Shines Up Its Image; Half-Billion in Industrial Films

By EDDIE KALMUS

U.S. industrial film production, predominantly an eastern section activity, has swollen to a volume estimated in excess of $500,000,000 yearly. This is largely due to continued and growing use by business of filmed commercial and public image material for presentation at sales, stockholder and other meetings. Also touring shows courting institutional prestige for trademarks.

Budgets for such productions range anywhere from $10,000-$25,000 for a small meeting up to $50,000-$100,000 for a pretentious touring production. On occasion corporations integrate live talent with the filmed portions. Some of these dramatized showcasings have been sent abroad in cooperation with the firms' overseas franchises.

An example of the integrated format is a presentation currently touring for Owen Corning Fiberglass. In this case, there are eight live performers, a portable stage, lolsa equipment and filmed appearances of Joseph Cotten, Ray Bolger, Nancy Walker and Charles Nelson Reilly. This show cost

CBS' $12,000,000 Asking Price For Election Package

Indicative of the spiraling costs of network coverage of Presidential elections is the estimated $12,000,000 price tag being tacked on CBS-TV's '64 election package.

The $12,000,000 represents estimated time and program costs for coverage of the conventions and election results, as well as election specials. Of course, the sponsor tab for these events is way below the bookkeeping figure of time and program costs to the network. How much CBS-TV will retrieve in program and time costs is still very much up in the air at this point in time. Web is understood to have yet to present its election package to possible sponsors. Under CBS-TV's longterm deal with Westinghouse, it has first refusal on the package.

Vietnam's 'No Dancing' for Duration But the Same Old 'Hostessing' Exists

By SANFORD MARKEY

Saigon, May 21.

The young lonesome GI, caught by the sentimental warmth of the Vietnamese accented English lyrics of "Stardust," jumped to his feet when the song was over and shouted to his cohorts in the bar:

"We can't let the Confucius take her."

So goes the story making the rounds at Saigon where Madame Ngo Dinh Nhu, having banned all dancing for the duration of the war, has given the more than 12,000 Yanks new avenues for fun and pleasure.

The estimated 15 major dancehalls in Saigon and adjacent Cholon, the Chinese section, have been converted either into vaudeville theatres, or restaurants, bars and movie houses. The dancing girls, estimated at around 15,000 by some government officials, have drifted into a field of other jobs—singing or serving waitresses, hostesses, entertainers of various sorts, etc. for both the GI's and the growing number of tourists who step for a look-see in the land of the not-so-cold war.

The singing B-girls, entertainers and hostesses are numerous and accessible. The soldiers find them. The tourists can, too.

Entertainment-wise Saigon is a ghost of its former self, although the major hotels offer entertainment features, and the night clubs have shows, too. Pix are flourishing, and the film output is growing both for tv and cinemas.

Saigon's newest hotel, the Caravelle, has been presenting a series of weekend specialty shows. One $80, for example, was a two-performance late Saturday night fashion offering with Miss U.S.A., Carolyn Joyner, Miss Ire-

LIBERTY BELL AWARD GOES TO ED SULLIVAN

Philadelphia, May 21.

Ed Sullivan, who observes his 15th tv anni June 22, received the annual Gold Liberty Bell award for 1963 from the Radio Television Advertising Club of Philadelphia last week.

TRAC's citation read, "Thanks for a really big show," and Sullivan returned the solicitude by crediting a Philadelphian, Stan Lee Berns, with being the one who gave him the best advice he's ever received as regards being an effective video performer. The variety show emcee said early in his career he had a tendency to look straight into the camera and follow the red light on "live" like a bird dog. Berns advised, "Talk to the audience. Forget about the tv cameras, and you'll be 100% more effective."

Sullivan also said that Philly was the first place he noticed people recognized him on the street (during a visit from New York in the early days of the show). "It suddenly dawned on me," said Sullivan, "that television would be the medium with the greatest impact in the entertainment business."

Fox Gets Record 192G From Speci for 'Cleo'

Rome, May 21.

Twentieth-Fox has received cash advance guarantees of 120,000,000 lira (approximately $192,000) from the Speci circuit for the three-theatre Rialto preem of "Cleopatra" in Rome, Milan and Naples. Deal was negotiated by Carlo Caneti, general manager of Doer-Fox, Rialto affiliate of 20th-Fox, and Bruno Pozzi, chairman of Speci.

The $192,000 total, covering pic's engagements at the Super-cinema in Rome, Missori in Milan and Augusto in Naples, is said to rep the largest cash guarantees ever negotiated in Italy.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your piece, "In Re Subtitles for Legit" filed from Paris and printed in last week's VARIETY, is naive. It indicates that since subtitling for the stage has never been resolved satisfactorily that it's impossible to do so in future. Subtitling for the stage is just as simple as it is for films and poses no great problems and is in fact a reality. Teleprompter has tested it for me in a Broadway theatre.

Ralph Alswang, who will be technical director of "Rugantino," assures me that he is satisfied with the tests, and "Rugantino" will open on Broadway on Saturday evening, Feb. 8, properly subtitled, and hopefully it will be the first in a long series of foreign language imports which our theatre-goers will be able to enjoy as a result of this application of a technical achievement.

Epidermis Epic's Ashamed Partners

Minneapolis, May 21.

A nude feature film made hereabouts for around $50,000 and likely to gross $100,000 in rentals is being peddled with a set of phoney names. Behind false credits lurks two regional theatremen, William Frank and Harold Engler. Title of release is "Babes in The Woods" and the distributor is called Aurora.

Columnist Will Jones of the Morning Tribune did not name names but spoofed the "shame" of the producers. One was quoted, with apparent sincerity, as saying he had told his wife but not his relatives. He is quoted as remarking, with mixed emotions, "It's frightful what you'll do for money, isn't it?"

Frank operates the Avalon theatre here and Engler the Hopkins. Film was shot in the north woods last summer with local "talent."

WORKING TO LESSEN CAUSES FOR 'RUNAWAY'

Hollywood, May 21.

Elements of the film industry in Hollywood are pressing the fight against runaway production on two levels with the formalization of two committees, one to combat the tax on negative ownership by Los Angeles County, the other operating on the Capitol Hill level.

California State Senate has okayed a measure doing away with the levy on negatives, which is collected annually in March and amounts to $2,500,000 in extra

China Loaded With Live Entertainment; Is Of Dubious Quality But Plentiful

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Paris, May 21.

There is probably more live theatrical entertainment in China today, per capita, than in any other country in the world. Theatre is considered by the Chinese Communist government as a vital function of life and is made available at all times to all classes of the populace. This is true, sometimes, even when food is scarce. A very large percentage of the stage entertainment available is political in nature, or with propaganda overtones. A small (about 10%) of the entertainment available is "classical," with no contemporary or political import—and this type of entertainment is by far the most popular with the masses. There is no in-between, no ballet, play, opera or whatever based on life today or the world today, without political import.

Theatre tickets are allegedly available to anyone on a first-come, first-served basis and are inexpensive. That's the theory; actually, as detailed below, this is not quite so. In Peking the prices range from 20 fens to one yuan; the prices change daily, depending on the

Boy Meets Girl Again

At Time's recent 40th anniversary party a grey-haired gentleman came up to Carol Channing and said, "You're the Gladioli Girl aren't you? —well, I'm the Gladioli Boy." She blinked.

He was former Secretary of Agriculture and Vice President of the U.S. Henry A. Wallace.

JOAN BAEZ TOUR TROUBLES DETAILED

Joan Baez's cancellation of a concert at the Loyola U. field house in New Orleans last week (6) was based more on sickness than on segregation. According to Manuel Greenhill, the folksinger's manager, the racial heat in Birmingham was only a contributing factor in raising her temperature which already had been aggravated by an overload of concertizing before the Loyola date.

Greenhill pointed out that he had called in a doctor in New Orleans who verified her illness to the sponsors of the event, S&S Productions. He admits addressing the 3,000-plus crowd on hand at the field house to hear Miss Baez to apologize for her absence and saying that Joan was ill and adding that she had been "debilitated by Birmingham."

In addition to the Loyola cancellation, Miss Baez also cancelled a concert in Memphis on May 10. She appeared in Knoxville on May 12 and wound up her southern tour in Atlanta on May 17.

Louisiana May Have 1st State Opera House

New Orleans, May 21.

Louisiana would become the first state in America to boast a state opera house if a bill, prefiled for the fiscal session of the Legislature, is adopted.

The measure, bearing the name of 12 legislators from throughout the state as cosponsors, would provide for removal of the Wild Life and Fisheries Commission from the old Civil Courts building in the French Quarter and conversion of the imposing state-owned building into a opera and concert house.

Up to $2,000,000 would be appropriated from the state's general fund to finance the project. Under the conversion plans, the building would have an auditorium with a seating capacity of 2,400 to 2,600.

Cape Town, May 21.

The interracial Luxurama Theatre, at Wynberg, Cape Town, made application to the Minister for the Interior of the So. Luxurama proposed a three-week tour of the Republic.

Insurance-Eye on Malibu Project

Hollywood, May 21.

At least one national insurance company is said to be interested in providing long-term financing for studio complex now being studied by 20th-Fox, Columbia and MGM. Three companies, keeping their individual corporate identities, propose to build a common studio home, with 2,500-acre 20th ranch in Malibu under consideration as site.

According to some insiders, 20th and Columbia have reached a deeper area of agreement on the proposal than has yet been arrived at with Metro. However, source was relaying information without having been briefed on results of meeting in London 10 days ago by the three company presidents, Darryl F. Zanuck, Abe Schneider and Robert M. O'Brien.

Tentative timetable, assuming no time consuming or insurmountable problems crop up, for contemplated new studio complex reportedly would require up to two years from flashing of greenlight to point where stages, etc., would be in operational shape. Grading and other engineering of the property could take up to six months, it's estimated.

Canadian Film Awards Pass Up Features; Reason: None Completed; Two Negatives Held for Editing Fees

Montreal, May 21.

Canadian Film Awards, 15th annual event, presented at Queen Elizabeth Hotel here recently, skipped theatrical features because none were completed in Canada last year. One now has been, however — Crawley Films' Montreal-shot bilinguaier, not yet finally titled. Two other Canadian features lack only funds to finish. Commonwealth Films' (Vancouver) "The Bitter and the Sweet" is reportedly locked in a vault by the editor till he gets paid. Canadian-based Am-Can Productions' $1,000,000 color musical "10 Girls Ago," starring Buster Keaton, Bert Lahr and Eddie Foy Jr., has been held in N.Y. for months awaiting money to pay for editing. Nor were there any awards for best tv entertainment or public-service films.

National Film Board of Canada won 10 of 17 professional awards, Crawley Films Ltd., Ottawa, three, and six others got one each. "Canadian film of the year" was Film Board's "Lonely Boy," 27-min. b.&w. documentary on Ottawa's singer Paul Anka, now a N. J. resident. (It also took "general information" award.) Audience at pre-cocktails (which were hosted by Assn. of Motion Picture Producer and Laboratories of Canada) showing of it and other winners in le Petit Cinema, Place Ville Marie, were enchanted at Anka's personal manager Irving Feld gravely intoning his client's place in history: "Probably the greatest all-round talent the world has known in the last 300 years."

"Lonely Boy" was directed by Wolf Koenig and Roman Kroiter, with Tom Daly as exec producer.

"Best Theatrical Short" was National Board's 16-minute "Nahanni," a lost-goldmine legend filmed by Donald Wilder, with Nicholas Balla as exec producer. It also won "Best Color-Film Cinematography" award, judged by Canadian Society of Cinematographers, with Crawley's "Saguenay," lensed by Christopher Chapman, as 2nd runner-up Board's "Jour Apres Jour," lensed by Guy Borremans, sole was black and white award winner.

This was the first year for cinematography awards. It's believed that next year will see directors also hudoed in two or more categories—possibly including tv-films.

Canadian Film Awards are jointly presented by Canada Foundation, Canadian Assn. for Adult Education and Canadian Film Institute. Latter's exec director, Roy Little, was in charge, aided by Sheila Segrue and Marcel Carriere. AMPPLC prexy Charles Everett and CFI prexy Jean Clavel were co-chairmen, with Mme. Jeanine Beaubien, director of Montreal's International Theatre, handing out the awards.

Other pix nods went to: "Fantastique" and "Climates of North America" — both NFB — in Children's category; "Arctic Island Wildcat" — Spence Crilly Film Productions for Peter Bawden

Offering a play on names in the wake of the recent expose of popularity ratings in television, Goodman Ace, old Kansas City vaude critic, radio star and now tv writer, quipped "The Only Notices I have any confidence in is Anna Q."

A Far-Afield Marshall Complains That Troops Lack Fighting Spirit

Minneapolis, May 21.

Back from a six-week European vacation after having missed the North Central Allied annual convention here, circuit owner Bennie Berger, the indie exhib body's board chairman, expressed dismay over what he considers the meeting's "gross and inexcusable deficiency." Regional group, in his absence, didn't pass a resolution reprimanding the film companies "for what they're doing to the small exhibitors." None was submitted to the meeting.

"If I had been there I'll guarantee you there would have been that resolution and others taking film companies to task and showing them up in their true colors," said Berger.

National Allied heads are displeased over a statement made by the local unit president Martin Lebedoff that although the Allied States President Jack Armstrong and Executive Secretary Milton London from Detroit expressed optimism over exhibition's future, Lebedoff took another stand. He issued a statement that it devolves upon Allied States to advise small exhibitors to quit the theatre business.

Berger has an explanation for missing the convention. He said plans for his European trip with his wife were made before it was known when the convention would be held and then they couldn't be changed. President Lebedoff and Executive Secretary-Counsel Stan Kane set a convention date for a time when they expected Berger back. But Berger says he was unable to alter his travel schedule. He did not detail the difficulties.

U's 'Send Me No Flowers'

Universal has purchased Norman Barasch and Carroll Moore's Broadway comedy of a season ago, "Send Me No Flowers." Harry Keller has been taped to produce the filmization, as the second project under his producer-director pact with the company.

Keller is also preparing "Fallen Angel" which Peter Stone is scripting from Howard Fast's novel. He recently finished directing U's "Brass Bottle."

BREAKS IN WITH BRITISH 'LEE'

Seven Arts, which has long been considering the move, will enter theatrical distribution with its British-made art entry, "The Small World of Sammy Lee," starring Anthony Newley. Picture will have its U.S. preem at the Sutton in New York following the current "Heavens Above," which opened Monday (20).

Seven Arts, a major factor in independent production as well as tv distribution (of theatrical features), will be entering theatrical distribution in a modest way at first. Sales manager Arnold Jacobs anticipates that he will personally set the 50 "key" domestic deals himself, both from his N.Y. headquarters and via trips on the road. After that, pic will probably be turned over to sub-distributors. To launch "World," he will add one man, and maybe two men, to his staff.

If all goes well with this initial venture, Jacobs envisions a 7A distrib organization comprising perhaps no more than 10 men in the field. With such a low overhead operation, he says, an indie distrib can service those accounts from which at least 80% of total

Levine Demurs On Cannes O.O. Of His Biopic

Cannes, May 21.

Joseph E. Levine denied permission for the unreeling in the Critics Section attached to the festival of a 27-minute documentary on his career made in 16 millimeter by Albert and David Maysles. "Showman" was made a year ago and discloses Levine in action, including footage at the 1962 Cannes fest. It was intended originally for television playoff.

Levine has doubts about the image it presents although his hired hands, Lenny Lightstone and Robert Edwards, argue, as do others, that he emerges sympathetic as well as dynamic. David Maysles travelled here for the supposed showing only to have made the trip for no purpose.

The "Truth Camera" technique used in film followed Levine on his daily business and included one sequence of his firing a press agent, formerly with United Artists, who had not fitted in with Levine's merchandising ways.

The film was produced and directed by John Sturges for the Mirisch Co.

Recent Par Stock Rise Credited to Outlook For Beefier Product

Paramount has come to life on the New York Stock Exchange. Common stock issue, longtime in the doldrums, rose by about $10 per share in the last couple of months. Last week alone it climbed $9.37½ per share, as 36,300 shares exchanged hands, and hit a high for the year of $45.62½. It was down to $31 last year; the 1963 low was $25.25.

This represents unusually vigorous action for a company which was in the red last year and whose first quarter report for this year, while in the black, nonetheless was less than earnings for the corresponding period of 1962.

Wall Street analysts and Par officials as well credit the upbeat to new product prospects. One commission house cited four pictures as showing particular promise, these being "Come Blow Your Horn," "Hud," "Wives and Lovers" and "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed."

Other considerations are that the stock had been interpreted as under-priced in some quarters, and the possibility of a significant windfall via licensing of the post-1948 theatrical library to television.

At any rate the downtown chart players had set the "barrier" at $40.50 per share. These theorists figured if the price hit this level it would go higher and they bought accordingly. Then they placed the "barrier" at $43 per share, and this, too, was reached. Now they've got a new breakthrough figure of $46.

WB's Quarterly 12½c

Warner board last week declared the regular quarterly dividend of 12½c. per share on the common stock.

It's payable Aug. 5 to stockholders of record on July 12.

Paramount, holdout in the backlog-to-television sweepstakes, will remain aloof until such times as a prospective customer approaches the company with something more than a pocketful of cash. Par has 200 features dating from 1948 to 1960 which could be made available to tv and will enter serious talks about a licensing arrangement with anyone willing to put up $25,000,000 in advance.

Specifically, Par wants $125,000 per picture for each of the 200, all cash on the barrelhead, with this total of $25,000,000 to be applied toward a percentage, presumably somewhat akin to the pact the corporation had with MCA for rights to the pre-1948 theatricals.

Par thus is serving notice that revenue-shy promoters, who have a yen for the newer product and would like to work out a pay-later agreement, needn't bother to even try. Film outfit has been approached by dozens of wheelers and dealers, and now is bent on separating the men from the boys. Latter are those without money or just unwilling to shell out.

Report from the inside is that about 10 prospective purchasers have made overtures but so far there has been nothing concrete. Reportedly among them is Seven Arts but this company allegedly is ready to ante up $22,000,000 for Universal's back-number product and it's difficult to conceive of an additional outlay of $25,000,000. U has been the only other holdout.

Actually, Par has made no final conclusions as to the kind of deal it would like to make. Company is said to be "assiduously studying" all the tax angles with the thought of cutting Internal Revenue Service in on the shortest possible end of the proceeds.

MCA bought the pre-1948's via outright sale, rather than lease, at a guarantee of $35,000,000, which amount could go up to $50,000,000 contingent on rentals recouped by MCA. As of the end of last year Par collected $27,535,000 and another $14,700,000 is expected as rentals are received under contracts already written.

Par Resumes Black

Paramount is back in the black. Company for the first quarter of 1963 had net income of $275,000, or 17c per share. In addition an investment profit of $445,000, or 28c per share, was realized in the period. Shares outstanding number 1,604,881.

Par for all of 1962 was over 3,000,000 in the red.

First quarter of 1962 brought a consolidated net of $1,129,000, or 67c per shares based on 1,680,231 shares then outstanding. There was no investment profit during the first quarter of 1962.

Paramount in the first three months of this year bought in 20,100 shares of its own common stock on the open market. And the buying is still going on.

Company thus is continuing with its long-standing policy of reducing the outstanding issue when feasible and, of course, commensurately reducing dividend requirements.

As of April 1 the company had 1,604,881 shares outstanding.

Fascination With Own Era

[Flock of World War II Themes Due]

Twentieth-Fox prez Darryl F. Zanuck, who hit the boxoffice jackpot with his D-Day epic, "The Longest Day," is going to be reworking World War II quite extensively in the upcoming production slate for his company.

Of the approximately 24 titles which have been set for production or preparation by 20th in the next year and a half, no less than eight are concerned with WW II. On the roster:

"The Winston Affair," acquired from the now defunct Entertainment Corp. of America, to be located in India and England.

"The Last 24 Hours," based on H. Trevor-Roper's "The Last Days of Hitler."

"Mariteri," adventure-meller, located in the Pacific, based on a German book by Werner Joerg Lueddecke.

"Fate Is The Hunter," based on Ernest Gann's quasi-biographical book spanning commercial air development, the screen version of which, according to the 20th announcement, will concern "two modern airline pilots and their relationship during WW II."

"The Greatest Raid of All," based on C. E. Lucas Phillips' book about the famous raid—Operation Chariot—on St. Nazaire in 1942, in which the British destroyed a vital dock held by the Nazis.

"Von Ryan's Express," based on David Westheimer's book, to be published this fall, about a group of American and British prisoners being transported to Germany after the collapse of Italian forces.

"The Wingate Story," based on the biography by Leonard Mosley.

"Short Cut," a novel by Ennio Flaiano, about an Italo officer in WW II who contracts leprosy in Abyssinia from a local chick.

Sam George's New Status

Sam George has been appointed southern region merchandising rep for Paramount, covering Atlanta (where he'll headquarter), Charlotte, Jacksonville, Memphis, New Orleans and surrounding areas.

George, former field rep for Metro and Cinerama, and also manager of the Fox and Paramount Theatres in Atlanta, will work under exploitation manager Bernard Serlin.

Rough Language, Still Moral Picture; Some Angles of Marty Ritt on 'Hud'

Parents' mag has christened "Hud," Geoffrey Shurlock, administrator of the Production Code, said in effect it's a "happily married" film and worthy of Code approval. The Catholic Legion of Decency classified the picture as "morally unobjectionable for adults."

"Hud," a Paul Newman starrer for Paramount, contains in its outdoor dialog such words as "bitch" and "bastard."

At one point, Pat Neal rebuffs Newman's approach with the crack, "No, thanks, I've had one cold-blooded bastard in my life. I don't want another."

"Hud" director Martin Ritt, in New York from Hollywood last week, states, "Everybody's got a right, including the picture business, to grow up."

He undertook to assure an interviewer that words and situations which a few years ago would seem coarse and vulgar, if not obscene, are, as they should be, permissible if presented without strain and stress for shock, but within the realm of good taste and in keeping with the characters and plot.

Pure Language

In passing along the information anent Parents' mag's endorsement of "Hud," along with the Legion and Production Code sentiments, Ritt offered the thought that much consideration must be given to "honesty." Strong, forceful characters wouldn't seem right in talking only purified world, an Itchy-boy character is expected to be foul-mouthed just so long as there are reasonable restraints.

A participant in a conversation concerning the subject said he saw a television late showing of John Huston's "Asphalt Jungle" recently and found the picture rather tepid. It was widely acclaimed at the time of its original presentation in theatres. But with today's standards, the film has lost authenticity because of the absence of even a suggestion of the gutter language.

YUGOSLAVIA PARTNERS WITH CARDOCK FILMS

Cardock Films, indie production company formed in January by Joel Schenker, Roger Lewis, Phillip Langer and Max Cohen, has made a deal with Avala Films of Yugoslavia to co-produce the historical epic, "The Bridge on The Drina," based on Nobel Prize-winner Ivo Andric's novel.

Story spans 30 years of Balkan resistance to the Ottoman Empire. Plan is to shoot the pic on a $2,000,000 budget in Yugoslavia next year.

No Metro, 20th-Fox Aussie Troup Seen

Sydney, May 21.

Stopping off here for a quick hookup prior to returning to his N.Y. base following a Far East survey, Bert Obrentz, Metro's foreign chief, said he couldn't see any distribution hookup here between Metro and 20th-Fox similar to the one currently operating in New Zealand between the two organizations.

Obrentz said that Australia was too big a territory to allow any such joint operation. It's cited that New Zealand was not such a large operative zone as Australia, hence the current tieup there was working to the satisfaction of both parties.

Obrentz then went on to say that Metro would release "The VIP's" in this territory next September and likely would host in 20th-Fox "Cleopatra" in some world hypos.

Seven Arts With Kirk Douglas Plan 4 Pics

Hollywood, May 21.

Seven Arts and Kirk Douglas' Joel Productions are partnered in a deal to produce four films and a Broadway play, latter "One Flew Over the Cuckoo." Douglas will star in and Sidney Lumet direct the Dale Wasserman dramatization of Kenneth Kesey's novel.

First of four pix will be "Seven Days in May," which started yesterday for Paramount release with John Frankenheimer directing and Douglas costarring with Burt Lancaster and Fredric March.

Elsa the Adorable Lion As Theatre and Tele Star If Skoloff Deal Jells

Elsa, the lioness heroine of Joy Adamson's three books which began with "Born Free," may eventually become a motion picture star—posthumously. Arthur Skoloff tv producer-syndicator who recently entered the theatrical field by acquiring distrib rights to the Oscar-winning "Black Fox," is prepping a feature-length documentary about Elsa, to be culled from approximately 100,000 feet of 16m color footage of Elsa and her cubs shot by Mrs. Adamson. ("Born Free" described Mrs. Adamson's raising of Elsa from an orphaned cub through Elsa's mating and death back in the jungle.)

According to Skoloff, he acquired the footage for $15,000 (with Mrs. Adamson to receive also 25% of any net proceeds), but because he did not buy rights to the three Elsa books, he will not be able to use the book titles. Plan also is to utilize footage in a series of five-minute tv films to be called "The Wonderful World of Elsa."

In addition to the Elsa film, which the producer hopes to finish by yearend, Skoloff is projecting several other theatrical features, including an exploitation film based on the career of the late master magician, Houdini, about 20% of which will be footage of Houdini-in-action shot by the magician's wife. Film would not be a biography, as such, but would concentrate on some of his more spectacular tricks and adventures. As Skoloff describes it, the picture will be told from Houdini's point of view (as the camera eye)—the magician only being seen by the film audience through the Don Houdini footage. New material will be shot in England, where the producer already reportedly has a deal with the Rank Organization to supply half of the necessary $120,000 financing.

The third project on his theatrical shed is "Death of A Tiger," based on the events leading up to the assassination of former Dominican dictator Trujillo. Producer sees this as a highly explosive cloak-and-dagger yarn which, because nobody was quite able to photograph the real thing while it happened, will be shot as a fiction feature.

British Film Pictures Face Serious Challenge of Quality With Quantity

By VINCENT CANBY

A "decline" from previous pictures of British comedy, reflected in the last two years, in the annual Variety survey on the U.S. box-office performance of film imports, is actually a decline in quality rather than in quantity. Sir says Roy Boulting who, with his twin brother John, was as much responsible as any British filmmaker for the huge success of British comedies this side several years ago.

In New York last week for the opening of the Boulting Brothers' new "Heavens Above," Peter Sellers starrer which lampoons the Church of England, Roy Boulting also noted that some of the decline in British comedy could be traced to the fact that at least two of the top British comic actors—Sellers and Alec Guinness—have been branching out more and more into dramas and or films which cannot be easily classified as "comedies." A third top comic actor, Terry-Thomas, he suggested, has not been picking his recent scripts with great discrimination.

With "Heavens Above" completed, Boulting revealed, he and his brother will themselves be taking a sabatical of indeterminate length from the kind of satiric films ("I'm All Right, Jack," "Man in A Corked Hat," "Private's Progress," etc.) which established their reputation this side, or at least overshadowed their more serious exercises like "Brighton Rock" and "Seven Days to Noon."

Their upcoming project is "Seige of Batterna," which Roy is now scripting and which the brothers hope to get into production this fall. The film will take a look at the newly independent West African nations through the experiences of a white colonial who stays on after the British flag has departed.

"Of course, it won't be all that solemn," said Boulting, who also noted that there is nothing more serious than satire. But he's hankering after a change in tempo and, in his opinion, although each Boulting comedy has been different, he is tired of the certain similarity in approach. There is also—in "Seige"—to be a respite from the constant challenge of establishing the comic mood; comedies are more difficult to make than dramas and melodramas.

A LITERARY MATING OF MIRROR AND FICTION?

Reno, May 21.

Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr.'s memoir, "Men of the World," and Upton Sinclair's "Presidential Agent" (in which Vanderbilt was thinly disguised as the "Larry Budd" character in the latter's book) may be blended by Perry Lieff of Creative Management. His clients are Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward, and he has the property in mind as a screen vehicle. N. N. Swenson is repping Vanderbilt.

Latter is at his local ranch where they are huddling. George Stevens has been shooting Fulton Oursler's "Greatest Story" on a ranch Vanderbilt once leased from the Piute Indians at Pyramid Lake. 20% of Canada's Shorts Go Foreign'

Ottawa, May 21.

Graeme Fraser, v.p. of Crawley Films Ltd., Canada's largest commercial film producer, says 20% of its revenue during the past five years has been in U. S. and other foreign currency. It has made more than 200 business and educational films for foreign clients and now has in production six more for McGraw-Hill publication house of N.Y., and three more for International Film Bureau of Chicago.

Crawley's most exported series is "RCMP," made for CBC and sold in 20 countries; its "St. Lawrence North" has sold in five so far. Its 130-episode color "New Tales of the Wizard of Oz" was made in Ottawa for Videocraft of N.Y. All three are tv series.

Off-B'way 'Purlie' Off; But Summer Stock Not; It's Ossie Davis Verdict

A projected off-Broadway revival of last season's Broadway comedy "Purlie Victorious," which would have arrived about the same time as the recently-completed film version of the play, has been scrubbed. The revival was to have been presented by Philip Rose who produced it on Broadway and who will share financially in the film's profits, if any.

The pending off-Broadway production was scrapped when co-holder of the property's rights, writer-actor Ossie Davis who wrote the script and starred in it on Broadway, decided, along with the pic's producers Milton and Tom Hammer and director Nick Webster, that such a revival could possibly hurt the film's chances. Rose had been planning a revival for some time with Davis' knowledge but, with the development of the filmization, it was decided that such a move would add to risk.

Several strawhat productions of the property are planned for this summer, however, but there is no way that these can be blocked by the film's presenters in that stock rights are independently handled. Nor, however, do the producers see any potential dangers from such summer showings which, in fact, could add to a wider knowledge across the country of the script.

Davis adapted his original for the film with director Webster who

RESENT BEING STARS' STOOGES

By DORA ALBERT

Hollywood, May 21.

Upcoming issues of film fan magazines will circumvent the attempts of stars and studios to place damaging censorship requirements on them.

The ability of some of the motion picture stars to ask for and receive astronomical salaries has swelled their heads to the point where they see no reason why they shouldn't also be able to dictate to the nation's press (and particularly to the fan magazines) exactly what those magazines can run about them.

In the 1930s, some of the more important stars and major studios first began demanding the right to read and approve interviews the stars gave. Most fan magazine writers agreed; and for many years there was relative peace between stars and fan magazine writers and editors.

Then in order to help circulation, national and fan periodicals began running stories that weren't completely puff pieces; some of them with sensational titles. In recent years, certain ranking stars and their press agents have argued that their press agents have argued that if the magazine writers want interviews, they will have to give the taut-masters the privilege of title approval, the right to censor cover blurbs, the right to select photographs and approve captions, and sometimes the right to dictate the use of a cover picture of the star to adorn the whole issue. (Even Garbo in her heyday never laid down terms like these.)

Fan magazine editors are presently incensed against such dictates. They feel that to accept these terms would turn them into puppets, with less say about the contents of their magazines than publicity office boys. Even though an editor may want an interview with a star, that star is not necessarily worth a cover picture on his magazine, the choice of the right cover may make the difference between a magazine that sells well and one that dies at the newsstands.

Issues of Motion Picture and Silver Screen for June are among those that show how self-respecting fan magazine editors manage to run newsy magazines without bowing to the autocratic whim of stars.

How Long, Oh, How Long?

Among the stories in Silver Screen that were obviously based on reportorial work but not on interviews with the stars is the cover story "Liz and Burton: How Long Will It Last?" carefully analyzing the qualities in both that might break up their alliance. Silver Screen also ran this author's interview with top marriage counsellor Dr Paul Popenoe, director of the Los Angeles Institute of Family Relations, analyzing the Tony Curtis-Christine Kaufmann marriage.

Motion Picture also runs an editorial story in its June issue on Liz and Burton, "Liz Wins! Sybil Surrenders Burton'" giving a Parisian-eye view of the latest developments.

In another Motion Picture story, "Why Does Everyone Want to See Me Get Knocked Flat On My Fanny'" writer Scott Stuart not only quotes Nick Adams' view on Natalie Wood, but analyzes the ridiculous postures that she and her press agent have taken toward the fan books. "In Hollywood," he says, "it has become a popular pastime to blame fan magazines for disasters, when in fact they report them only after they happen."

Natalie's Bigger Than JFK

He tells of "a dapper and determined young press agent who will not even present Natalie with a request for a fan magazine interview. Although one may be pardoned somewhat for doubting his objectivity, he himself will deign to grant an interview on Natalie —

French Actress Tells Hollywood: 'Conditions Much Worse in Paris'

Hollywood, May 21.

French actress Genevieve Page, here for a costarring role in Warner Bros.' "Youngblood Hawke," paints a dismal picture of the plight of the Gallic thesp.

"If you think things are bad in Hollywood you should take a look at the French film industry," she says. "When I left Paris last month only two films were before the cameras. The situation among French actors is little better than desperate."

Of 6,000 actors who claim professional status fewer than 500 are able to make a living acting in normal times, according to actress, who adds, "and now literally only a handful are employed."

Most French players combine stage and film careers, says Miss Page, who maintains that only the very big names in the biz are able to live on income derived from films.

The stage, undergoing a slump similar to the one plaguing the film industry, is unable to provide any meaningful measure of increased employment to the beleaguered thesp, notes Miss Page. She adds that the sharply increased incidence of people exiting Paris during the summer months has done tremendous damage to the traditional June-November Parisian theatrical season.

Television, which is limited to one channel, is considered no more than a marginal source of actor income in France, declares Miss Page, adding that the pay on French TV is "incredibly low."

Actress avers that doldrums which have descended upon the French film industry stem from problems similar to ones facing Hollywood including lack of financing, high taxes, increase of self-entertainment media and even "over-priced stars." She numbers Jean Paul Belmondo, Brigitte Bardot and Jean Gabin at top of current French thesping heap, reporting top salaries of about $120,000 per pic.

Insult to injury blow to strike French filmmakers was a recent strike called by the French producers association earlier in the year, since resolved, notes actress.

Miss Page avers there has been no change in attitude of the European thesp towards the Hollywood opportunity. It remains the ultimate filmic goal, she insists, noting that American films and film stars still set the style in international filmmaking.

'SAM HOUSTON STORY' SHOOTS IN HOUSTON

Houston, May 21.

William Rowland publicizes an intention to make a motion picture here on Sam Houston. He expects to begin shooting Nov. 19 and complete negative in about three months. He will direct the film himself and the pic will be called "The Sam Houston Story." He reports commitments from Stephen Boyd and Frederic March to play the two chief roles, Houston and Andrew Jackson.

Screenplay is the work of A. B. Guthrie Jr. and Paul I. Wellman who are his partners in the production. Rowland will serve as producer. Ted and Vincent Saizas of Birmingham will be cameramen.

The film is to be made in color and Panvision and is budgeted at $900,000. Scenes will be shot at the San Jacinto battleground and in other natural locales if possible. He will build a town set somewhere in the area. Upon completion he will release the film himself.

Swedes Continue Uneasy Re 'Prize'

Stockholm, May 21.

Swedes have shut the doors on Metro's film troupe that is in Stockholm to shoot some atmosphere scenes for "The Prize." Fearing that the American film will scandalize the highly respected Nobel Prize, Swedes have decided not to cooperate, though Stockholm police have helpfully assisted in keeping crowds away as the troupe shoots certain exteriors.

William Kaplan, in charge of the production, told VARIETY that most of involved Swedish groups had expressed a willingness to help more than a month ago. But when reports from Hollywood began to filter into the Swedish newspapers implying that the film would convey a sexomaniac view of Sweden, the different groups backed out. Swedish actor-director Gunnar Hellstrom, who is presently residing in California, wrote an article in an evening tabloid in which he said that he had rejected an offer to take part in the film as he regarded it as a disservice to his country. This adverse publicity snowballed. Several other Swedish actors and actresses are rumored to have rejected participation offers on similar grounds.

Among the Swedish groups and institutions that had originally planned to cooperate with the filming of "The Prize" are the Stockholm Concert House, the Cooperative Movement, the Swedish State Railroads, Svensk Filmindustri and many others. Svensk Filmindustri had promised to provide the technical staff necessary. As a consequence of Svensk Filmindustri's refusal to cooperate MGM has been compelled to bring technicians from Germany and Britain.

Because of the Swedes' unwillingness to cooperate, Kaplan is uncertain whether the stars in the production will be brought to Stockholm. Only one Swedish actor, Christian Bratt, has accepted work with "The Prize" group. However, since the publicity, Bratt, who is functioning as Paul Newman's stand-in, walked about with sun-glasses, hoping to avoid recognition.

Eliot Hyman Adds Braid

Eliot Hyman has been elected president of Seven Arts Productions to succeed the late David E. Stillman.

Since the organization of the firm in 1960, Hyman has served as exec veep of the company. He will continue to hold his port as prez of Seven Arts Associated, the American-operated subsidiary of the parent Canadian firm.

MIDNIGHT CINERAMA AND LINDY'S IN TIEUP

"Broadway-After-Midnight" is the billing given a new customer lure being undertaken by Metro-Cinerama with an assist from Lindy's Nicolas Reisini, president of C'rama, stated he wants to revive the late shows of past starting at midnight) and, beginning Saturday (25), will offer "How the West Was Won" at Loew's Cinerama in Manhattan. It's to be limited to Saturday nights at the start.

Tieup with the restauranteur provides that stub-holders, following the midnight performance, will be given cheesecake and coffee. Lindy's will remain open until around 3:30 a.m. Sunday for the late stayers-up.

Reisini pointed out that film exhibition economy more and more is being geared to the weekends, the public is hitting the downtown showcases particularly on Friday nights, Saturday and Sunday. If adequately attended, an extra show such as at midnight Saturday obviously would have fiscal impact, particularly with a feature, such as "West Was Won," which is playing two-a-day.

Reisini said he hopes to see the midnight-show policy adopted in other cities and urges other exhibitors and distributors to take steps in this direction.

Ain't it ain't, fun it is. That about sums up "Come Blow Your Horn." Like its legit parent, the screen version of Neil Simon's Jewish-oriented family comedy is a superficial but diverting romp. For the average escape-and-relaxation filmgoer, the Essex-Tandem production should prove a pleasant, entertaining experience unencumbered by shades of characterization or substance and dimension. In the vernacular of its star, it's a gas for the mass, shapeless and predictable along the edges but crammed with gags, spiced with sex and played with style and gusto by an attractive cast. For exhibs and Paramount, a promising "Horn" of plenty.

The streamlined picture version is a product of Norman Lear and Bud Yorkin, produced by both, directed by Yorkin, written by Lear. They have done their job well in all three departments. The simple yarn is concerned with two brothers at opposite extremities of bachelorhood, the older one (Frank Sinatra) ultimately passing into a more mature, responsible phase of life when he sees in his younger brother's (Tony Bill) sensual excesses the reflection of a voracious personality no longer especially becoming or appealing to him. This is mighty good news to his long-suffering father, a wax fruit manufacturer from Yonkers for whom any unmarried man over 26 is a bum.

Sinatra's jaunty performance is his best in some time. The role is perfectly suited to his rakish image. It also affords him an opportunity to manifest his most consummate talent—that of singer. He warbles the lilting title tune, which has been cleverly integrated into the story fabric in accompaniment of a transitional series of fast cuts. The song, by Sammy Cahn and James Van Heusen, has all the earmarks of a hit, and will probably get an airing on the next Oscarcast.

But it's Lee J. Cobb who steals the show (albeit in the juciest part) with what might be described as a "bum" hastic portrayal of the explosively irascible old man who is forever appearing at the front door of his son's apartment when more glamorous company is expected. As a matter of fact, a major share of the film's comedy is of the "knock-knock, who's there?" variety, a rather ancient fun device. Molly Picon, one of the foremost stars of the Yiddish stage, manages to wade through the absurdities of her role—Cobb's harassed wife—with comic finesse and shines brilliantly in a bout with a battery of ringing telephones.

Tony Bill makes a fairly auspicious screen bow as the younger brother. A dark, handsome, boyish type, he should become a favorite in the fan mag sphere. Barbara Rush is attractive as the girl who eventually gets Sinatra, and Jill St. John is flashy as a guilelessly accommodating sexpot. Dan Blocker packs the appropriate wallop as an understandably jealous Texan and Phyllis McGuire is glamorously racy as his wife. Dean Martin adds a little bonus fun in an unbilled cameo bit as a bum who gets—literally—what he begs for, to his chagrin.

Cinematic ingenuity by Yorkin and staff adds lustre and novelty to the proceedings, which need the boost. For example, a refrigerator-eye-view, or open-and-shut case, of a hungry husband in the kind of photographic imagination with which Yorkin and cameraman William H. Daniels have added an unorthodox visual element to make a joke play better. Frank P. Keller's editing is astute, Edith Head's costumes observantly suited to character. Nelson Riddle's score is noteworthy for the manner in which characters are identified and accompanied by individual themes, along the order of "Peter and the Wolf." The gaudy set for Sinatra's opulent apartment is the highlight of contribution in this slot of the teams of Hal Pereira-Roland Anderson (art direction) and Sam Comer-James Payne (set decoration).

"The Nutty Professor" is apt to be another moneymaker for Jerry Lewis and Paramount, but it is not one of the comedian's better films. Although attractively mounted and performed with flair by a talented cast, the Ernest D. Glucksman production is only fitfully funny. What it seems to need most of all at the moment is a good trimming job by the editing department. Too often the film bogs down in pointless, irrelevant or repetitious business, nullifying the flavor of the occasionally choice comic capers and palsying the tempo and continuity of the story.

The picture was directed by Lewis and written by him in partnership with Bill Richmond. The star is cast as a meek, homely, accident-prone chemistry prof who concocts a potion that transforms him into a handsome, cocky, obnoxiously vain "cool cat" type. But the transfiguration is of the Jekyll-Hyde variety in that it wears off, restoring Lewis to the original mold, invariably at critical, embarrassing moments. Eventually, the return to character occurs in full view of an audience of admirers of model B, prompting Lewis to deliver a rather maudlin sermon with the moral that "if you don't think too much of yourself, how do you expect others to?" This touch of climactic sentiment is a characteristic of Lewis' pictures but, while a dash of "heart" can be a valuable ingredient in comedy, it doesn't register in this one, coming off flat and pretentious.

Another standard characteristic of the Lewis film is its similarity to an animated cartoon, especially noticeable on this occasion in that the professor played by Lewis is a kind of live-action version of the nearsighted Mr. Magoo who suffers typically cartoon-like mishaps such as getting flattened by a heavy falling door or having his arms stretched in floor-touching length by dropping a barbell—with miraculous "recoveries" in subsequent scenes.

Lewis handles his dual role with skill, although it is stretching the imagination a bit to accept him as the irresistibly attractive campus heart-throb, especially when he sets himself at the keyboard and croons "That Old Black Magic" to a bevy of swooning females. Somebody has got to be kidding. The voice that comes out, after all, belongs to Jerry Lewis, and that ain't Nat King Cole, brother.

Musical theme of the picture is the beautiful refrain, "Stella By Starlight." By starlight or any other light, Stella is beautiful—Stella Stevens (that is, who portrays the professor's student admirer). Miss Stevens is not only gorgeous, she is a very gifted actress. Top stardom is a many role away. This was an exceptionally tough assignment, requiring of her almost exclusively silent reaction takes, and Miss Stevens has managed almost invariably to produce the correct responsive expression. On her, even the incorrect one would look good. Somebody, however, should clue in the make-up department to chip all that facial goo and stop over-darkening her tresses. Naturally classic looks such as hers need no such embellishment.

Of considerable comic value in key support are Del Moore and Howard Morris, with additional contributions of prominence by Kathleen Freeman, Med Flory, Norman Alden, Milton Frome and Buddy Lester.

Dexterous, glamorous photography by W. Wallace Kelley is a big asset, and other noteworthy production aids include the Hal Pereira-Walter Tyler art direction, Walter Scharf's music and the Hugo & Charles Grenzbach sound. Much of the film was shot on the Arizona State U. campus. Editor was John Woodcock, and he should get the green light for more.

Unsatisfactory Disney western.

Buena Vista release of Walt Disney production. Stars Brian Keith, Tommy Kirk, Kevin Corcoran; features Dewey Martin, Jeff York, Slim Pickens; no character-name credits. Cast also includes Robert Compton, Slim Pickens, Rodolfo Acosta, Pat Hogan, Ivan Parry-Jones. Directed by Norman Tokar. Reviewed at Academy Awards Theatre, May 17, '63. Running time, 103 mins.

It will take all the intrinsic drawing power of the Walt Disney banner to counteract the inadequacies of this undernourished western and hail it out at the boxoffice. "Savage Sam" is one of the least satisfactory items to emerge from the Buena Vista hopper in years.

With a screenplay by Fred Gipson and William Tunberg, based on the former's tome, the film is a depiction of the efforts of half-a-dozen Texans led by a hound named "Savage Sam" to catch up with a band of Apaches who have taken prisoner a couple of children. At the root of the picture's problem is the incongruous air of levity with which the scenarists and director Norman Tokar have approached what is obviously a dead-serious situation. This clash confuses the audience throughout and makes it impossible to take the story seriously. As a result, there is never any genuine concern for the characters, nor is there ever any doubt as to the outcome.

Brian Keith underplays, as always, his role of the posse leader. Tommy Kirk gives an appealing delineation but Kevin Corcoran, as his unmanageable younger brother, gives a harsh, irritating performance. Pretty Marta Kristen, the only female in the film, is satisfactory, as are Dewey Martin, Jeff York, Slim Pickens, Royal Dano and Brad Weston in other key assignments. Prominent in the hapless band of Indians whose intentions are never really clear and whose behavior is extremely confusing are Rodolfo Acosta, Dean Fredericks, Pat Hogan and Rafael Campos.

Satisfactory contributions to the production have been made by cameraman Edward Colman, editor Grant K. Smith, art directors Carroll Clark and Marvin Aubrey Davis and composer Oliver Wallace, but none of any special distinction. An engaging tune, "Savage Sam and Me," was written by Terry Gilkyson for the occasion. Bill Anderson was co-producer.

There were all the elements for a first-rate offbeater here with handles for depth distrib via Golding's best-selling novel from which it was taken. Its theme of young boys reverting to savagery when marooned on a deserted island has its moments of forth, but this pix rates as a near-miss on many counts.

Titles adequately indicate that evacuation in some future war has a group of youngsters surviving an air crash on a tropical island. They meet, and one boy is elected chief, but with dissent from another. Latter says his group will become hunters and they are seen drawing blood from some wild pigs and evolving tales of a monster on the island. The last-named is a dead paratrooper swaying on a ledge.

But soon the hunting group goes completely native and persecutes and even exterminates those of the other group till a final bloody chase of the ex-leader finds them at the feet of some adults. Then they revert to weeping children again.

Peter Brook has coaxed fairly natural performances from his group of English youths. But he has drawn out his tale on a seemingly too schematic level to emerge more than illustration of the book than a film version standing on its own. Thus the savagery versus reason comes on quickly and does not get the more penetrating treatment.

Of course, children have their own cannibalistic ways, secrets, cruelty and emotional trusts all mixed up. But the film's handling rarely sorts them out or gives them the dramatic touch to make this either a clear social parable, political allegory or study of instincts.

Lensing is curiously metallic but the on-the-spot shooting in the Puerto Rican jungles and beaches helps. Summing up, the film could find its commercial way on its provocative aspects of child mayhem. Pic was made with U.S. and Puerto Rican funds but with a British director and thesps. Shown at the Cannes Fest as a British pic, it may get British quota standing.

Bibber? Connais Pas!
(Bibber? Never Heard of Him?)
(FRENCH)

Cannes, May 14.

Chaumiane production and release. Written and directed by Bertrand Blier. Camera, Jean-Louis Picavet; editor, Michele David. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 95 mins.

Film goes a good step beyond the current Cinema Truth movement. It orchestrates a series of interviews with 12 young French people into a particular and general reflection of young people today. But there are no teaching or forced outlooks here. This shows that basically man is primarily interested in man, and this type of film can reveal and absorb even if it is practically one long series of closeups, with people talking.

Writer-director Bertrand Blier picked types that interested him and also mirrored certain attitudes and human aspects present not only in the French but generally in humanity. After months of talks, he filmed each for one day answering questions on the same topics. None ever met except in the editing of the film and on celluloid.

So what does this give? It gives out with some entertaining, poignant, unsettling, reassuring as well as ambiguous and clear, as is life, aspects of these people and people in general. The faces eventually become a familiar terrain as the editing cuts back and forth between them on the various subjects such as sex, jobs, parents, habits, outlooks and desires. They range in age from about 16 to 22.

There is the amoral pretty little girl with countless adventures to her credit as a seeming form of revolt against boredom. She also openly feels an atomic war might serve to save the best of people and get rid of the others. Besides her, there is a whining unwed mother who almost seems to caress victimization, a wide-eyed inarticulate 16-year-old and an aggressive, self-assured model.

The men run from the self-absorbed type to the drifter with some pocket money, to the breathless, wide-eyed mother's boy and others. If they may emerge types, they are never ridiculous or exploited but an aspect of the multi-faceted sides of youth today.

Title may infer that there was hardly any interest in society, politics or anything that did not directly affect their own needs or personal desires. Perhaps the director can be scored for not bringing up politics but it is evident from the film that there would have been no true coherent response. It could be said he might have picked others, so inclined, but these shown seem a good representative choice.

The director also intercuts reactions of several to what others are saying, though they had never met. But this is not cheating either since it uses the essence of filmic montage and these reactions are on the subject in view at the moment. Though practically all in closeups, it was shot in a studio for fine highlighting of the faces. Blier displays a flair for rhythm and building-up drama, comedy and interest mainly by words but with the right balance of the angle of the faces and the intercutting.

This might be the furthest this type of interview material can go. Film may remain a milestone in this type of pix making. Extensive subtitling would make this a difficult item for abroad and strictly for specialized slotting, with tv also a good outlet. It might also be a good example of an approach towards a look at American youth today.

(CZECH-COLOR-SCOPE)

Cannes, May 14.

Czech State Film production and release. With Jan Werich, Vlastimil Hardy, Jiri Sovak, Emilie Vesnyova. Directed by Vojtech Jasny. Screenplay, Jiri Brdecka, Jan Werich, Jasny; camera (Agfacolor), Jaroslav Kucera; editor, Jan Chaloupek. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 100 mins.

Director	Jiri Sovak
Diana	Emilie Vesnyova

Czech fantasy shows a growing lightness in touch, growing budgets, expert color handling and a sense of humor which butters up the message in this amiable pic. Deft musical numbers are also worked into this. But its sentimentalism, if acceptable, and its repetitive aspects, peg this mainly for puppet situations abroad, if adroitly cut. It would find harder going in regular spots with arty theatre chances slim.

In a small town abound a bunch of stylized but recognizable human types. The advent of a magician with a cat that wears glasses develops the angle that if the cat removes its glasses, people take on the color fitting their personalities. Red, of course, is love, gray is for cheats, yellow for adulterous ones and purple stands for the unstable.

Normal people remain the same. An inventive ballet sequence, with a mixture of the multicolored people, is a highspot but it gets encored a bit too much. In this a good-natured teacher, hounded by a petty, hypocritical director, falls in love with a girl in the magician's troupe but finally loses her. All the townspeople are chastened and some even change.

Into this can be read a slap at complacency in high socialist bureaucratic circles and a need for sincere self-criticism. But it is done with the influence of the Western cinema. Its clever feel for fantasy, bright progression and general grace are Middle European. Jan Werich brings his forceful presence and charm to the fore to play the revealing magician.

Acting is uniformly right in style

MORALISTS, NOT MORALS, UPSET

Kinda Mild at Cannes This Time

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 21.

In spite of a goodly number of showmen and star attendees, plenty of international brass, especially from the Yank majors and indies, there has been a quiet quality to this 16th Cannes Film Fest. Windup comes this Thurs. (23).

It may have been the fact that too many opportunities were not taken advantage of. The fest reps discouraged some countries that tried to send nonexcerpt films, but either accepted or were overridden by certain nations in their insistence upon sending unsuitable features. With lobby and beach horseplay a thing of the past, it is definitely the film that is the thing at Cannes and the first part of the fest just did not have enough outstanding ones to maintain excitement.

This spring France was emerging from a film crisis, Italy facing one, and tv vs. film still a grave conflict. There was a French exhibiting meeting here to discuss this last aspect but it added nothing new on the subject.

Entries so far have been fairly "acceptable" except for a few exceptions. But "outstanding" product was something else. There was the exceptional, stern Japanese tragedy "Hara Kari," the uneven but jolting French "Depths" and Yank "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" in the first half.

Second half of the unravelings perked up with several highpowered pix lifting people out of their earlier lethargy. Business was brisk and some films shown in the Producer Market also got press and buyer attention. It remains to be seen how the prizes tally and the final biz and personality count is analyzed before a true estimate of this 16th Cannes Fest can be made.

Arthur and Lillie Mayer's 50th Anni

Homage to an Unique Pair Enlivened by Youngstein And Crowther in Dagger Dance

By GENE ARNEEL

Arthur L. Mayer, a way-back-whenner in major company distribution circles, former longtime operator of the unsubtle Rialto Theatre in Times Square which gave him billing as "Merchant of Menace," and also an importer of art films and an essayist, was testimonialed at New York's Americana Hotel last Thursday (16). The occasion: Mr. and Mrs. (the former Lillie Stein) Mayer were observing their 50th wedding anni.

About 200 film company and exhib execs joined in the luncheon homage, under the aegis of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. Perhaps the highest tribute of all was that most stayed on through a running time of almost three hours. This is usually regarded as excessive for a midday get-together of the type; tighter editing was called for.

Be that as it may, the Mayers' Day was in okay balance between plaudits and punny anecdota. Max E. Youngstein, as toastmaster, acclaimed Mayer and his family as "vital symbols of the very best that exists in the motion picture industry." (Mrs. Mayer is a board member of the film reviewing Green Sheet and was scrolled by a member of that organization; son Mike Mayer is exec director of the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America, and took the spotlight to present an IFIDA citation to his parents.)

N. Y. Times critic Bosley Crowther extolled Mayer for his efforts in introducing important foreign pictures to the United States, first in association with the late Joseph Burstyn and then with the late Ed Kingsley.

Youngstein, whose forte is not solemn eulogy either pre- or post-mortem, struck a characteristic note by removing his jacket when introduced by Mel Gold, incoming AMPA pres, as a man who usually works in his shirt sleeves. Youngstein then anecdoted as how Mayer became a board member of the short-lived Entertainment Corp. of America: "He joined us when we agreed upon terms—the terms being we paid him no salary." And "We (ECA) never got to our first board meeting without being blown out of the water. This can leave a man rather sullen."

Youngstein was upstaged by the appearance of a big girl in little pants (the long black-stocking type) who seemed to have come from no where (and should have stayed there) to present Mayer with a salami from a local delicatessen, along with a speech which didn't make sense to at least one auditor. Commented Young-

Exec Council of the British Film Producers' Assn. has decided after some years, to legitimatize a nodding cooperation it has been indulging with its opposite numbers in the Federation of Film Makers. The FBFM is to send three official reps to serve on the BFPA's Export Committee.

In fact this has always been one committee which has been regarded by all as a common meeting ground for those leaders of the British industry involved heavily with export, whether members of the BFPA or not.

BY FOREIGN PIX IN PHILADELPHIA

By JERRY GAGHAN

Philadelphia, May 21.

With two midtown firstruns committed to foreign films and a half dozen outlying nabes getting a new lease on life with imported product, the Philadelphia area is experiencing a marked upsurge of interest in the art film field.

The Trans-Lux Theatre and the Rugoff's World are the midtown landmarks and the chains have entered the outlying competish. Stanley-Warner of Philadelphia has made the switch in three suburban houses — the Lane, Cheltenham and Yorktown; and the William Goldman chain has converted its Bryn Mawr to firstrun imports, generally playing day and date with the World.

According to World manager Ken Packer: "What draws American audiences to foreign films is the urge that drives them to foreign travel—to see humanity in an alien setting. In a sense, the movies provide an easy method of traveling abroad for a few hours. Sometime the impulse stems from a desire to revisit the cultures of their parents or grandparents.

Packer testifies, "comedy does best always, but serious films are not weak. Satire generally falters and poorly made films and foreign imitations of American films always fail."

There seems to be no rules for what themes prove attractive or repulsive. "The imagination of the American audience was captured by the expressionism of 'Last Year at Marienbad,' by the stark undressed realism of 'The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner' and the poetry of 'The Island.' Excellence seems to be the criterion rather than theme."

Morality in the area has not been affected by the outspoken films from abroad. "The movies are a catharsis, not a stimulant," Packer argues. "Moralists are more disturbed than morality."

As to the relative value of stars, he claims it has been a man's year. "Mastroianni has earned an enormous following. Sellers of England is riding a wave, and BB and the queens have faded somewhat. But when an industry turns up a Sellers, it should ration him, instead of the present tendency to glut."

Frank Reed, most vocative of the S-W art house managers, said children aren't a problem in the foreign film audience. "We may have one child in a Saturday night audience of 1,500," he stated.

An Italian film to succeed no longer needs Sophia Loren or Gina Lollobrigida, according to Reed. "Lately the psychiatrical pictures seem to envoy a vogue. 'The Mark' was well done but nothing spectacular and it ran 19 weeks. 'David and Lisa,' at the Lane, looks certain to break all records."

Payroll Dicting Helps The Figure; 20th Revises 'Cleo' Cost: $34-Mil; Zanuck 'Referees' Female Fracas

By VINCENT CANBY

First annual meeting of 20th Century-Fox at which President Darryl F. Zanuck has presided was marked by interesting economic revelations and emotional stockholders who were, however, fighting each other rather than management. Meeting convened at 2 p.m. yesterday (Tues.) in Town Hall, with a capacity of 822 and about half-filled, as for an unknown soprano. Zanuck quipped at outset that fortunately "Cleopatra" was certain to be a better draw than he was.

Highlights of the afternoon proved (1) the figures covering the first quarter of 1963 ending March 30, (2) the grosses to date on Zanuck's own film, "The Longest Day," (3) Jean Goldwurm of Times Film attacking Seymour Poe, 20th's exec veep and Zanuck warmly defending him. Finally, incidentally and by way of color there was (4) a real battle for possession of a microphone between Gloria Parker, who had it, and Evelyn Y. Davis, who wanted it. Blows were exchanged between the ladies. During this episode Zanuck looked confused and wondering. Miss Parker drew notice a year ago when she sought to nominate Liz Taylor to the 20th board.

Despite the time-consuming questions, and/or call them speeches, of various shareowners, none of a laconic bent, the meeting was kept on the rails, Zanuck proving an able moderator, if without the originality of phrase once marking Spyros Skouras, now the corporation chairman but just part of Zanuck's entourage on stage this time along with the lawyers, auditors and Poe.

Issues of moment also included revelations of a bona fide offer to dispose of the company's west coast studios on terms which would produce $10,000,000 profit. Zanuck also spoke of a possible selloff of the N.Y. quarters on 10th Avenue but that, he warned, was not a simple matter so as to avoid any disruption of service by 20th's De Luxe Labs, a profitable adjunct.

Profit prospects from property values were intriguing to the holders present. So, too, were the rentals to date of "Longest Day," namely $9,771,000 domestic and $6,607,000 foreign, or $12,378,000 already in hand. Zanuck projected ultimate rentals on this film at $13,375,000 and $16,330,000, respectively, for domestic and foreign playoff.

Stress was strong on the curtailment of operating expenses as reflected in this first quarter against the same period year ago. Zanuck candidly gave salaries of former employes as contrasted with their successors on payroll.

Recital of salaries was raptly followed. Present Kimo Williams at $1,300 contrasted to retired Bob Goldstein's $3,500 in foreign production. The present publicist, Harold Rand, at $600 weekly was against $3,500 weekly to his predecessor, S. Charles Einfeld. Dick Zanuck, son of DFZ, is paid $1,000 currently as studio head on coast in contrast to Peter Levathes' stipend of $3,000. Seymour Poe has not replaced one exec but several, it was emphasized, in pointing to his pay at $1,150 a week against Murray Silverstone's prior $3,885. Sales exec Joe Sugar gets $1,000. Previously Glen Norris was paid $1,500, Sid Rogell at the studio ran to $2,000, with the job now paying $750 to Stan Hough.

"Cleopatra" engaged notice. Zanuck revised downward the estimated cost of the negative, now at $34,000,000, and confided that only $182,000 had been spent thus far on its ad campaign. Liz Taylor's compensation was $1,725,000. In his one articulation of the afternoon Skouras answered a floor question: Richard Burton was paid $250,000.

Meeting lasted two hours and 35 minutes, elected all management nominees. Zanuck declined to predict earnings a year hence. It was stressed that the first quarter showing of $2,202,135 net, or 98c a share equivalent, comparing to same quarter last year's 20c less, or $513,587 was entirely apart from and not inclusive of advance payments on "Cleopatra" bookings. (Last year's big loss for 20th was due to huge write-offs on productions.)

The gross income on the first quarter was stated as $23,961,178, down from $32,000,287.

18% BETTERMENT FOR NAT GENERAL, 26 WEEKS

Los Angeles, May 21.

National General Corp. registered an 18% increase in earnings for 26 weeks ended March 26, 1963, racking up $1,751,753 over last year's corresponding $1,485,383, according to prexy Eugene V. Klein. Earnings from Mobile Rentals Corp., recently-acquired subsidiary were included in both periods, exec noted. Net for 1962 period, he said included a special item of $411,270, but income for '63 span resulted entirely from operations.

New figure was equivalent to 53c per share on 3,313,363 shares of common on basis of operations alone. Corresponding take last year was 52c per share on same number of shares on basis of $1,074,000 operations profit, and with special-item earnings it was equal to 45c per share.

Exec stated that since real estate is now part of NGC's regular business profits or losses from such transactions are regarded as part of circuit's regular operating income. Profits in this division amounted to $273,000 in '63 period as against $16,000 last year.

Total income for company increased in new period to $93,706,652 from earlier $77,438,800, according to Klein. He attributed increased earnings for year to date to improved operating efficiency throughout NGC's 230-theatre circuit plus stepped-up vending activity at theatres.

Warners Will Commit Its Product Ahead, Up To 20, If Theatres Sign

Warner Bros. is on the move with a new policy of licensing its film product as much as a year in advance, somewhat similar to the old, pre-antitrust days. With one fell swoop WB salesmen are authorized to peddle as many as 20 pictures to a single account, covering a 12-month span of availabilities.

This is not a WB exclusive. A couple of others have undertaken the same approach and it is now gaining trend proportions.

Tipoff on the WB attitude came from Dallas last week where Ralph Lanoni, playdate manager, outlined the idea before a meeting of district managers. It was explained in detail at the homeoffice yesterday (Tues.) upon a reporter's inquiry.

It originated with theatremen in small towns, and will be confined to same theatremen in small towns. Because of the economics involved, these exhibs are not called upon very frequently by film company salesmen. So now, upon the one visit by the salesman, the little-guy showmen have the opportunity to buy in bulk—as many as 20 features as detailed in the production schedule over a year's time.

WB et al., reportedly Columbia and Universal, are restricting the plan to non-bidding situations. In many cases these would be one-theatre towns. Further, the theatremen have a 20% cancellation privilege.

Exhibs allegedly asked for the long-range buying opportunity because it gives them assurance of a product supply and more freedom, timewise, in plotting promotion.

Bigscale productions have been, and are being, booked well in advance of actual showing, such as Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal" via Columbia and 20th-Fox's "Cleopatra." But these are only sporadic. There's just no practical (and legal) way of selling a full season's product to important theatres in the competitive areas.

Holdovers fairly much dominate the local b.o. scene. None of fresh entries, other than "Critic's Choice," seems calculated to stir up much boxoffice activity. It is rated good at State. The amazing "To Kill a Mockingbird" starts its fourth Loop month at the World. Champion "How West Was Won" is moving up to a wow take in 10th week at the Cooper.

"Lawrence of Arabia" looms dandy in fifth session at the Academy. "Dr. No" had done so well in first week at Orpheum that its moveover was warranted.

'Ugly' Smart 10G, Cleve.; 'West' 11G

Cleveland, May 21.

Bulk of strength in current round here is centered in the holdovers and longruns. Of the few newcomers, none shapes up well. "Ugly American" is standout with a smart session in second week at the Allen. "No Exit" is fairish depleting two smaller houses.

"How West Was Won" shapes fast in sixth stanza at Palace while "Lawrence of Arabia" shapes fine, also in sixth, at the larger Stillman.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (Stanley-Warner) (2,800; $1.30)—"Ugly American" (U) (2d wk). Smart $10,000 or over after $12,500 last week.

Sudden Heat Bops Port. But 'West' Okay $7,000

Portland, Ore., May 21.

Sudden heat wave plus some competing traveling shows is cutting into firstrun biz here currently. The few new pix are noteworthy for their weakness. However, "Come Fly With Me" is solid in first at Orpheum. "How West Was Won" is the best of the longruns which are taking it on the chin this stanza.

B'way Limping Despite Many New Pix; 'Mountain' Okay 13SG, 'Singing' 21G, 'Light' Bright 12G, 'Ugly' Fine 27G

The season of the year reflects the lightweight biz now being registered at most Broadway firstruns. While a rainy, cool Saturday gave trade a nice lift, especially at theatres playing hardticket pix, an ideal Sunday for outdoor recreation and much warmer weather Monday cut deeply at the boxoffice. Heavy rain late Monday afternoon had little influence one way or the other.

Top newcomer is "Spencer's Mountain," with stageshow, which likely will land an okay $138,000 opening session at the Music Hall. "I Could Go On Singing" shapes fair $13,500 at the Astor in first week but looks nice $7,500 at the Trans-Lux 85th St. in some period.

Other newcomers are at the arty theatres. Best showing looks to be that of "White Light" with a bright $12,000 in first session at the Beekman. "Julius Caesar" is doing surprisingly well for an oldie in first at the Murray Hill.

"Ugly American" looms as top extended-run pic outside some of the hardticket films. It is heading for a handsome $27,000 in sixth week, daydating the Rivoli and Trans-Lux East. "The Birds" still shapes fine in eighth week daydating the Palace and Sutton, with the eighth cut to four days at the latter.

Inside Stuff—International

A beef about the Folies Bergere, the Casino de Paris, etc., is that they never offer "anything new." But in the new Casino show, Henry Verna, the perennial showman, has figured out a new wrinkle that no one can deny. He's moved the pitmen onto a corner of the first balcony, doing away with some had 50 seats. As to the additional places he found down front—why he's tacked in some new 20 seats, then sur.

Roy Thomson, Canadian newspaper owner and chairman of Scottish Television, the commercial tv station in Scotland, is now running newspapers in East, West and Central Africa, in Asia and the West Indies. He also operates television stations in the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Sierra Leone and the Sudan, Jamaica and Trinidad, Gibraltar, Mauritius and Aden.

As the artistic director of the Vienna Staatoper, Herbert von Karajan, has so far been present in Vienna during the whole season only 78 days (and conducted only eight performances). He has engaged a co-director who is an additional aggravation on the budget. Being the director of the Stuttgart opera-house, "on loan" to the Vienna Staatsoper, Prof. W. E. Schaefer whose pay in Vienna is $4,000 a month has now asked that his Stuttgart pension be taken over by the Austrian government, after he retires—(he is in his 60s) if he is to stay on in Vienna. So far he has a one year contract renewable each year.

As the General Manager and Artistic Director of the Berlin Festival died recently with arrangements not complete for the Festival starting late in September, Wolfgang Stresemann, administrative director of the Berlin Philharmonic has taken over for this year. Next year's director will be Nicolas Nabokov, at present consultant to Mayor Willy Brandt on Ford Foundation matters. Nabokov (cousin to "Lolita" author) is a composer in his own right having to his credit several ballet scores, the best known "Union Pacific" created by Leonid Massine for the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo in 1930s, as well as an opera "Rasputin" or "The Holy Devil." He taught at Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore for several years and is since 1952 general secretary of the "Congress for Cultural Liberty." The next Congress was to have taken place this fall in Bahia (Brazil) but for political and inflationary reasons was cancelled.

Spain's Authorities, Distrib Soon Seeking Compromise on Baremo

Madrid, May 14.

Although results of the Baremo point system have not yet been fixed to guide film distributors on their individual allocation of import licenses for the 1963-64 season, both film authorities and the distributors' association within the Sindicato are still seeking a compromise on the disposition of 12 incentive licenses the government has agreed to add to the annual U.S. quota of 88 Yank imports.

According to film sources, Director General of Cinema Garcia Escudero would like to dole out the extra bonus licenses to individual distribs (U.S. and Spanish) who have substantially aided in the release of Spanish product abroad. The distrib association has rejected the government formula and wants all 100 licenses to come under the Baremo. Distrib leaders are prepared to add a point rating to their complicated mathematical computer to cover foreign distribution of Spanish pix.

Government film authorities are not pressing their proposal in order to avoid a headon collision with the well-organized distributor wing of the film industry even though, at the moment, no solution has been suggested to bridge the viewpoint gap between the two groups.

Meanwhile, time needed to line up product is running short despite the industry feeling that the final Baremo tally will produce no appreciable change in last year's license allocation pattern under the distrib association Baremo scoreboard.

MASTROIANNI SET FOR SICILIAN BARON SEQUEL

Rome, May 21.

The sequel to "Divorce, Italian Style" is almost inevitably on its way, but its makers are doing their best to keep it from being the usual follow-up of a hit, headed for a hard-to-avoid letdown.

And while Pietro Germi will not direct the new film, which will most likely be called "Baron Fofo," after the principal character, the task will be taken on by Alfredo Giannetti, who shared the Oscar award for best script with Germi and who is a director in his own right.

Most importantly, too, Marcello Mastroianni has agreed to resume his hit role as the Sicilian Baron, and Germi and co-writer Ennio De-Concini have all agreed to continue their collaboration on the second film as well.

No stars have been set besides Mastroianni. Pic is slated to roll later this year on South Italian locations, where Pietro Germi will himself start directing his new film, "Seduced and Abandoned" with a likewise unset cast. Both are being produced by Vides Films.

Joe Fearon Moved Up By Brunswick Int'l

Sydney, May 14.

Joe Fearon, Brunswick International's local exec, has been appointed managing director of BI's European zone, with headquarters in Zurich.

Fearon was for years in the picture biz, first with the Hoyts' loop and then with Metro as assistant to Bernie Freeman, local chief.

Vienna Critic Fined $200

Vienna, May 14.

Karl Laebl, the Austrian capital's toughest critic, was fined $200 because he had written in one of his latest ballet reviews:

"Ballet dancers and dancerines must have it merely in their legs, and it is not necessary that they have brains."

No less than 27 members of the State-Owned Opera and Ballet united in a common law suit, claiming they had been ridiculed in public by Laebl. The judge pronounced him guilty on this charge.

Embassy's Joe Levine Fixes World Distrib For 'Zulu,' Africa Pic

Johannesburg, May 14.

More publicity is being accorded to the Stanley Baker—Cy Endfield production, "Zulu," now being shot in the Tugela River Valley, than any pic ever before made in South Africa. Endfield is directing the $3,500,000 epic from his own screenplay, which recreates the Battle of Rorke's Drift which occurred in 1879, when for 24-hours, 140 British soldiers held off the attacks of 4,000 of Chief Cetewayo's finest warriors. Baker has the lead role of Lieutenant Chard, one of the 11 men awarded posthumous V.C.'s for outstanding bravery displayed in defending the tiny mission station at Rorke's Drift.

Costarred are British actor Jack Hawkins and Swedish actress Ulla Jacobsson. Several Africans have featured roles. Among more than 1,000 people employed on location in the National Park is top British stuntman John Sullivan. On the Natal set, Sullivan's job is to train five handpicked African stuntsmen, who in turn pass on their knowledge to the hundreds of headed, plumed "warriors" (many of them domestic servants and laborers from nearby farms) recruited for the film.

Joseph E. Levine, president of Embassy, which is organizing world distribution for "Zulu," recently flew to South Africa from Rome to check on progress. Before returning to Italy and his newest film, "Ghost At Noon," starring Brigitte Bardot and Jack Palance, he revealed that he intends making two more major pix in South Africa by 1964. Using the same production team as on "Zulu," "Sands Of Kalahari" will start rolling as soon as the current project is completed. To follow this is an untitled story by screenwriter Lou Grisel. Stanley Baker will star in all three.

"Zulu" will be released in South Africa by Star Film-Import. With 27-year-old Cndre Pieterse as managing-director, the company recently absorbed several former members of 20th-Fox' organization. Latest Star-Import release is another Levine pic, "Boccaccio '70" originally banned by the South African censors and later passed by the Minister of the Interior. Currently it's playing two Johannesburg cinemas, the Capri and the Monte Carlo.

Levine stated that he has completed arrangements for the world preem of "Zulu" in New York and London around Christmas time. It will be released also simultaneously in 12 other world capitals.

Insured for Battle Pic, Nobody Wants to Pay

Vienna, May 14.

Producer Walt Disney had properly insured all soldiers and officers of the Austrian regular army, participating in shooting war scenes in connection with his motion picture of the Vienna riding school. But now no "competent" office can be found to pay for injuries suffered by Hans Zika. He was hit by a gun cartridge, as used here during maneuvers.

The state sick and accident insurance people returned the hospital bill to the Army Office with the remark that Sika was insured merely for one day by the production company. The Ministry of Defense, responsible for army matters, also refuses to pay the bill. Attorney Hans Mathis, who is taking the case to court says he is sure of one thing. His client will not pay the bill. Austrian newspapers commented they seldom had heard of such a silly matter of competence.

Fairbanks Jr. Confers With Scots on Hotels

Glasgow, May 21.

Douglas Fairbanks Jr., actor-producer, huddled here with local businessmen over multi-million dollar plans. Among his projects are a chain of hotels and motels, and a string of bowling alleys. Fairbanks also hopes to convince American business associates that auxiliary factories should be established in Scotland.

He said his plans could mean a lot of jobs for Scotland, and, on top of that, would attract even more tourists. Douglas Fairbanks Jr. didn't wear the Scot kilt on his visit here, but he is entitled to. As a life-member of the Clan Campbell Society, he has a right to the tartan and often wore it as a child.

'Rat' Author Turns Down Offer to Script $4,000,000 Film Prod.

Tokyo, May 14.

Although his novel "King Rat" was widely acclaimed by the critics as a deeply personal work born of his own experiences as a prisoner of the Japanese in Southeast Asia for three years during the last World War, Hollywood writer-director-producer James Clavell declined to tackle the screenplay for the $4,000,000 film version planned by Columbia. One reason is that it would have meant a reduction in status for Clavell to doff his author's hat for that of a screenwriter.

"I have found that the people in Hollywood, like people throughout the world, have respect for the novel," said Clavell, here on the first leg of a swing through Southeast Asia to reacquaint himself with the Orient.

"King Rat" brought one of the highest prices ever paid by a film company for an unpublished first novel.

Another reason why Clavell chose not to undertake the screenplay of "King Rat" is that being only a screenwriter, he would have to surrender control of the final product.

While "King Rat" can stand on its own merits as a book, Clavell noted that his background as a screenwriter is seen in its style. He said, it is not quite a normal novel, but closer to screenplay form. "If I wanted to make a screenplay from it, all I needed was a blue pencil. That's why the bidding by the picture companies was so high. It could be easily visualized as a film. Almost all critics mentioned that it would make a picture."

Believing that the director is the real force behind a film, for his three original screenplays, Clavell managed to become also director and producer, giving him virtually complete control over the films, "Five Gates to Hell," "Walk Like a Dragon" and "The Sweet and the Bitter" (made last year in Canada for British Lion).

When he returns to Hollywood, Clavell will start penning the script of "The Satan Bug," his third in a row for the Mirisch Co. Just before this trip, Clavell completed the scenario of "633 Squadron."

CUSHNESS FOR LEAD IN SCOT FEST LEGIT

Edinburgh, May 21

Sir Alec Guinness will play the lead role in Ionesco's new play, "Le Roi se Meurt," at the upcoming Edinburgh International Festival. Produced by the English Stage Company, the play will be presented under the title, "Exit the King." It is skedded for its British preem at the Lyceum Theatre here Sept. 2 running the final week of the Fest.

Guinness played Richard II at the 1947 Edinburgh Festival, its opening year. His last appearance here was in 1948 in T. S. Eliot's "The Cocktail Party."

Robert Gurney Jr., president of Gurney Productions, New York-based independent, reported this week he'll conduct a survey to determine "what external pressures influence people's movie going habits" and the results will serve as guideposts for the promotion of his new feature, "The Prude and the Parisienne." Gurney also made it clear he's doing a burn because his request for a Production Code seal has been turned down.

According to Gurney, psychology students from universities in New York, Philadelphia and New Haven will work the downtown areas of those three cities, polling people as they either enter or leave a theatre. Among the questions: "Do you know what the Seal of Approval is? If so, would the absence of the seal affect your decision to see the picture in question?"

Poll is to be conducted over a two-week period starting tomorrow (Thurs.). Theatre customers also are to be asked about the influence of ad campaigns, choice of Hollywood or foreign films, influence of the various media and the influence of multi-million dollar production budgets.

Gurney said he got the Code brush because of a "major misunderstanding." He describes his picture as a "satiric comedy using the subject of nudism to poke fun at conformity in the United States." He stresses it's not a "nudist" film in the usual sense, for everyone is fully clothed, and writer Meyer Levin and the cast members wouldn't embarrass themselves by taking part in a strip pic.

Comments Gurney: "If Doris Day, Rock Hudson and Tony Randall had appeared in the identical script there would be no problem. The opposition we have received for a comedy of this sort is ridiculous. I fully intend to release this film in the near future and I hope this survey will give me the information concerning the direction I should take in its promotion, advertising and distribution."

Sydney (Annie) Finds Many Politicos Favor Cinemas on Sundays

Sydney, May 14.

New South Wales' exhibitors, with Sydney the key city, this week approached top politicians requesting permission to open their cinemas Sunday nights following the conclusion of church services around 8:15 p.m. Exhibs point out that tele stations are permitted to run pix on the Sabbath without hindrance, and likewise told the politicos that hundreds of clubs have the greenlight to screen the 16m product on Sundays both afternoon and night.

Exhibs emphasized the fact that a Sabbath playdate would be the means of keeping many cinemas from going into the red. They stressed the point that Sunday openings were permitted in other parts of Australia and New Zealand.

It's expected here that the Robert Menzies' Liberal Party government will give the okay for Sabbath cinemas in Canberra, the governmental seat. It's tipped that the Heffron Labor Party government, controlling the New South Wales' zone, with headquarters in Sydney, favor Sabbath open doors for films, provided certain union obstacles can be overcome, minus any labor upset.

Understood that Sabbath pix are now looked upon favorably by Roman Catholic and Church of England clergy as the means of keeping teenagers off the streets. Police officials also are said to be in favor of Sunday opening here.

William Harrop, leader of the theatrical employees' union ushers, cashiers and projectionists) long has opposed Sunday shows, despite the fact that his union carries a heavy unemployment list.

Harrop has indicated that his union will fight any more for cinema operation on the Sabbath. However, it's believed by many that with an okay for Sunday playdates in Canberra and other Aussie keyers, Harrop's union will be forced to submit to the wipeout of the ancient blue law.

Caesar's Epilepsy in 'Cleo' Feared

Doctor Doesn't Deny — Historic Fact But Dreads Public 'Superstition'

Now it's the Epilepsy Foundation getting in on the "Cleopatra" act.

Dr. Charles Kram, exec director of the Epilepsy Foundation, has written a letter to 20th-Fox prez Darryl F. Zanuck expressing the fear that scenes in "Cleopatra"—showing Julius Caesar in the throes of an epileptic seizure—will offset gains in public education re epilepsy.

Despite the fact that today 80% of all epileptics can control their seizures via drugs, and lead generally normal lives, too many people continue to regard it superstitiously, as they did in Caesar's day, according to Dr. Kram. He acknowledges that it is too late to change the scenes in "Cleo," but asks Zanuck to use "all the resources at your command to make known that epilepsy today can be controlled."

Sealed With Enthusiasm

In a highly unusual move, 20th-Fox announced Monday (20) that "Cleopatra" has received a Code Seal as well as the following quote of praise from Production Code Administrator Geoffrey Shurlock: It is easily the peer of any of the previous great presentations of history on the screen."

There had never been much doubt, of course, that the pic would get a Code seal.

ED FABIAN GEN'L CONV. CHAIRMAN FOR '63 TOA

Edward L. Fabian, v.p. of Fabian Theatres, has been named general convention chairman for the 1963 meeting of Theatre Owners of America to be held concurrently with the 1963 Trade Show of the Combined Motion Picture Theatre Equipment & Concessions Industries at the Americana Hotel, N.Y., Oct. 28-31.

The Trade Show, jointly sponsored by TOA, National Assn. of Concessionaires (NAC), Theatre Equipment & Supply Mfrs. Assn. (TESMA) and Theatre Equipment Dealers Assn. (TEDA) has already sold 97 booths, with plenty of additional inquiries coming in all the time.

Fabian will be in charge of the entire program for the 16th annual TOA conclave, the first the group has held in Gotham since 1956. In that year, the exhib group used the N.Y. Coliseum.

'Great Escape' Tactics; Bring Press Into Series Of Regional Previews

Hollywood, May 21.

Mirisch-United Artists has budgeted "in excess of $80,000" for two tours of the country by producer-director John Sturges and C. Wallace Floody, technical adviser, to promote "The Great Escape." Overall promo budget on picture is $1,000,000.

Sturges initiates the tour, with Floody following him in each area. Producer begins May 27 in San Francisco on cross-country trek carrying him through June 14, when he hits Atlanta. Stops will be major cities in the country, with newsmen to be flown in from nearby metropolitan areas. Sturges said they will cover news media from 30 cities on the trek.

Sturges says he "is to be there purely as a source of information, a walking press release." Idea is that press must see picture "in an audience screening rather than a projection room."

Sturges, noting film runs two hours and 48 minutes, said accent on audience is to aid newsmen in "getting caught up in the picture." There is no intermission but picture is made to provide for one intermission in Europe, "where most countries require a break."

Sturges, on June 17, goes to London for the June 20 world preem at the Odeon theatre. Event is sponsored by the Royal Air Force Benevolent Assn. Stars James Garner and Steve McQueen, now on other pix, may attend if filming schedules can be arranged.

"Escape" makes its U.S. bow July 3 at Fox Wilshire theatre here. No New York booking has yet been set.

'We're for Adults'

Schenectady, May 21.

Scotia, an art house in Scotia, village near here, is now advertising: a "Theatre for adults. Children through high school are admitted only with their parents." Copy broke last week during the engagement of "David & Lisa."

Many of the Scotia's productions are foreign-made. An occasional "Condemned" (by the Legion of Decency) release has been shown.

Val Ritchey, an employee of General Electric, operates the Scotia (once a Schine situation).

Despite the tough enforcement stand taken by the government as regards further expansion of any major circuit, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres has been gradually moving into different areas and different types of houses that it had operated in the past.

This per AB-PT v.p. Edward L. Hyman, who recently returned from a field trip visiting affiliates and their houses. What with changing patterns of exhibition away from the old, large downtown structures, Hyman notes that the circuit has gotten rid of most of its really oversize situations.

The veep notes that the circuit has been developing a pattern of relocation to shopping centers and is also moving into drive-in operation with heavier emphasis than previously. But, the exec notes, the procedure is slow and difficult because of the heavy restrictions placed on the major circuits by Government. He noted the move presently underway by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees which advocates a slackening of the regulations to make for easier expansion and greater development by the ones who are best equipped to handle it.

The major circuits are moving along in this direction, but much slower than they would prefer. In some cases, government regulation is so tough that, when a theatre is torn down, relocation is virtually demanded on the same site. AB-PT currently operates some 487 theatres and is expanding all the while. The problem is getting clearance to move out of the old areas where exhib patterns have showed a trend away and getting it done with some degree of dispatch.

ALTURA FILMS HANDLING METRO REISSUES IN N.Y.

Marvin Friedlander has taken on the job of handling Metro's reissues in the New York market. He had been associated with Cleon Perry in a franchise operation.

Perry is now running an art film unit at MGM, this being a separate subsidiary under domestic sales v.p. Morris Lefko.

Perry had been functioning as more or less a states rights distributor, although MGM prefers to call them independent distributors. He and others around the country have been assigned the theatrical rights to numerous back-number MGM pix.

The Perry-Friedlander company is called Altura Films.

Perry meanwhile is in charge of booking and selling art films, mainly imports, for MGM.

$100 Minimum For Film Row Staff Salesmen

Motion picture salesmen employed in exchanges on Film Row will have minimum salary of $100 per week, after a year of selling experience in industry, according to provision in new contract disclosed May 14 by IATSE.

Agreement, negotiated by IA-affiliated Colosseum of Motion Picture Salesmen, calls for blanket weekly increase of $4, plus 75c boost in weekly payments to Film Exchange Employees Pension Fund. Fund boost brings total pension contribution to $3.75.

Increases are retroactive to Dec. 1, 1962. Contract also provides (1) beginning with second year of two-year deal, that a medical insurance program will be initiated with employer and employee splitting premium cost; increase in country salesman's expense allowance to $12.25 daily; additional week of severance pay; boost in annual paid vacation from two to three weeks after 12 years continuous employment with same company.

Contract includes, for first time, an agency-shop clause, to be applicable where such arrangements are permitted under state law, specifying that salesman not joining union shall pay representation fee of same amount as dues paid by member salesmen.

Distributors signing agreement were Loew's, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, Warner Bros., United Artists, Universal, Columbia, Allied Artists and Buena Vista. Contract was negotiated by Colosseum prexy Bruce C. Warren, Maurice J. Artigues, James W. Whiteside, Raymond R. Russo, and Chet LeVoit, with assists from attorney David B. Bartell and IATSE General Office.

READE-STERLING SETS FEATURE VIA CANADA

Walter Reade-Sterling, which is currently reaping boxoffice rewards via two U.S.-made indie productions, "David and Lisa" and "The Balcony," is extending its interests in domestic film production. Company has just concluded a two-picture deal with Roth-Kershner Productions, the first of which, "The Luck of Ginger Coffey," is scheduled to go into production in Canada next January.

Irvin Kershner will direct the picture, which will actually be produced by Reade-Sterling and Roth-Kershner in association with Crawley Films of Canada, headed by F. R. Crawley, which has studios in Ottawa. "Coffey," which Brian Moore will adapt for the screen from his own novel, is a comedrama about a settler in modern Canada.

Both pix under the new deal will be released by Reade-Sterling's Continental Distributing division.

In addition to its deal with Reade, Roth-Kershner also have a production deal with the Mirisch Co. and United Artists.

Italian Director Suing Spanish Distrib on Cuts

Italian director Michael Angelo Antonioni has ordered attorney Vincenzo Cacea to take legal action against Radio Films for having deleted over a half-hour of footage from his latest film, "Eclipse."

Along with the deletions, the distributor added an explanatory foreword to provide a moral safeguard for Spanish audiences.

In a letter to local critics, the Italian film director stated that the Spanish distributor version of his film was edited down without his knowledge or consent and that, as a result, the version in release here has completely distorted the film.

This is the first time that a foreign director has utilized judicial channels to preserve the artistic integrity of his product and the outcome will be closely watched by the industry at large. It should be pointed out that "Eclipse" was approved by government censors without any alterations and without any request for an explanatory frame preceding the film.

National Boxoffice Survey

Biz Sluggish; 'West' Still Champ, 'Arabia' 2d, 'Ugly' 3d, 'Birds' 4th, 'Mutiny' 5th, 'Mock'bird' 6th

Potential film theatre patrons are feeling the outdoor urge in increasing numbers this season, and key city biz generally is on the skids. Continued dearth of strong fare also is disheartening to many exhibs, who are trying reissues even though they are not doing much. It's a question of cutting down overhead while lesser screen vehicles are offered.

Still champion, by an even larger margin, is "How West Was Won" (MGM) (12th wk), currently playing in some 20 keys covered by VARIETY. Pic is leader in most spots and is grabbing big coin even in cities where biz is way off. "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (10th wk) is finishing second, same as a week ago.

"Ugly American" (U) (6th wk) is winding up third, same spot it held last round. "The Birds" (U) (6th wk) is capturing fourth position same as a week ago. "Mutiny on Bounty" (MGM) (22d wk) will be fifth just as it was last stanza.

"To Kill a Mockingbird" (U) (21st wk) is taking sixth money. "Critic's Choice" (WB) (7th wk) is moving up from way down on list to seventh position. A batch of new playdates and better showings is responsible.

"Come Fly With Me" (MGM) (4th wk) is winding up eighth. It was seventh last session. "Longest Day" (20th) (27th wk) is taking ninth spot, remarkable in view of fact that it is playing in only four major keys this week.

"Yellow Canary" (20th) (2d wk) is finishing 10th, the first week it has placed in the weekly survey. "The Balcony" (Cont) (9th wk) will be 11th while "Wrong Arm of Law" (Cont) (4th wk) rounds out the Top 12 grossers.

"David and Lisa" (Cont), "Free, White and 21" (AI) and "Sundays and Cybele" (Davis) are the runner-up films in that sequence.

"In Cool of the Day" (MGM) is uneven this week. "Hercules and Captive Women" (Indie) also is spotty but big in Toronto. "Please, Not Now" (Indie), also new, is lusty in Chi.

"Paranoiac" (U), fair in Frisco, looks slick in Boston. "Spencer's Mountain" (WB) is rated okay on initial week at the N.Y. Music Hall. "The Trial" (Astor), hotsy in Chi, shapes trim in Denver and okay in Philly.

"Mondo Cane" (Times), brisk in L.A., looms nice in N.Y. "Black Fox" (Capri) still sock on extended-run in N.Y., shapes sluggish in Balto.

"Man From Diners' Club" (Col) looks okay in St. Louis. "Operation Bikini" (AI) likewise is okay in L.A.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

LADD AS NEVADA SMITH

Seen Sure To Repeat In 'Carpetbaggers' Sequel

Alan Ladd has been signed for the role of Nevada Smith in the filmization of Harold Robbins "The Carpetbaggers," being coproduced by Joseph E. Levine and Paramount Pictures. Also on the Levine-Paramount sked is another feature based on the Smith character to be titled "Nevada Smith" and Ladd is figured as a natural contender for this too.

Filming of "Carpetbaggers" starts in June at Paramount and will mark Ladd's return to the studio where he starred in over 20 pictures, after a 10-year absence. Not unlike many a Ladd role, Nevada Smith is tough westerner who later goes on to become a top Hollywood cowboy star.

COMPO Sketches Various Projects To Assist Trade

Progress in (1) its anti-censorship campaign, (2) fight for repeal of the theatre admissions tax, (3) move to reinstate its Audience Awards Program, (4) plot to stimulate domestic production and (5) other exhibitor activities was reported by the Congress of Motion Picture Organizations at a N. Y. meeting last week of the group's exec committee.

In the area of censorship, it was reported that particularly strong classification bills were introduced in 12 states this year and that 10 were scrubbed in one form or another, with measures in Connecticut and New Jersey still pending. Reporting on this, Tim Clagett of the Motion Picture Assn. of America's Washington staff noted that 47 states met in session this year with 24 already finished with business.

As far as COMPO's drive to get repeal of the Federal tax on theatre admissions, Baltimore exhib C. Elmer Nolte reported that the organization's proposals are still before the House Ways & Means Committee which is currently involved in a hassle over President Kennedy's tax legislation and therefore blocking action on the tax repeal. It was noted, however, that individuals in the House committee have expressed interest in the proposal and that none voiced serious objection.

COMPO's search for ways to stimulate domestic film production was reported to be "making progress," although it is still in the investigation stage with no firm proposals ready for discussion at this time. The organization's plan to reinstate its Audience Awards, kudos similar to the Academy Awards except that they are voted by the public from pictures selected by exhibs, was reported moving along. A November, '64 presentation time is currently being aimed at, with a sponsored tv show sought, the proceeds after expenses to go to the Hollywood Museum.

Spurred by reports of interference by local police and others in some small towns around the country, resulting in the pulling of pix by exhibs under such pressure, COMPO decided to institute a campaign to inform exhibs of their rights in such cases, in an attempt to protect them from incorrectly submitting to illegal pressures in pix screenings. The committee also adopted a resolution to get behind a national drive to fight against abuses of the Bill of Rights and to urge the industry's participation in Bill of Rights Day, Dec. 15 of each year, and to get exhibs to play related short subjects on that day in their houses.

The org also approved the application for membership of the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America. Herman Robbins, head of National Screen Service was awarded a scroll for his service to the group, having stepped down as its treasurer last fall after 11 years in the job. It was also announced that COMPO will hold its annual meeting this fall in New York, timed to coincide with the national conclaves of Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Assn. both of which fall within a few days of each other in October.

Melvin Gold No Longer Nat'l Screen Consultant

Melvin L. Gold Enterprises and its namesake prez have discontinued their ad-pub services for National Screen Services. The firm has been ad-pub consultant to National Screen since 1960 and Gold was the firm's ad-pub director during that time, a post he had also held with the company from 1948 to 1954.

Gold recently formed Mead Productions, a Gotham film producing outfit, the first project of which will be the filmization of Virginia McManus' tome "Not For Love" and his firm also handles ad-pub campaigns for indie producers and is a consultant to various industrial and commercial companies and ad agencies.

During his tenure with NSS, Gold maintained offices with that company as well as private Gotham offices outside the company. He'll now headquarter exclusively at his 54th Street offices. Among his other associations with National Screen, Gold formed its tv department in 1948. He was recently elected prez of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, a position he assumes July 1.

Big Clatter at U: 15 Writers Busy

Universal's production pot runneth over. With Eugene Burdick and Frank Gilroy reporting to the studio last week, U now has 15 writers working on 13 different projects which is almost double the number of writers at the studio six months ago. The company has also signed a healthy roster of new producers recently, all adding up to one of its busiest production years in many a semester.

Burdick and Gilroy will both be working on projects for producer George Englund, himself a recent Universal pactee. Burdick, coauthor of "Ugly American," the filmization of which was produced and directed for U by Englund as his first major picture, will be working on the screenplay of his untitled melodrama which Universal bought earlier in the year. Gilroy is revising his "Beau Geste" screenplay.

In addition, Tom Adair and James Allardice are scripting "The Instant Army" for producer Robert Arthur and Larry Markes and Michael Morris are writing "It Seems There Were These Two Irishmen" for the same producer. For Ross Hunter, Oscar Brodney is penning "The Richest Girl in Town," Jean Holloway is doing the screenplay of "Madame X" and Carl Reiner is scripting "The Art of Love." Franklin Coen is doing "The Crusades" and David Harmon is writing "Shalako" for producer Stan Margulies. Also, Mel Goldberg is doing "The Lively Set" for William Alland, Stephen Kandel is penning "The Crows of Edwina Hill" for Elliot Kastner and Peter Stone is writing "Fallen Angel" for Harry Keller.

Universal also rece tly discussed plans for the development of a low-budget production adjunct to its regular schedule. This "new horizon" arm is for the purpose of developing new talent in all phases of production and a project from this wing is expected in the near future. The company's production projections for the year were sizeable earlier in the term and, with this added lineup, the company seems in for one of its most active periods in its modern history.

NAT NATHANSON TO N.Y.

Upranked With AA—Vic Bernstein As Successor

Chicago, May 21.

Nat Nathanson, Chi branch manager for Allied Artists, has been upped to the national post of assistant to the general sales manager and will headquarter in New York. His Chi job will be taken over by Vic Bernstein, who had been sales manager.

Nathanson became the Chi topper in 1951 shortly after Allied Artists took over Monogram Pictures.

Martin Ritt, director and coproducer of "Hud" for Paramount, partnered with Paul Newman in Salem Productions, has his work cut out for him in a far-flung series of deals.

He disclosed in New York this week that he and Newman are going at a three-picture deal with Paramount, of which "Hud" is the first, and the first starring Newman. The pact provides that either Ritt must direct, or Newman star in, all three and at least as concerning one of the three Ritt must be the director and Newman the star.

They've got the latter part of the arrangement wrapped up via "Hud." And, now, for Par, two more, each of which is to be directed by Ritt or starring Newman, or perhaps uniting the same combination again.

Salem has the same kind of situation with Columbia. For Col, Ritt is to direct one picture starring Newman, and then for the next two Ritt is to make himself available as director or Newman is to take a starring role. There are no restraints against Ritt and Newman working on either or both of the next two.

Under terms of an old contract, Ritt is obligated to direct three pictures for 20th-Fox.

And then, independent of the Salem pacts, Ritt is going to direct "Panama"—strictly on a salary basis—for Par. This is slated as a John Wayne starrer. Ritt states he may also be producer of this one.

All in all it's obviously a sizeable chunck of schedule and, says Ritt, it ought to be wrapped up in five years.

The commitments to the three studios are not too binding, timewise, to the extent that one studio would demand his services while he's at work elsewhere. Further, Darryl F. Zanuck at 20th-Fox, Jack Karp at Par or Sol A. Schwartz at Col wouldn't insist that he call the turns on any given script with which he didn't see eye to eye.

There are legalistic requirements to work out the contracts but these sorts of things have become matters of compatibility, see Ritt. A studio head doesn't want a director who's dissatisfied with a property, and vice versa, he adds.

So why bother about contracts? Well, according to Ritt, these do establish a tie between artist and studio. Director Ritt would first go to a lot he's under contract to when he comes upon a property of his choice, and said studio would go to him when it has a mutually agreeable property.

Ritt relates his first order of business is promotion of "Hud"—meaning the press rounds. This is a big one on the Par schedule. Then to work on "The Gay Place" for Col. This is to focus on "urban Texas sophisticated politics" and is based on three novellas by William Brammer. Newman is to be the star and it's to be locationed in Austin, Tex. "Hud" was shot 70% just outside of Amarillo, Tex., with the rest at Paramount, Hollywood.

Cost of "Hud": $2,300,000.

WILLIAM SHELTON TRAVELS FOR LANDAU

William Shelton, most recently a 20th Century-Fox exec, has joined the Landau Company and will represent the outfit in international distribution and sales. In this capacity he left for a two-month European tour over the weekend (19), to include visits to France, Italy, Spain, Sweden, Denmark and Germany, where he'll attend the Berlin Film Festival.

Shelton will concentrate on the formulation of coproduction deals with European distributors and production companies for two of the Landau Co.'s upcoming projects, skedded for lensing abroad. These are "The Madwoman of Chaillot," planned to roll in France in October and "Leonardo da Vinci" to go in Italy in November. He'll also set overseas distrib arrangements for such domestic productions as the currently lensing "Fool Killer" and upcoming "Pawnbroker," which rolls in New York in July, "Forbidden Area," which goes in August, and "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter," also skedded for August.

El Buen Amor
(The Good Love)
(SPANISH)

Cannes, May 14.

Alfredo Matas-Jet Films production and release. With Simon Andreu, Marta Del Val, Enriqueta Carballeira, Sergio Mendizabal, Maria Sanchez. Written and directed by Francisco Regueiro. Camera, Juan Julio Baena; editor, Pablo G. Del Amo. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, [illegible] MINS.

Juan	Simon Andreu
Carmen	Marta Del Val
Juanita	Enriqueta Carballeira
Fraile	Sergio Mendizabal
Chica	Maria Sanchez

A gentle, observant pic is chalked up by Francisco Regueiro for his first film. It concerns a pair of adolescent would-be lovers off on a Sunday trek to another town. An X-ray of them, their desires and the effects of their backgrounds and the country on their idyll constantly perk this up when it lags. Thus, its fragile qualities slant this for Spanish-language spots abroad or some specialized situations if well handled.

The couple goes off on a rickety train. The trip is well documented as they neck, have moments of remorse or shame at being watched, or separate if a familiar face is seen. The two finally arrive in the town of Toledo. Here they see the sights as well as slowly divulge themselves.

A playful fight has them apart till they meet up before the train and eventually reveal their true feelings. Pic shows the French New Wave and Cinema Truth influences in seemingly improvised scenes, jump cutting and its statement about the times through youth.

The oppressive church, overdone prudishness, omni-present police and the shadow of the Revolution, though they were children then, looms as they go about their innocent escapade. Marta Del Val has the spontaneous freshness and emotional strength needed for her role while Simon Andreu has forthrightness as the boy if he tends towards mannerisms.

Highly mobile camerawork is effective as is the editing. A first film of promise, if still lacking the means to make a more dramatic impact. It could herald a freer, fresher film movement from the Iberian peninsula. Mosk.

Los Venerables Todos

(ARGENTINIAN)

Cannes, May 14.

NIC release of Jorge Alberto Garber production. With Lautaro Murua, Walter Vidarte, Fernanda Mistral, Maurice Jouvet, Betty Gianola, Paul Pariel. Written and directed by Manuel Antin. Camera, Ricardo Aronovich; editor, Jose Serra. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, [illegible] MINS.

This Argentine pic appears too consciously trying to obscure a tale and theme that could have been told straight-forwardly to have it come off. It may be the bad worldwide effects of that French pic, "Last Year In Marienbad." Present emulation remains mainly a lingo item, at best, for the foreign market.

A group of supposed buddies working together in an office systematically make a cruel butt of the most reserved member of the group. Latter is loved by a girl who realizes what is happening and even gives herself to the ringleader to have him let up. It ends in tragedy when the victim kills his tormentor in a fight with the implication that maybe the latter willed it.

And there are intimations that the lonely but cruel leader, followed by his henchmen in everything to escape the boredom of pettiness of their lives, could be a study of Peronism—also why it existed. Or maybe it's a look at how evil can easily overcome good.

Time is shuffled and people think about the past or near-present within the same scene a la "Marienbad." Pacing is slow and measured as is the acting trying to give a dimension to something that is mainly social and psychological. So this emerges an experimental miss. Mosk.

Tutuno
(Tobacco)
(BULGARIAN)

Cannes, May 14.

Bulgarofilm production and release. With Nevena Kokanova, Yordan Matev, Miroslava Stoyanova, Ivan Kosabov. Directed by Nicolai Korabov. Screenplay, Dimitri Dimov, Korabov; camera, Vulo Radev; music, Vassil Kazandjiev. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, [illegible] MINS.

Irena	Nevena Kokanova
Boris	Yordan Matev
Girl	Miroslava Stoyanova
Pisho	Ivan Kosabov

Chunky, overlong melodrama reaches back to the pre-war Russian-type film in its look at a period of Bulgar history that preceded the Communist takeover as well as castigating the grasping capitalist element and filling the tale with moments of crowd action and technical bravura. However, it does have some telling visual moments and some good acting. But this looms mainly a home product.

A climber, really in love with a young student, marries the daughter of a tobacco-curing factory owner. His wife goes mad and he takes over the business and the other girl who is loved by a communist. He slowly degrades her into using both her charm and bodily wiles to get ahead.

During the war all the characters are again brought into coincidental contact in this sprawling, epic affair. The girl ends up killing herself at the end after the death of her husband, the communist who loved her and others. This is a departure since it seems to intimate that she could not have changed even if conditions had.

The director displays obvious means at his disposal and a solid sense for movement and composition. In spite of the one-sided aspect of it all, there is a lyrical note at times and a continuity of interest mainly because of its pictorial flair. It again may indicate that the Eastern Bloc is falling back to social realism. Mosk.

Codine
(RUMANIAN—FRENCH—COLOR)

Cannes, May 14.

Como Films-Tamara Unifilm Romfilm production and release. With Alexandru Virgil Platon, Nelly Borgeaud, Francoise Brion, Maurice Sarfati, Germaine Kerjean. Directed by Henri Colpi. Screenplay, Yves Jamiaque, Dumitru Carabat, Colpi from book by Panait Istrati; camera (Eastmancolor), Marcel Weiss; editor, Jasmine Chasney. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 97 MINS.

Codine	Alexandre Virgil Platon
Zoitsa	Nelly Borgeaud
Irene	Francoise Brion
Alexis	Maurice Sarfati
Anastasie	Germaine Kerjean

A gently nostalgic tale of life in the Bucharest slums of 1900 also embodies a nice flair for narration. It's really a portrait of the friendship between a little boy and a tortured giant of a man. This is a bit conventional but has the visual solidity and familiar if taking story for general distribution chances in various markets as well as specialized possibilities if given a personalized selling campaign.

"Codine" is a fiery man who believes in complete honesty among friends. He has killed a friend once for betrayal and served 10 years in prison. His miserly mother is also something he hates. Into his life comes a little boy who becomes his friend and admirer. The boy is innocent and learns about life from Codine. He sees the brutality, unemployment and human pettiness of the times as well as a certain nobility in the man himself, who manages to keep alive by sheer brute strength.

Codine finally kills another man who has betrayed him and is killed by his rapacious mother who fears losing some hoarded money to him. Color is nicely hued and acting is uneven but is good by the boy and giant. A cholera epidemic is the strong dramatic base of the pic.

French director Henri Colpi helmed this coproduction. He has taken a Rumanian classic and given it reverent framing. It just lacks the lyric sweep that a western filmmaker might have given it. But this is a more than honorable work and one of the few East-West coproductions that shows positive results. Mosk.

Cannes, May 14.

Gaumont release of Gaumont International-Trianon production. Stars Jean-Claude Brialy, Louis De Funes; features Sophie Daumier, Alfred Adam, Anne Tonietti, Michel Serrault. Directed by Marcel Bluwal. Screenplay, Pierre Tchernia, Michel Audiard, Fred Kassak, Bluwal from book by Bluwal; camera, Andre Bac; editor, Genevieve Vaury. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Danielle	Ann Tonietti
Solange	Sophie Daumier
Beaumanoir	Alfred Adam
Baudu	Michel Serrault

This comedy is a bit reminiscent of the hit Broadway play, "How to Succeed in Business," with the climber trying murder rather than shrewd manipulations. However the lightness of touch is lacking and an attempt to make it all logical, instead of creating its own mood, has this only intermittently funny or entertaining.

Film has some chances on the home grounds with foreign placement more doubtful. It lacks the robustness and originality for arty houses and remains mainly a dualer item for the U.S. Direction is too heavyhanded to give it the ease and visual comedic flair it needs.

An ambitious young man gets the vain ear of the boss of a French equivalent of a Madison Avenue outfit. However, he sees advancement eluding him. He then suddenly begins to resort to mayhem. His plans misfire but the boss is killed accidently. And a series of unintended accidents and mistakes have each boss killed off till he reaches the top.

Louis De Funes, as the high pressure, fuming, perfectly double-taking boss, is the comic highspot of this uneven satire. Jean-Claude Brialy is acceptable as the pusher if he lacks a certain verve to help push the film on to a deeper plane of comic nonchalance. It will need plenty of selling to get it anywhere abroad.

Pic was selected as a competing film at the Cannes Film Fest. Mosk.

The Diabolic Empress
(FORMOSAN-COLOR-SCOPE)

Cannes, May 21.

Run-Run Shaw production and release. Stars Li Li Hua; features Chao Lei, Chang Chung-Wen, Chen Yun Hua, Lo Chi. Directed by Li Han Hsiang. Screenplay, Chen Chi-Jui; camera (Eastmancolor), K. Nishimoto; Wang Shan. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 109 MINS.

Wu Tse Tien	Li Li Hua
Emperor	Chao Lei
Hsiao	Chang Chung Wen
Ho Lan	Lo Chi

Court intrigues in 17th Century China are the center of this elegantly made pic. Rich in hues, court ceremony and intrigues, it lacks the vigor and deeper penetration. Film looks good for nothing but language spots abroad.

A concubine, who has taken the veil, is brought back to the court of the son of her ex-lover. She has had two sons by the latter. She takes over the Emperor's court, has her two sons killed and becomes the head of a new dynasty.

All of this unfolds regally but a bit too slowly. Hence, this remains more a feast for the eye than the intellect. Direction is solid and acting pleasant, but it all remains too one-dimensional. Mosk.

Kertes Hazak Utcaja
(A Cosy Cottage)
(HUNGARIAN)

Cannes, May 21.

Hungaro Film production and release. With Margit Bara, Gyorgy Palos, Miklos Gabor. Directed by Tamas Fejer. Screenplay, Istvan Csurka; camera, Istvan Hildebrand; editor, Zoltan Farkas. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, [illegible] MINS.

Palotas	Miklos Gabor
Wife	Margit Bara
Husband	Gyorgy Palos

It seems that there are emotional troubles in Magyar suburbia also. But this skimpy pic does not have the needed observation or pacing to make it any more than a local item. If it has some good patches, this also does not emerge a pic worth film fest attention.

An engineer goes to a small town as part of his job. He meets the wife of a colleague who seems dissatisfied. She feels she is growing old and has not found what she wants in her home life despite good material means. An affair develops between her and the visitor. But it turns out to be a passing fancy, and he goes back to his wife and kids while she decides to leave her husband and go oh her own.

Film unfortunately plods along instead of delving more deeply into the woman's problems. However, it does denote a tendency to treat contemporary problems. Pic may mean more in Hungary, in its depiction of unrest and disorientation among the more well-off bureaucrats.

Its export chances seem slim except for possible language spots in the foreign market. If competent acting and simple, the theme is not resolved. The director just lacks the needed punch. Also, he is not helped enough by a routine script. It is technically competent. Mosk.

Seppuku
(Hara-Kiri)
(JAPANESE-GRANDSCOPE)

Cannes, May 21.

Shochiku production and release. With Tatsuya Nakadai, Shima Iwashita, Akira Ishihama, Yoshio Inaba. Directed by Masaki Kobayashi. Screenplay, Shinobu Hashimoto; camera, Yoshio Miyajima; editor, Hisashi Sagara. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 135 MINS.

Hanshiro	Tatsuya Nakadai
Miho	Shima Iwashita
Motome	Akira Ishihama
Jinai	Yoshio Inaba
Kageyu	Rentaro Mikuni
Tango	Masao Mishima
Hikokuro	Tetsuro Tamba

A sombre tragedy giving off deep rage against militarism, political systems and beliefs that do not allow for a rational human outlook or future change is brought off in this stunning film. Its very lack of concessions make this one of those brilliant Japanese films that find hardgoing abroad. However, with more hardy U.S. distribs this could well emerge an important arty house item.

In spite of its mayhem and fancy swordplay, the film's measured pace and relentless look at violence, without exploiting it, may disconcert regular audiences. So it calls for specialized bookings and handling but could well be worth it.

In 17th Century Japan, the powerful centralizing Shogun breaks up various self-sufficient clans and creates a flock of rootless ronins, samurai sans masters, who roam the countryside. Some threaten to commit hara-kiri. One clan feels this is against the idealistic military shield of the samurai. Hence, when a young man comes begging they decide to force him to perform it. They make him do it with a wooden blade. This scene is shown unsparingly to underline the senselessness of this sacrifice of life.

In comes an older samurai later and he, too, is to be allowed to commit hara-kiri. But he tells a tale of how he knew the other man who died atrociously. It turns out to be his son-in-law and the man only tried to beg to save his sick son. He had beseeched a delay but it's not handed to him by the clan.

Director Masaki Kobayashi shows a sure sustained hand in building the past and present in a coherent pattern that reveals and moves as it shows men being destroyed in a tragic setup that will eventually be changed but is still one that creates these destinies. It ends in carnage as the would-be hara-kiri victim takes on the whole house, and is finally killed.

But the head of the clan covers up the deed and tries to make him out a hero who died quietly by his own hand within the code. It shows up the hypocrisy in this militaristic philosophy.

If the film probably has deeper connotations on its home grounds, it still has a universal ring to it.

Definitely this is not for the squeamish. Pic is technically audacious in its spacial scenes and cutting on various levels of past and present. Its acting has the right stern bigger-than-life quality that still keeps its people within bounds. Pic depicts their good, petty, great and aspiring qualities without making them cyphers. Its violence is cathartic rather than exploited. Long

British Film Industry Musters A Crowd Scene At Cannes Fest

By HAROLD MYERS

Cannes, May 21.

There's been just about the biggest ever turnout from Britain at the fest here, with strong representations from the majors and indies alike. Robert Clark, president of the British Film Producers Assn. (who is also on the board of Associated British Picture Corp.) heads a big party from that group, which includes Macgregor Scott, just named managing director of Warner-Pathe, James R. Wallis, the studio topper, publicity controller David Jones and his aide Kenneth Allen.

Rank Organization, which has the official British entry in "This Sporting Life," is repped by Colon Macarthur, head of overseas sales, Paul Bethell-Fox of the overseas division, Geoffrey Heal, overseas publicity controller, director Lindsay Anderson and star Richard Harris, as well as Jack Hiscock, who heads Rank's French distriberry.

John Walton, secretary of the BFPA, and Andrew Filson, secretary of the Federation of British Film Makers, joined forces in organizing the British lunch at the weekend, and John Stapleton is again, repping both organizations on the British information stand.

Peter Brook, director of the invited British film, "The Lord of the Flies," came in for a quickie, but had to leave immediately after the screening. Steven Pallos, a festival regular, is doing jury duty for the first time, and finding it tough not to be able to miss a single film.

Among others in from London are Nat Cohen and Philip Jacobs of Anglo-Amalgamated, Michael Bromhead and Sidney Safir of Lion International, Kenneth Rive and Ben Ross of Gala Films, Phil Kutner and Dick Michaels of Miracle Films, Michael Greene of Regal Films International, Hal E. Chester, Tony Morris of Programme Exchange, John Trevelyan, the British film censor, Wendy Toye, director of the official British short "The King's Breakfast," Lawrence Bachmann and Maurice Foster of Metro-British Studios and Tony Tenser and Michael Klinger of Compton-Cameo.

Making a big pitch for his upcoming "The Victors," Carl Foreman had a display in the Carlton Hotel. The producer-director-writer came in with his prexy Sidney Cohn, and was supported by a publicity team which included Euan Lloyd, Sid Mirken and Anthony Howard, as well as Jack Wiener of Columbia's Paris office.

George Gunn, an exec of Technicolor's British plant, had his top brass in from America, including Patrick J. Frawley Jr., Melvin H. Jacobs, Edward E. Ettinger and Curtis Kent. Technicolor has plastered the Croisette with displays, and was demonstrating its newest equipment.

Jack Hylton, with his bride of a few weeks, was one of the hosts at a Carlton cocktailery given by TWW, the commercial tv indie, following the screening of "Dylan Thomas" in the television fest.

WARNER VEEPCIES: GOLDSTEIN, LEDERER

Warner board at a meeting in New York last week elected two new vicepresidents, namely Morey Goldstein, domestic sales head, and Richard Lederer, ad-pub chief.

Goldstein, also titled general sales manager and president of the Warner Distributing Corp., is with the company less than a year. He went to WB last July from the sales manager's post at Allied Artists with which he had been associated 17 years. Previous to AA he held various sales posts during a 20-year association with Metro.

Lederer has headed the ad and public relations departments the past three years. He joined WB in 1950 as an ad copy writer, later becoming assistant national ad manager and a staff producer at the studio in Burbank. He entered the industry in 1946 as an ad copy writer at Col with which he was associated until he joined WB.

That's No Friendly Yodel Returning From Depths of L'Affaire 'Abysses'

Cannes, May 21.

Still echoing here is the French Film Producer Assn ire at the selection of the indie pic "Les Abysses" (The Depths) to represent France officially at this year's 16th Cannes Film Fest. Latest action is resignation by the six producers who were part of the Festival Selection Committee.

It seems that of the 22 members of the Committee, the producers only had three votes with the three others only standbys. The rest were from various ministries, pressure groups, critics, etc. Producers sent their resignations to Culture Minister Andre Malraux and backed up Film Producer Assn. prexy Francis Cosne who earlier protested the choice.

Honorary FFFA prexy Pierre Forgeras went on record as saying that the tradesters were not against films like the "Depths" being made outside the industry but opposed sending them to festivals to represent France as indicative of the industry before a worldwide attendance.

Producer-director Nico Papatakis is bringing suit against Cosne for detrimental public remarks against his film. As outlined in VARIETY (May 8) the pic had already opened at two artes in Paris to mixed reviews and okay biz.

Meanwhile Gilbert De Goldschmidt, producer of the French competing pic "Le Rat D'Amerique" (American Adventurer) which, though not picked by the Selection Committee, replaced another non-industry indie "Hitler" Connais Pas" ("Hitler" Never Heard of Him), of Bertrand Blier, at the last minute took VARIETY to task for its May 8 comment. De Goldschmidt states that Cosne could not be "a sore loser" if he personally had no film in the running for the fest.

De Goldschmidt also points out that the pic by Papatakis did not break any festival rules since technically even an amateur pic could be invited to compete. Papatakis did bypass other rules and also technically had no director permit from the governmental Centre Du Cinema.

He could have been scored on all these counts by the Centre du Cinema but no steps were taken when it came out and only brought up by Cosne when it was picked for Cannes.

That is where the Affaire "Depths" stands as of now. It looks to have deep repercussions on the French industry and fest participation long after the 16th Cannes affair, which winds Thurs. (23).

More Cannes Contracts

Cannes, May 21.

Three additional contracts, bringing the total set to date during the Film Festival here to more than $1,000,000, have been signed by Embassy Pictures for the foreign distribution of its product. New pacts, covering eight features, represent in excess of $500,000 in minimum guarantees for distribution in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. Previous negotiations has set marketing deals for South Africa, Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Portugal.

In Argentina, a distrib deal has been set for the distribution of "Landru" and four Joseph E. Levine-Carlo Ponti pix, including "Ghost at Noon," now in production in Rome, and "Empty Canvas," "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" and "Casanova," all due to roll this summer. A pact was set in Brazil with Serrinha for marketing of the four Levine-Ponti pix plus "Threepenny Opera" and with United Producers de Panama, the company set release of the four Italo features and "Constantine and the Cross" in Colombia, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. Latter deal also calls for the release of "Boccaccio '70" in Colombia alone.

The Fault Lies In Our Stars

provided he has the right to approve, i.e., censor, the story. This is something that Pierre Salinger would not be brash enough to suggest on behalf of President Kennedy."

The article goes on to point out the snickering comments national publications like the Saturday Evening Post and Show have made about Natalie Wood's romances. "Yet it is not the Saturday Evening Post and its sacrosanct sister publications that are in Natalie's disfavor, but that handy old scapegoat—that ever loving maker of stars, the fan magazine. It would seem to be part of the self-deception necessary for those who feel compelled to live in a world of fantasy."

Fan magazines have sometimes been guilty of bad taste; so have the national magazines. Fan magazines sometimes (though rarely) slam a personality; such slams are far more frequent in the consumer nationals.

The feeling that they are too big for the fan magazines is one carefully cultivated among the stars by some of their press agents. In the highly competitive business of press agentry, a publicity man can sometimes land and keep a client by convincing him that he'll get him into magazines with more "status" than the fan books. Actually, some very fine articles appear in the movie magazines, some poor ones in the nationals. Some of the national magazine articles are unfair. Just how much good did it do Beverly Hillbillies to have its show slammed as being on a moron level by the Saturday Evening Post? And what sort of a reward for cooperativeness did Hollywood's young male stars receive when that magazine designated them as soft young men?

Can Tell Them Apart

Many press agents are either too lazy or too overworked to distinguish between dangerous writers and editors and conscientious ones.

Right now what is needed badly is a little common sense to clear the air. It is high time that the publicity people recognized that most fan magazine writers and editors aren't demons trying to destroy the stars, but reporters who cannot ignore all the facts in favor of phoney images. Their readers read the new papers, too. Whenever it is possible to do so, the fan magazines have stressed the pleasanter side of screen personalities, but it isn't fair to expect them to ignore actual news stories. When a Jim Drury blandly claims to be single, the fan magazines are privileged to tell the truth. No star has a right to treat reporters and editors as if they were complete idiots.

It is true that some stars have been double-crossed, but this has happened to them at times with newspapers, national magazines, and other media. They usually strike back only at the fan books. The fan magazine writers and editors have a right to wonder: "Why are we chosen as scapegoats for everything that goes wrong?"

State Sale Consummated

Youngstown, O., May 21.

Some 87% of the outstanding common stock of the State Theater Co., which operates a downtown first-run house in Youngstown, has been sold to Arrel Friedman, Youngstown realestate dealer, at $101.33 per share, involving 1,943 shares totaling $196,884. The highest price received for a share of State common stock in the last five years was reported at $23.

The sale covered all assets, including the building and real estate and was made less than two weeks after Mahoning County Common Pleas Judge Forrest V. Cavalier ruled that Robins Enterprises Co., of Warren, O., had no prior agreement to buy the theatre. Robins claimed to have made an accepted offer of $86.30 per share for the stock before Friedman made his offer. Robins does not plan to appeal the decision.

Catch-As-Catch Cannes

Cannes, May 21.

Bette Davis got the big scale photog greeting when she arrived for the competing screening of "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" (WB) with daughter Barbara. She made clear she liked it. She felt "Baby Jane" was a victory against the spectacularity thinking of Hollywood these days. Made in 31 days by director Robert Aldrich, it showed that a black and white thriller with vet stars could make for plenty of audience attention . . . La Davis may have Hurd Hatfield opposite her in "The Empty Canvas" which Carlo Ponti produces next summer in Italy and Joe Levine has for the world . . . Elli Wyman, wife of Seven Arts producer Ken, has snared film rights to the piquant Yank novel "Stern" by Bruce Jay Friedman which concerns a battle against bigotry put on a comic plane . . . Giulio Amoretti, Universal head of publicity for the Continent, handled "The Birds." Ditto Gregory Peck for the other U showing of "To Kill a Mockingbird" . . . Paul Heller, producer of the Yank indie hit "David and Lisa" (Cont), was in for a special screening of the pic in the Film Market Section. Continental District prexy Walter Reade Jr. also here, pleased with the European offers and advances for the pic. Reade also showed "The Balcony" this way . . . The British entry "Lord of the Flies" may go to Columbia for world wide release since property still has some Columbia strings via Sam Spiegel and Columbia having prepped it some years ago before ceding it to Louis Allen, Dana Hodgdon and Peter Brook. Pic went over well. It may also get a British quota nod even if made in Puerto Rico with mainly U.S. and Puerto Rican capital.

Young French girl Monique De Longeville masqueraded under the name of Maria Del Val in the official Spanish entry "A Good Love." It was done not to upset the Hispano Selection Committee. She scored in her own country with several pic offers while her co-star Simon Andreu goes into a French-Spanish coproduction. This appears to mollify and balance everything.

More Yank major brass, to wit, Mo Rothman, Marion Jordan and Jack Wiener, verpee foreign sales chief, Continental manager and European and Near East pub head respectively for Columbia. They came for the "8½" non-competing showing to wind the fest Thurs. (23). Columbia has the Italo pic for the world except Italy, the U.S. and Canada. Joe Levine has it for the latter spots . . . Luigi Chiarini, new head of the Venice Film Fest, ogling Yank indies "The Balcony," directed by Joe Strick, and Adolfas Mekas' "Hallelujah the Hills" for possible invite to the Lagoon City shindig in last August and early September in either competing or non-competing spots . . . Raoul Levy feels the show must go on and he must finish his bogged down "Marco Polo." So it is now on again to roll in August in Yugoslavia as a French-Yugoslav coproduction between Avala Films and Levy. Denys De La Patelliere will direct and Michel Audiard script. Levy did not say who would replace Alain Delon, who was the original "Polo" . . . Gregory Peck getting a big press play as he came in for "To Kill a Mockingbird" (U) screening . . . Burt Lancaster here for screening of the official Italo pic "The Leopard" in which he stars.

French actor Bernard Blier is proud of his son Bertrand whose first film caused one of the biggest stirs and overall interest so far at the fest. An interview-type film with a group of young people this emerged a revealing, entertaining and the most accomplished and controlled of the so-called "Cinema-Truth" films. Pic, "Hitler? Connais Pas!" (Hitler, Never Heard of Him), was one of those chosen by the official Festival Selection Committee but then nixed by the Centre Du Cinema and fest authorities as being too difficult, perhaps, for the fest audiences. However it was invited for a special showing in the small Film Palace house as an invite of the French Film Writers' Assn. Jam called for three showings and solid response and a general feeling that it belonged in competition even if it was "difficult." . . . Actor Blier also pointing out that his son may be only director with a thesp father except for John Huston . . . It is intimated that the Italian film "The Four Days of Naples," by Nanni Loy, was kept out of the fest so as not to offend the Germans. It is felt that a fest ruling is being overdone this year. A film's worth should be the main thing and the ruling only applied if its look at the actions of another participating country are false.

Stars and leading players quite prevalent. Besides Teppi Hedren for "The Birds" Marina Vlady and Ugo Tognazzi were in for "Queen Bee," Bette Davis for the Yank-invited pic "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" (WB), the lead actresses of "Depths" Francine and Colette Berge as well as directors Alfred Hitchcock, Robert Aldrich, for "Jane" Marco Ferreri for "Bee," and Nick Lapotakis for "Depths."

Numerous press conferences also helped the many journalists get trip-justifying copy, if nothing exclusive. Anita Ekberg, who will star in Aldrich's next pic "Four for Texas," also showed.

American majors seem to be making Cannes the yearly spot for huddles between U.S.-based execs and Continental representatives. Robert M. O'Brien planed in with Maurice Silverstein and the Metro president and foreign veep were met by European and Near East publicity head Elias Lapiners. Abe Schneider and Mike Frankovitch of Columbia also showed as well as Bill Heineman of UA with others expected to make for a solid Hollywood turnout.

Joe Beach, originally with Astor Films, here confabbing with visiting French, British and Italo filmmakers for his new company Rompalom. Beach states his operation will give guarantees to European producers before they start their films for U.S. rights . . . Bette Davis was invited to be on the jury next year before leaving town . . . Alain Delon, one of the stars of the Italo official entry "The Leopard," showed up in a bit surprise part in the French entry "Carambolages" (Carom Shot) which laid an egg at the fest. The film that is . . . Eurovision Fest opened with obvious means behind it this year via its own daily paper name invites and a bigger splash than usual. Whether it will lead to closer contacts between film and video characters to give French producers needed tv pic work, which they do not get much of these days, is not certain. Eurovision prized pix will be given at the Film Palace at the end of the fest . . . French spec "Sheherazade" got a Film Palace showing in a non-competing spot one afternoon.

Many have remarked the zoological aspect of the fest. U.S. has "The Birds" (U) and "To Kill a Mockingbird" (U). Bette Davis serves Joan Crawford salads with her favorite canary and a rat in them in "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" The Czech pic is "One Day, A Cat" and the Italo entry "The Leopard" plus another one called "The Queen Bee." Then there is the British "Lord of the Flies" and the French "Le Rat D'Amerique" literally the "American Rat" but which means a sort of apprentice.

CANNES PUBLIC LIKES PECK PIC MOREN CRIX

Cannes, May 21.

"To Kill A Mockingbird" (U) received tepid welcome at showing Thursday (16). Although there were scattered whistles, Gregory Peck, however, got solid personal mitting.

Critics felt it was conventional but public reaction was better.

'Cleo' Helps Boystown

Cleveland, May 21.

Northern Ohio preem of "Cleopatra" (20th-Fox) at Loew's Ohio here June 26 will be sponsored by Cleveland's Variety Club as a $10-to-$12.50 per ticket benefit. Profits are going to Ohio Boystown, pet charity of local showmen's organization.

Jack Silverthorne, manager of Hippodrome Theatre, was made chairman of ticket-sales committee.

FIDA Joins N.Y. Fest

The Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America is joining the groups sponsoring the upcoming film festival at the Lincoln Center of Performing Arts in New York Sept. 10-19. Previously announced sponsors are the Center, Museum of Modern Art and British Film Institute.

Mike Mayer, IFIDA's exec director, will serve the fest in an advisory capacity. In addition, three IFIDA members, over and above those already serving, will be named to the fest's sponsoring committee.

Reaction to Films Shown at Cannes

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 21.

Here's how the turnout here at the 16th annual film festival has been reacting to the main product:

The starter was, out of competition, Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds," first of two from Universal, a company which is forefronted here for the first time. Hitchy brought along his discovery, Tippi Hedren, and there was plenty of ballyhoolics including the release of cages of pigeons while cameras turned. The sophisticates felt that "The Birds" was more stunt than coherent story and as they expected more from Hitchcock there was disappointment.

Almost unanimous humahs went to the Italo invited competing entry "L'Ape Regina" (The Queen Bee) directed by Marco Ferreri. Mordant comedy, about a man-hungry innocent who literally destroys an older man she marries by her sensual demands, has the right observation, comedic lilt and satire to bring it off with verve, bright mischievousness and insight.

Pic brought dash of adult comedy relief. Like last year's Italo "Divorce, Italian Style" it looms a leading special prize contender. Embassy Pictures has this for the U.S.

The French official in-the-running film "Les Abysses" (The Depths) received its expected mixed reactions. Previously rapped by the French Film Producers Assn. as a pic made outside the regular industry channels, and not truly representative, its original slant on servant-master relationship drew heated backers as well as detractors. It enlivened the first days of the fest.

Directed by Nico Papatakis "Les Abysses" has already opened in Paris which perhaps explained some empty seats at its night showing. But it was felt that industry elements may have used a subtle boycott since the official French governmental delegate also abstained on the pretext he had seen the film.

A little Spanish pic "A Good Love," directed by Francisco Reguiero, rated nice welcome for fresh insight into youthful courting and its statement on various aspects of Spanish folkways.

Czechs went in for fantasy in "One Day a Cat" that also poked fun at bureaucratic hypocrisy and said that self criticism was necessary on a human rather than political plane. Inventive use of color, fairly pleasant if repetitive special effects, and a notably conceived ballet in the Yank manner set this one up as an entertainment breach in the grim and mainly violent fare so far.

Bette Davis, appearing with competitive showing of "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" (WB), proved that oldtime stars are as potent as ever for European audiences in the right vehicle. Besides helping her personally, appearance helped the film pubwise via impact on over 600 scribes, tv and radio people from all over the world who are here.

She reported offers for films to be made in Europe and remarked that she has finally found that the film world is not bound to Hollywood.

Some film pundits felt that Robert Aldrich had brought off a true baroque drama in "Jane" while others that he had overdone the guignolesque aspects. British "Lord of the Flies," directed by Peter Brook, was fairly well accepted. Though made in Puerto Rico with U.S. and Puerto Rican money, it may get a British quota nod. Columbia Films will probably distribute.

Lindsay Anderson, Scot and Critic, Hints At Some Flaws In Film Biz

Though he is a film director, Lindsay Anderson feels it is impossible not to take stock of the methods of selling films. After all, he opines, one is involved deeply in one's film and wants it to reach as many people as possible and to be sold honestly; that is allowing audiences to know what they will get. He claims this does not happen as much as it should in Great Britain.

Anderson, whose first directorial effort "This Sporting Life" is the British official entry at the winding 16th Cannes Film Fest, points out that in Britain the film was sold as part of a cycle, that is the North Country looks at workers or lower class people, and going in for realism or poetic naturalism. This included such pix as "Room at the Top," "A Taste of Honey," "Look Back In Anger" and "A Kind of Loving."

With all due respects for his colleagues who made these pix, Anderson maintains that his film is completely unlike these predecessors even if it takes place in the Northern section of the British Isles. The producers and distributors seemed to want to latch on to this new current, even if it was running down a bit, and thus misrepresented his film, he declares. He feels that except for out and out filler films, each pic should have the right to go out on its own and not lean on supposedly proven types which detract from it rather than help.

It may be a common practice in other countries too, says he, but is particularly rampant in conformist pic circles on his home grounds. Anderson thinks that Anglo critics also tend to lump films in this way without being able to differentiate. He found, on a recent U.S. trip, that his distributors were thinking of perhaps linking it with others but not committed as yet, which showed some leeway.

But Anderson detected a downbeat mood among American foreign film distribs in spite of the growing number of art houses and offshore pix that break through for greater depth distrib. He avers his film is about a heroic tragic situation in which the characters, if workers, are lifted above it by making their situation one that escapes mainly local or contemporary problems to comment on man in general as well as in the particular.

A sardonic but dynamic and outspoken Scotsman, Anderson also waded into the way the local Rank outfit was handling the pic at the fest. He found that the arrival of the star Richard Harris was not up with the others to alert newsmen while a stand for the pic at the Carlton Hotel, with a series of photos of the film, was turned inwards towards the documentation dispenser while its other side, touting a pic in production, was towards the journalists and pic personages.

He of course had this turned around and also beefed about mistakes in billing. After all, he feels, an actor has a right to get his or her name in the place and in the calls for. After setting things right Anderson settled down to interviews and attendance at his pic which went off for solid response and reviews.

Anderson was a critic, documentary maker and creator of the Free Cinema movement, a filmic look at British life, and noted stage director before making his bow in this first feature. Pic got superlative reviews in Britain and fared well if not sock and is due for a June opening in N.Y. through Walter Reade's Continental Dist Inc.

Suez, Gets Action

San Francisco, May 21.

Lawsuit filed in federal court here by United California Theatres got fast action, reflected in a hushing announcement Monday (20): "55 Days in Peking" will play at the Coronet theatre, not St. Francis.

United Cal's suit, filed against Allied Artists and Bronston productions, plus ABC-Paramount (owner of St. Francis) and a number of exhibitors, charged they hadn't been invited to bid on showing of "Peking." Results: New bids were invited last week, and United Cal was successful. "Peking" opens May 29 at the Coronet, where "Mutiny on the Bounty" closes this week after 26 weeks.

Terms of the old and new bookings were not available.

Allied HQ. Believes TV Features Hurt Distribs Even More Than Exhibs

Detroit, May 21.

"Progress is definitely being made toward resolving the catastrophic situation of suicidal competition from current major motion pictures on free television."

That is the conclusion of a special report by National Allied following confabs between Allied officials and the presidents of each film company.

The report states: "All of the discussions to date have been friendly, sincere and productive. Each of the film companies seems anxious to find a way of escaping from the clutches of this Frankenstein monster which the film companies have created.

"The film companies are being financially hurt to a greater degree than even the exhibitors by the release of major motion picture product for showings on prime television time. Not only are the film companies being deprived of substantial revenue from their current theatre releases by this unfair television competition, but they are also losing tremendous income from reduced television production. Each motion picture sold to television replaces four one-half hour television programs previously produced by the film companies."

TECHNICOLOR CHICAGO REPORT MORE HOPEFUL

Chicago, May 21.

Technicolor Inc has bounced back from its financial housecleaning of last year and has posted first quarter earnings 40% greater than the same period in 1962. Speaking at an annual meeting of shareholders in Chi Monday (20) Technicolor board chairman Patrick Frawley said that prospects for the second quarter of this year "looked good."

Earnings for the first quarter of this year were $866,437 or 33c a share, compared to $613,111 or 30c a share for the like period in 1962. Consolidated sales for the quarter were $18,616,166, up 30% from 1962 first quarter sales of $14,796,100.

Annual report for 1962 shows net sales of $57,927,993, compared to $55,026,550 in 1961. However, income per share was down sharply from 67c in 1961 to 64c in 1962. Frawley attributed the 1962 decline to inventory write-downs, additional accounts receivable reserves and a non-recurring loss on notes receivable. It was also disclosed that the company spent an estimated $1,500,000 in trying to get its cartridge-loading home and industrial film projector on the market with little success.

All 13 directors were re-elected at the meeting.

Curtis Bernhardt returns to Hollywood for first time since 1956 with slate of three pix, including "Kisses for My President," jointly with Warner Bros., and "No Dice, Warden" and "Me and My Brother," no release.

Pathe Lab Takes Ruling Despite Bruder Denial

N.Y. Supreme Court has granted a motion for summary judgment to Pathe Laboratories against Bruder Enterprises and Franklin M. Bruder. Pathe had sued on two promissory notes of $15,000 each given to Bruder in February and June, 1961, interest on which has brought the total amount due to $34,500.

Bruder had made a general denial of the allegation that the funds were for a mutual business venture. Pathe denied this claim, stating that no such agreement had been made.

Moira Walsh to Critic Mooring Re Green Sheet: 'Are You Mixed Up?'

Moira Walsh, film critic for the magazine, America, and one of the most independent and outspoken of the film critics in the Catholic press, has come out with a sharp defense of the Green Sheet and its decision to expand its coverage to include pix which do not have Production Code Seals. Miss Walsh's statements were printed in the May 9 issue of Catholic News, in answer to syndicated William H. Mooring's attack in same periodical on the Green Sheet.

Mooring had criticized the Green Sheet for being "underwritten" by the Motion Picture Assn. of America, and implied that the MPAA's member producers call "the critical tune" of the reviews as published in the Green Sheet. Since more and more U.S. companies are involved in foreign production, the further implication was the Green Sheet would not give honest appraisals of the non-Code Seal pix it is now reviewing.

He added: "If films in the Legion of Decency's 'condemned,' 'morally objectionable' and 'separate' categories now are to be given the Green Sheet treatment without clear reference to the Legion's moral strictures, many parents, especially Catholics are to be further confused, not helped."

Miss Walsh's succinct reply to this: "18 carat nitwittedness."

Why The [illegible]?

Just because the Green Sheet is subsidized does not mean that it has not done its job "conscientiously and objectively," she says. Also, she thinks parents ought to be glad that it is expanding its services. Miss Walsh goes on to suggest that Mooring has put himself in a rather dubious position for a writer in a Catholic publication by supposedly defending the (Catholic) Bishops Committee on Motion Pictures whereas, in fact, he is attacking the Committee.

Miss Walsh points out that the Bishops Committee had, actually, suggested that since more and more non-Seal foreign films are to be seen in this country, the Green Sheet, under its old policy, was inadequate for the task of informing parents about film content. "The Green Sheet almost immediately took steps to remedy this deficiency," she says.

To Mooring's statement that "nominatively the National Legion of Decency is excluded from organizations whose criticisms the Green Sheet breaks down," Miss Walsh adds this aside: "I cannot help wondering why Mr. Mooring, who prides himself on his knack for writing for readers who have not had the benefit of higher education, would use a big word like 'nominatively.'"

She then continues: "The Green Sheet's door has always been open and it is the Legion's own decision that its structure, purpose and organization make participation in advisable or subject to misinterpretation.

"Mr. Mooring's general problem, as far as I can see it, is that he belongs back in the days of the Counter-Reformation, where he would be very much at home preaching hellfire and brimstone and pronouncing anathemas on all heretics. He hasn't the foggiest idea how to carry on a rational debate in a pluralistic society."

Her sum up: "Our role as Catholics today should be to attract allies by persuading them of the validity of our viewpoint, not to alienate them by questioning their goodwill and impugning their integrity. . . ."

is presently editing it. No distributor has as yet been set for the comedy which deals with Southern race relations and none is actively being sought until a final print is in. The film might be getting its initial screening this summer at the Moscow International Film Festival to which it has been invited. But its participation in this event is subject to the approval of the U.S. Information Agency and the Motion Picture Assn. of America. Fest runs July 7-21.

Most of the original Broadway cast appears in the film, including Davis and his actress-wife Ruby Dee. Had the off-Broadway revival taken place, some of this cast would be making their third appearance in that Rose had contacted members for the new production. Neither Miss Dee nor Davis would have been available, however. Although it ran on Broadway for over seven months, "Purlie" registered a substantial loss for producer Rose. Although he didn't function as a producer of the filmization, which will probably be retitled "Gone Are the Days," his Broadway production company shares in the film's take. When word of his revival intentions first reached the Hammers, they had been considerably disturbed about the plans and later appealed to Davis to block the production since, as coholder of the rights, his approval was needed, which he subsequently did.

Seven Arts

revenues are earned. Seven Arts, which has longterm production deals with Metro, Warners and Paramount, among others, is not anticipating turning all its properties to its own org—only those specialized items, requiring slow and careful playoff, which it feels it might handle better than a larger company.

Likely to follow up "World" on the release shed are the recent (German) remake of "Maedchen in Uniform," starring Romy Schneider and Lili Palmer; the British comedy, "We're in the Navy Now," with Kenneth More and Lloyd Nolan, and the Italo import, "Facts of Murder," starring Claudia Cardinale, directed by Pietro Germi (who directed "Divorce — Italian Style") and who also stars in the pic. Two other possibilities are this year's Command Performance film, "Sammy Going South," and 7A's projected film adaptation of Evelyn Waugh's "Decline and Fall."

Strictly speaking, "Small World of Sammy Lee" will not mark 7A's distribution debut. Company has been getting its feet wet by its theatrical release of 26 post-48 20th-Fox pix, originally acquired for tv distribution.

End of Roach Studio

Hollywood, May 21.

Hal Roach Studios, 45-year-old film landmark which was purchased last December in bankruptcy sale by realty development firm of Penty-Fenmore for $1,326,000, is to be razed and converted to commercial use. New owners, who first planned to continue 14½ acre property as a studio, were unable to make satisfactory deals and "regretfully arrived at a decision to eliminate studio facilities."

Seven studio stages will be levelled.

Dowdy Trying Anew For 'Confiscatory' Proviso In District of Columbia

Washington, May 21.

A new censorship and confiscation bill for the District of Columbia was introduced by Rep. John Dowdy (D-Tex.), whose search and seizure bill last year was vetoed by President Kennedy.

This year's Dowdy anti-obscenity legislation allows police to confiscate property "used in the manufacture, exhibition and sale of obscene material," upon a temporary court injunction. Last year's Dowdy bill gave police this power with merely a search warrant.

President Kennedy gave the Dowdy bill a "pocket veto," by refusing to sign it into law.

President Kennedy's veto last year followed up suggestions from the Justice Dept., Motion Picture Assn. of America and the American Civil Liberties Union, that the bill was unconstitutional.

The new bill calls for two years imprisonment for manufacturing, exhibiting or selling obscene or pornographic material.

Dowdy told VARIETY he would prefer a stronger bill but scaled his legislation down to get Presidential approval.

stein: "I have never seen anything more sentimental in my life."

There also was a new manifestation of the Youngstein-Bosley Crowther aloofness from each other (or, better still, call it a vendetta, at least on Youngstein's part). In his introduction Youngstein said, "There are many thing I can say about Bosley but I can't say them in mixed company." Taking the microphone, Crowther rejoindered, "I do not suspect I am completely surrounded by friends."

On a historical note anent Mayer's Rialto, Crowther recalled: "Arthur had a picture called 'The Mummy' and in order to draw the Harvard men from 42d Street he put a papier mache gorilla outside the theatre. Jack McManus, then critic on the Times, devoted his review to the gorilla, which he thought better than the picture. When the picture's run was over Arthur sent the entire lobby display, gorilla and all, over to McManus."

Footnoted Crowther: Mayer doesn't know this but some of the people at the paper took the gorilla apart and put in back together and that same gorilla is now reviewing pictures for the Times today."

Reprints of page one of the May 16, 1913, New York Times were distributed at the testimonial for the Arthur Mayers, on occasion of their 50th wedding anni, in N.Y. last week. The gag streamer read, "Lillie Stein Weds Arthur Mayer Today."

OH HENRY (THAT AIN'T CANDY)

Make That $476 a Minute

Take a $940,000 budget and divvy it up 21 ways (for 21 minutes of commercials) and no matter how you slice it it comes up $30,476 per minute. That, and you've got ABC-TV's word for it, is the Schick Electric Razor sponsorship story. You've also got ABC's word that it's $476 more (rather than $6,000) per-minute when contrasted with the 40 pre-Xmas network minutes purchased by Remington Shavers for a total of $1,200,000.

The Schick business was placed some seven weeks ago for a scatter plan involving such shows as "Arrest and Trial," "Wagon Train," "77 Sunset Strip," "Outer Limits," "McHale's Navy" and Ron Cochran news, but erratumed as 18 minutes, which spelled out $24,000 per-minute buys. Thus when Schick's competitor Remington, come along last week and bought into the identical programming with $1,200,000 budget that averaged out to $30,000 per minute, it suggested some new eyebrow-raising facts of tv life—that the late bird gets the tv worm. As far as ABC's concerned, the Schick vs. Remington buys are equated at even-steven proportions.

Norman K. Norman, prexy of Norman, Craig & Kummel, agency on the Schick account, takes the position that considering the total bucks involved in the Remington-Y&R deal, the discount volume earned would seem justified, particularly in the light of network flexibility on such deals. All of which, however, may be academic at this point, since Schick cancelled out on the deal because of product conflict on the same shows. (It's buying into CBS instead). It's understood ABC has no intention of letting Schick withdraw.

Three TV Lawyers Who Always Win

Lopsided Score for Defense Counsel Suggests D.A.'s Files Being Misrepresented

Hollywood, May 21.

Both amused and annoyed at tv lawyers winning most of their cases, the D.A.'s office downtown would like to find a charge that would stick on "misrepresentation of the facts." Statistically, according to the deputies, the defense lawyers win only 5% of the cases tried. On the tube they rarely lose one and, according to a deputy, "it makes us look bad."

The lopsided score came to light last week when Milton Raison, researching the District Attorney's files for an hour tv series he is prepping ("Burden of Proof") for the season-after-next, found that the heroic barristers are falsifying the facts despite that the scripts are carefully combed by a member of the Bar Association. While the deputies will concede that the tv stories are pure fiction, they, nonetheless, give the public a bad impression of the D.A.'s office. "It's poor public relations," said one, "considering that our pay comes out of tax money."

Not that they expect a reformation of the legal eagles next season and let the D. A. win once in a while but they hope for a better than 95-5% split of the court decisions. So far no representations have been made to E. G. Marshall of "The Defenders," Raymond Burr of "Perry Mason," Edmund O'Brien of "Sam Benedict" or Chuck Connors of "Arrest and Trial."

Raison's "Burden," which promises to give the D. A.'s office a better break, is now up for consideration at Four Star and Revue.

Polaroid's $60G Buys on CBS-TV

Polaroid, one of the latecomers for the new season, bought participations in a variety of CBS-TV nighttime series. Polaroid's '63-'64 buy on CBS-TV was estimated at $250,000.

Studebaker bought one minute participations in CBS-TV's NCAA football schedule, which is about 90% sold at this point. Other than a small Dallas region, web has the National Football League schedule sold out.

In sales for the current season, Corning Glass Works bought 17 minutes in the Morning Minute Plan, with Rexall Drug inking for nine minutes in the same morning plan.

American Motors bought participations in "Alfred Hitchcock," "Nurses," "Twilight Zone," "CBS Reports," "Debie Gillis," "Fair Exchange," and "Eyewitness." International Latex bought participations in "Twilight Zone," "Nurses," "Hitchcock," "Eyewitness" and "Reckoning." Nestle Co. bought into "CBS News with Harry Reasoner" and "The Millionaire."

'Defenders' As Text

U. of Georgia prof is using CBS-TV's "The Defenders" series as part of his course on American Government. This became known when Dr. W. T. Nichols, of Georgia U. wrote CBS-TV seeking information on upcoming shows so he would know if the themes were pertinent to his class.

Said Dr. Nichols, in part, in his letter: "On an experimental basis this quarter I have assigned the watching of "The Defenders" . . . for two reasons. First, the show is closer to reality than the other law and lawyer shows on the air . . . I have been particularly impressed by the show's treatment of various aspects of our civil rights. Secondly, I want my students to become interested in the process of government in action, as it may come to affect them personally."

TV Without Guts? 'It's Only a Myth,' Sez Fred Friendly

Fred W. Friendly, once producer of "CBS Reports," nailed as a "myth" the contention that television has limitations on the subject matter of its network documentaries.

Said Friendly: "There is a growing myth abroad that television has no courage. This may have once been true. But today, television journalism has found its guts. Where I work, which is the only source of my knowledge, it is possible to do almost any kind of story and possible to try almost anything on television. What we don't do is not because we are prevented from doing, but only because we may not feel we are up to it."

Friendly made his remarks, in receiving the Albert Lasker Medical Journalism Award in tv for "CBS Reports: Birth Control and the Law." Friendly, in his remarks made no mention of the TV Guide article which lambasted tv news, pubaffairs for being "gutless."

Elaborating on his position, Friendly went on: "I am constantly being asked, 'Why don't you do such and such a story. Is it because they won't let you?' They do let us. I am also constantly asked 'When are you going to reschedule 'Birth Control and the Law'.' Friendly said the documentary will be rebroadcast June 12.

'TOUGHEST TRIO IN FCC ANNALS'

By MIKE MOSETTIG

Washington, May 21.

Newton Minow, a pungent phrase maker, is leaving Washington and stepping into his post as FCC Chairman is a man who tends to speak softly but who looks ready to wield a potent regulatory stick.

E. William Henry, lifted out of a Memphis law firm last summer by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, will be able to move on the broadcast front assured of the backing of an Administration keenly attuned to broadcasting's part in politics.

The Henry-Kennedy relationship has grown from their work together in the 1960 Presidential campaign. Like so many others touched by the RFK wand, Henry has since risen quickly to prominence and in his dapper and gentlemanly way bears the confident mien of a man with his own room at the top.

One indication of Henry's rank in the New Frontier power structure is that his six-year-old daughter Lisbeth is among the select few attending Caroline Kennedy's White House school.

In the new tradition of the youthful and shrewdly intellectual New Frontiersman, Henry will play a vital role in this image-conscious Administration. And to put across a good image, the New Frontier has relied heavily on television.

Little Brother Watching

The 1964 Presidential campaign isn't far off and both the President and his brother realize how vital video was in the last election. With the approach of the next campaign the industry is alert that through Henry, little brother will be watching.

The appointment of trustbuster Lee Loevinger to FCC raises a different set of equations. Loevinger, who moved over from his position as Asst. Atty. Gen. for Anti-trust, has told the local press, "I don't watch tv. Since I've been in Washington, I've been too busy." (In Minneapolis days Loevinger was close to film theatre interests and their peeves against distributors on "trust" angles.—Ed.)

Unlike Henry, Loevinger isn't a Robert Kennedy find. He is a former law partner of Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman and was appointed to the Minnesota Supreme Court when Freeman was governor of that state.

The question batted around political circles now is whether Loevinger's appointment to FCC marks a falling out with Robert Kennedy or another RFK attempt to spread his influence further over the Commission.

Loevinger and Kennedy both deny any splitting of ways, but there have been several reports that the Atty. Gen. wasn't pleased with Loevinger's anti-trust policies.

All indications point to the liberal Loevinger sitting with the strict regulators.

Thus with Henry, Loevinger and Kenneth Cox, the industry will be facing probably the toughest trio in FCC history. These three on a given issue can likely pick up the vote of one of the more middle of the roaders Robert E. Lee, Robert Bartley and Frederick Ford and put their policy of decision across. Rosel Hyde will probably find his sleep more perturbed in the Henry-Loevinger-Cox bed than it was in Minow's. And Hyde was hardly a Minowite.

Henry previewed before the Washington press last Thursday and left the strong impression that his biggest gripe against broadcasting is conformity of prime time programming.

The major issue before FCC, he said, is implementing communications satellite legislation and getting globevision off on the right foot.

Integration of U. S. boosted communications satellites into a worldwide common carrier system is

Susskind, Lee Rich Yak It Up As All-Star Trade Cast Plays 1-Niter On 'Minow, Medium & the Rating'

From Minow to Henry and beyond, a panel of seven top execs in tv—agency, production and network sides—mulled the present and future of the medium last week at the annual dinner of New York's United Jewish Appeal's advertising, publishing and pubrelations division.

Coming to a somewhat unanimous decision that tv is a little better since FCC Chairman Newton Minow's "Wasteland" speech, that it would be better yet this fall, but still has plenty of room for improvement were moderator David Susskind of Talent Assoc.'s Paramount, Dan Melnick of ABC-TV's programing department; Walter Weir of Donahue & Coe; Robert Foreman of BBDO; Mike Dann of CBS-TV, Mort Werner of NBC-TV, and Lee Rich of Benton & Bowles.

To Susskind's initial poser—with a quote from Minow's "Wasteland" in hand—the panel summed up the industry benefits during the time of the now retiring FCC chairman thusly:

Weir—"I welcome people like Minow, and I'm also happy to hear Henry is going to be tougher. It's good for television."

Melnick—"Minow (in the speech) stated what most of us as pros thought." However, there was a "lack of sophistication" in solutions offered by Minow—his ways to make tv better—which caused a good deal of apprehension.

Rich—"The government has no right to control any medium . . No medium in history has made the progress that tv has" in 15 short years.

Werner—"Minow came out with a lot of generalities that were hard to act on." By way of statistically pointing up the production problem of tv, Broadway will produce this season 30 hours or so; feature film indie, about 700; the three networks, something like 18,000 hours.

Foreman—Minow benefited the business because "We don't explore these areas unless pressure comes from without."

Looking to the new season, all network execs envisioned a big improvement. Dann said the coming season marks a distinct departure from the past—a "profound" change.

Taking a dimmer view, moderator Susskind reviewed his recent "contretemps" with WNEW-TV that saw the axing of his "Open End" discussion show. Citing, again, the station's mass of reruns and lack of news etc., he pointed out that the station's '62 earnings were a new record while "pandering to the lowest taste in the largest city in the world."

Citing the BBC's "TWTWTW" satirical roundup, the moderator wanted to know why the U.S. didn't have something similar, what with

SG's $2,783,218 Net

Screen Gems' net income set a new high of $5 406,818 for the first nine months of the fiscal year, ending March 30. This compares with the $4,851,500 net income for the same period last year. Net profit for the period, after taxes, was $2,783,218 compared to $2,438,236 the previous year.

Jerome Hyams, exec v.p., said the nine-month figures are "in line with all our forecasts for the fiscal year. At this time there appears to be no reason why this favorable trend should not continue."

Earnings for the nine-month period were equivalent to $1.10 per share, based on 2,538,400 shares outstanding, as against 98c per share for the same period last year, based on an identical number of shares.

CBS-TV's Gleam: Maharis Series; Jay Ward Revue

CBS-TV's newest gleam for the '64-'65 season is a George Maharis hour series, but this would depend largely on the star's availability since there have also been discussions anent Maharis doing features. At any rate should a deal materialize it would not be brought in under the Bert Leonard production banner but via Maharis' own company.

The hassle over Maharis' vamping of Leonard's "Route 66" continues unabated with even the star's efforts to do guest shots being vigorously contested.

Added to the CBS-TV growing list of '64-'65 projects is a Jay Ward zany, madcap revue. Ward is the producer of the cartoon "Bullwinkle" series and the Ward project would mark his first entry in the "live" field.

Other projects include an hour-long viddim drama series by playwright William Inge, tentatively titled "All Over Town"; a viddim drama hourlong series by Jerome Wiedman, based on his novel, "My Third Angel"; vidversion of "No Time for Sergeants," with Warner Bros.

Also a half-hour situation comedy, costarring Troy Donahue and Connie Stevens, titled "First Year"; a western titled "Montana," under the production aegis of Guy Trosper and Matt Rapf; a half-hour situation comedy starring Cara Williams.

Additionally, Carol Burnett and Robert Goulet are pegged for possible separate series, under the web's longterm talent deals. Other projects for '64-'65 also are expected to fall in line shortly.

DIRECTORS GUILD IN GOTHAM POWWOW

The Directors Guild of America will hold its annual meeting tomorrow at the Belmont Plaza in New York. Union says the focus will be a report "on the major revolution in tape equipment and techniques."

Conclave begins at 7 p.m., and the Guild says that much of the equipment to be discussed will be on hand. Videotape Center and MGM Telestudios are going to supply the equipment, including transistorized Ampex tape 1100 and the new 1500 Ampex table top machine. The MGM-Gemini process for tape and film recording simultaneously will be demonstrated.

Leonard Stern's ABC Comedy Pact

ABC-TV is digging for laughs through writer-producer Leonard Stern. Latter has been signed by Dan Melnick, the web's v.p. over nighttime programing, to create, develop and produce comedy shows exclusively for the web through his own company, Heyday Productions.

Stern produced "I'm Dickens . . . He's Fenster" for ABC this season, a half-hour entry that won't be back next fall. Stern had also been head writer for Steve Allen, Jackie Gleason and Phil Silvers in past years.

Melnick said "Although we recognize the importance of performing talent, we feel it is even more vital to recognize the importance of creative talent. Our arrangement with Stern is an important step in that recognition."

Oren's Summation on Rating Probe: 'A Shoddy State'; Collins up Next

Washington, May 21.

Next man up before the Oren Harris radio-television ratings hearings, which are currently in recess, will be NAB prez LeRoy Collins.

Collins will go before the House Subcommittee Thursday with his plan for the industry to do something about ratings. And the advance word is that he will have an embarrassing question hurled at him: "Who are you speaking for?"

The Harris Subcommittee has some doubts that the industry will give Collins widespread support for NAB maneuvering in the ratings arena. It is understood Collins wants NAB to audit ratings and set up standards and criteria for measuring broadcasting audiences.

Collins will be accompanied before the subcommittee hooped by Rep. Harris (D-Ark.) by Donald H. McGannon, Westinghouse Broadcasting prexy and chairman of NAB's Research Committee, and Melvin A. Goldberg, NAB v.p. and director of research.

Rep. Harris, meanwhile, issued a statement over the weekend saying the ratings hearings to date have "revealed pretty shoddy state of affairs in American broadcasting."

He said: "It is obvious that the ratings services, because of how their figures are used by advertisers, advertising agencies and broadcasters, exert a much greater degree of subrosa regulatory control over broadcasting than does the FCC in the exercise of its statutory power.

"This sad state of affairs," Harris continued, "is not only contrary to the public interest concept of the Federal Communications Act, but is, in my judgment, downright dangerous for the future of this potentially great communications medium."

The Radio Advertising Bureau, through Edmund C. Bunker, its new president, presented its $250,000 plan for doing something about ratings to the Harris Subcommittee last week.

Bunker said RAB had to do something, and do it quickly, because Nielsen is "destroying" radio economically with the "low" ratings quoted.

Bunker said he can raise the $250,000 ("I have $100,000 already") to get a careful methodology study going by Sept. 1 in four types of markets. He believes RAB can have the results by Jan. 1.

Bunker's position, which is supported by RAB's board of directors, is that present rating methods don't measure the radio audience with anything approaching accuracy, particularly with the booming sales of transistors and auto radios. Nielsen's low figures are giving radio a pain in the cash register, he groaned.

New ways have to be found for computing radio's pull, able to take automobiles and transistors into account, he said.

The methodology study (with no ratings service participating in it) will be conducted in four markets: one, in one of the three biggest cities; a second in a medium-sized city; a third in a "very small" town; and a fourth in a rural area "where the town is hardly more than a transmission site."

Cigvie TV Budgets Get Second Wind

The hottest competitive situation in years among the cigaret companies is generating a second wave of tobacco coin for the three tv networks next season. The advertising drives are keyed to the introduction of a flock of new brands by various companies trying to cut down the massive lead held by Reynolds with its regular Camel and filtered Winston brands and American Tobacco with its king-sized Pall Malls.

Philip Morris is pouring ad money into tv and other media for its new Saratoga and Paxton plastic packs, while American Tobacco is introducing the Montclare brand. Spot biz will also benefit heavily since the ciggie companies usually try out new brands in specific local markets.

Looks Like Those WNEW Execs Big TV Satire

"What's Going On Here," the satirical takeoff on the news which had a pilot run on WNEW-TV, N.Y., on May 10-11, may wind up on that station as a regular series if the price is right. Dickers have been continuing between the South Ben Trading Corp., the show's production firm, and station execs.

WNEW-TV is interested in putting on the kidding-the-news show on an alternate-week basis. On the other week, the station may use the talents of such revues as "The Establishment" and "The Second City."

British Com'l TV Sings Hallelujah On March Billings

London, May 21.

March this year was quite a bonanza month for the indie companies on ad takes—3% up on the previous March, one in two making more than in '62 and only two companies suffering anything like substantial fiscal setbacks.

Biggest increases were enjoyed by ABC-TV thefty hikes of income in both its regional and ATV which had a whopping 40% hike of its London revenue to even out with something like a 10% raise overall in the two regions. Small regional Border TV actually enjoyed the delight of a 32% hike of its March '63 revenue over the same '62 month—$94,500 on $120,000.

ABC-TV actually took in $3,735,-000 this March which was $783,000 up on its March '62 figure. In London ATV took $2,433,300, within fractions of a 40% leap of $694,-000 over its take for March '62, while in its Midland region it took $1,302,000, a slight drop of $21,000, or about 1%, on its '62 figure. This meant an overall increase of $660,-300 for the company during this latest March.

Only major company to take a drop—Granada, with $16,800 less than in March '62, suffered a dip of less than a half of 1% of its $4,120,800 — was AR-TV which nosed 11%. This March it took in $3,734,850 compared with $4,200,-050 in March '62.

Regional station Grampian TV also took a hard knock—a 15% dip on its comparitively small income of $291,200 to $246,400.

Other incomes for March were: Scottish TV — $1,433,600 (down 3%); TWW — $1,274,600 (even); Southern TV—$1,705,600 (up 1%); Tyne-Tees TV—$1,159,800 (down 1%); Anglia TV—$702,800 (down 6%); Ulster TV—$264,600 (up 2%); Westward TV — $302,800 (down 6%). There is no comparison for either Channel TV ($47,600) or Wales West & North ($142,800) stations not operating in March 1962.

Total ad revenue for the month was $23,705,400, an overall raise of 3% ($1,583,600) on the take in March '62.

Mylan's Philly Award

Bill Mylan, who moved over to J. Walter Thompson as head of tv and radio for the agency, is slated to pick up an award today (Wed.) in Philadelphia, honoring him for his sales success at CBS-TV, where he had been senior sales v.p.

The Sales and Marketing Executives—International tabbed Mylan for its 1962 Marketing Executive of the Year Award, based on Mylan's sales performance at CBS-TV. Mylan, now on the opposite side of the fence, buying instead of selling, was due to accept the award at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

At 14 Patty Duke's Already a Veteran Of TV Program Wars

New York has gained another tv series in its losing production battle with Hollywood by an accident of age. Patty Duke, the 16-year-old Academy Award winner who's starring in the ABC-TV "Patty Duke Show," will be doing the show in the east because of California's more stringent regulations on child labor. On the Coast, Miss Duke would be unable to work more than four hours a day. In N.Y., she can put in a regular eight-hour day under proper safeguards and supervision.

Although she scored her major triumph in the film, "The Miracle Worker," Miss Duke is actually a veteran on tv row. Since her eighth birthday, she's appeared in some 50 television roles, ranging from the "U.S. Steel Hour" to "The Play Of The Week."

Her upcoming tv series, however, will be her chance to demonstrate her comedy talents. In the series scripted by Sidney Sheldon, Miss Duke will be playing the dual part of a hip American teenager and a straightlaced Scottish lass. Next spring, she'll take time out from tv production to work in another film.

Miss Duke is handled by John Rose, a veteran manager and coach who is currently piloting several other youngsters in showbiz. Most child actors fall by the wayside as soon as they reach 11 or 12, Rose pointed out, because they only know how to convey childishness. In supervising Miss Duke's growth as an actress, Rose has confronted her with challenging roles that have assured the development of her craft.

Breslau TV Show Creates a Major German Scandal

By HAZEL GOULD

Frankfurt, May 21

One of West Germany's best young television documentary makers Juergen Neven-du Mont has stirred up a hornets' nest here with two documentaries about Breslau.

And the funny thing is although the protests are pouring in, the complaints coming from major East German refugee organizations, and even the West German government getting into the act, one of the shows that all the fuss is being made over hasn't even been aired yet.

But thin-skinned West German sensitivities, and a couple of hotly competitive West German organizations for the refugees from East Germany and from Communism, are getting into the act.

Trouble all started last Easter, when a broadcast from North German Television announced that the well-known documentary maker, Neven-du Mont, was going to do the pair of films on Breslau as it is today ,and on the former Breslau residents now living away from their homeland in West Germany.

It asked former Breslau inhabitants to send letters to the station, telling when and for how long they lived in the famous and once-beautiful city, telling if they were married to Breslau natives as well, telling what they are now doing, how many children they have, and if the children were also born in Breslau, and if the parents are members of a refugee organization.

A German public information polling firm was also taking part in the informative study, and began to make queries.

But two powerful and competitive refugee associations filed the first furious protests.

Aunty Does a Somersault

London, May 21.

British viewers of late have been getting used to a refreshing relaxation in the old rigid conception of the BBC tuppo-accent accent. In fact, it is getting around that Aunty is now going all out to find announcers and linking announcers with regional dialects and unorthodox accents.

Latest in the line of distaff announcers with distinctive non-Mayfair tones is Anne Gregg, who has just burred in with an ecto ag Ulster (Northern Ireland) twang as has ever been heard over BBC airlines.

However, the BBC's Head of Presentation, Rex Moorfoot, is not having any of this suggestion that this is an innovation. He says that for some time now the BBC has dropped its old-fashioned insistence on a flat, characterless, almost anonymous "neutral voice." As he explains it, no girls who audition for BBC-TV as announcers need have any fear if they have a regional accent.

"Primary qualification for an announcer is ability to communicate as herself without acting," says Moorfoot. "And if this means that the applicant is more comfortable with an accent, then the accent is alright by us."

Fulbright Panacea: Educ'l System Needs Casey-Kildare Shot in Arm

Washington, May 22.

For some strange reason, by all of a sudden boats Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.).

Normally aloof from such sideshows of the American rat race, Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman Fulbright used to disdain such things.

Then recently he clouted the tube in a series of lectures at Tufts University which otherwise added up to a critique of the world at large. And now he has become a tv program idea man.

In fact, the erudite Fulbright could start a whole new fad.

His latest thought came in a more or less routine statement on behalf of federal aid to education before the Senate Education Subcommittee.

Right in the middle of it, Fulbright suggested the Casey-Kildare treatment be given school teachers.

"In recent years," he said "tv programs based on medicine and health have captured the public's fancy. Perhaps what the educational profession needs is to get Madison Avenue to develop a good tv series on the true life heroics of school teachers. Everything else that might stir the public out of their apathy toward the plight of the schools seems to have failed."

Zero Mostel for '64

Zero Mostel is being primed for a half-hour situation comedy series by Screen Gems for the 1964 season. It'll be titled "The Zero Mostel Show."

A. J. Russell, who has written for Phil Silvers and Jackie Gleason, is developing the property.

'GE College Bowl' Shifts to NBC In $5,000,000 Deal

After trying for three years, NBC-TV got "General Electric College Bowl" away from CBS-TV. The half-hour panel program, which has garnered high ratings for GE on CBS, will get the same slot (5:30, Sundays) on NBC-TV come fall.

Seems a hangup occurred between GE's Bridgeport division, which backs "Bowl," and CBS-TV. CBS allegedly was unwilling to give the sponsor fully or five one-hour periods on Sunday afternoon for televised "Bowl" specials. NBC-TV, on the other hand, will open up the time for the specials. Furthermore, NBC-TV is going to provide color for the half-hour stanza. Add to that the fact that GE was still smarting from the loss of its Sunday night 9:30 period.

Besides the "Bowl" biz, NBC-TV is expected to get a "heavy" commitment by GE spots on "Today" and "Tonight." Speculation is the deal will come to at least $5,000,000.

NBC-TV failed time after time to get the show, a prize combination of prestige and ratings. CBS-TV invariably managed to keep it. At the beginning of the present selling period (for next fall), NBC-TV briefly got its hands on "Bowl," only to be disappointed. "Bowl" was to shift to NBC-TV as part of a package deal; GE was bringing to NBC a full-hour Sunday version of "True." However, the sponsor soon changed its mind about putting "True" on at all, and "Bowl" was left at CBS.

The GE management and the Manon agency were both in on negotiations with NBC over the "Bowl" shift, arranged positively

CBS' Stafford Special

Jo Stafford special, with guesters Bob Hope and James Darren, has been bought by Procter & Gamble for telecasting this summer on CBS-TV.

Stafford one-hour special was one outing of a viditaped expensive musical-variety series done last season by Miss Stafford for Independent Television Corp., of England. American ITC subsid has been pitching the show state-side and the P&G biz marked the first sale on the series.

It's been slotted on CBS-TV Aug. 16 at 9 p.m. following the "Ed Sullivan Show." Deal was negotiated by Cy Kaplan, ITC national sales manager, with Lee Burnett agency on behalf of P&G for Lilt.

GAC in Reshuffle; Gottlieb Tapped

General Artists Corp. tv dept. has been realigned following elevation of Herman Rush to the presidency of the loewe sector. David Gerber has been named senior veepee in the dept., the job formerly held by Rush. Latter will work both in New York and the Beverly Hills office.

Lester Gottlieb has joined the office as a veepee. Gottlieb had been working there for several months, but was on the personal payroll of Dan Sharpe. Latter is still technically employed by the company as tv dept. president, but is being bypassed in company affairs and negotiations are on for cancellation of the contract. Gottlieb thus leaves Sharpe's payroll and enters GAC ranks officially. He was employed at GAC a couple of years ago as booker of the Perry Como show, but left that post to go with NBC. He subsequently rejoined GAC via Sharpe. He'll work in the packaging dept.

Also entering the tv sector is Malcolm Stuart, named vicepresident of creative programming on the Coast. He joined the agency two years ago when GAC acquired the Preminger-Stuart Literary Agency. Stuart will continue to function in literati.

Also in the tv sector are Tony Ford and Roy Gerber, who will function in the television talent division on the east and west coasts respectively. Larry Leeuwenstein, sales in New York, and Artie Price, Coast tv sales.

Welper's 'Bogie'

Hollywood, May 21.

First episode of "The Hollywood Story," slated for NBC-TV in the fall, will be a documentary on Humphrey Bogart, titled "Bogie."

Series producer Jack Haley Jr., has set Al Ramrus, heretofore assigned to Welper's "Biography" series, to produce and write "Bogie."

'10 Years of Progress' Keynotes AB-PT Stockholders Meet; Philco Buys 4 Hrs.

Dissident noises from a couple of professional goadflies only slightly unsettled the American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres' stockholders meeting in New York yesterday (Tues.). Prexy Leonard H. Goldenson had more than enough proxies to reelect the 14-man board and to stave off a resolution limiting executive compensation to a $200,000 per annum ceiling.

Goldenson, in his stockholders report, noted the "great strides" made by the company in the 10 years since the merger. From $94,000,000 in 1953, revenues of the ABC broadcasting division rose to $275,000,000 in 1962. During that period, the tv network grew from 14 primary affiliates with a gross billing of $21,000,000 to 125 affils and a $206,000,000 gross. Goldenson noted that despite the failure of some shows this season to measure up to expectation, 1962 was AB-PT's most profitable year.

Goldenson disclosed that Philco has ordered four one-hour documentaries to be produced by the special projects division. The Philco series will deal with such subjects as the "jet set" and other feature material. This is in addition to Upjohn's bankrolling of four one-hours in an historical series titled "The Saga of Western Man."

ABC commentator Lisa Howard was willy nilly dragged into the business of the meeting when she was nominated for the board of directors by Mrs. Wilma Moss, a perennial critic at these meetings. Miss Howard received 26,000

Winter Olympics $80

The 1964 Winter Olympics, which ABC-TV is covering at Innsbruck, Austria, is now fully sold out on the network to six advertisers. Running from Jan. 29 through Feb. 9, the games will be covered in 16 hours of telecasting on ABC-TV, in addition to a regular weekly series of 13 pre-Olympic programs on Saturdays starting in October.

The six bankrollers of the Winter Olympics are Firestone, Jergens, Liberty Mutual, P. Lorillard, Schlitz and Texaco.

AFTRA Pacts In Spotlight At July Convention

Next annual meeting of the national organization is going to be a "contract convention" and therefore the most important in three years for the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists. Powwow is set for the Los Angeles' Ambassador Hotel between July 10 and 14.

Some insiders figure that the big demand to be molded out of the all-day L.A. meeting of the various contract caucuses will regard tv commercials. The last two network contracts with AFTRA have been involved deeply with establishing a new pattern for payment for tv commercials. Finally, three years ago, after feverish planning sessions at the national convention in Washington, D.C., the union's negotiators came up with heavy blurb demands and, later during actual dickers with CBS, NBC and ABC, a code for more frequent payments to blurb actors was established. According to some union sources, AFTRA has "established the principle and now we want the dollars to go with it."

The L.A. local AFTRA, which is hosting, will send 120 delegates to the conclave. It's the largest number in history of both the local and national itself. Coast sources say. Total of 77 actors, 16 announcers, 22 singers and five dancers will rep L.A.'s membership.

San Diego AFTRA members, generally part of the L.A. group at past conclaves, will send Frank Van Cleave, announcer and a general delegate from their area. More than 500 delegates are expected at the convention, especially since 1963 marks the contract talks, which begin in November.

Lawrence Returns As a TV Special

Hollywood, May 21.

Lawrence, Arabia's legendary hero, is to get a second entertainment outing, this time as a one-hour television special. Carl Dudley, Lowell Thomas and director Otto Lang have joined forces to produce six, 35m Eastman-color hourlong tv specials, and have set "With Lawrence in Arabia" as second venture.

Initialer will be a feature now shooting in New Guinea, involving natives in unusual customs.

Both Dudley and Thomas were involved in early Cinerama projects, former producing "South Seas Adventure" and Thomas on "This Is Cinerama" and "Seven Wonders of the World."

MATCH BIGGIES ON '63-'64 SKED

Hollywood, May 21.

Indie telefilmers, forced into the shadows in recent years by the emergence of the giant vidfilmeries, have made a remarkable resurgence for the 1963-64 season, landing 20 series on the networks for the coming season, almost matching the biggies, who have 30 shows upcoming.

No small part in the comback of the small indies is the role taken by the various networks, either via outright production or via partnership with an indie. Either way, it's lost business for the behemoths and in a number of cases that lolobiz goes to the indies. Examples: NBC-TV produces its own "Bonanza" series; CBS-TV is a partner in the indie production of "Perry Mason." Via alignments such as these, CBS-TV is deeply involved in five hours of telefilm programming next season, NBC-TV two hours, and ABC-TV, one hour.

But even so, the indies have done quite a job on their own. Admittedly, the climate at the webs seem to have changed, and instead of funneling a good deal of the telefilm biz to the majors, the networks appear more interested than ever in small indies with the stamp of quality. Thus, there has been a growth of indies such as Bing Crosby Productions, Filmways, and an entire passel of comedy series in the Danny Thomas-Sheldon Leonard operation.

Rise of the indies obviously has been at the expense of the majors, and the biggies to take production losses as this season winds are Warner Bros., Four Star and 20th-Fox TV, latter with none.

Still holding its own despite the changing winds is Revue Studios, dominant with its 10 series. Screen Gems has dipped a bit, and MGM-TV has gone against the indie trend by upping its production considerably.

From the indies next season will come these series: "The Phil Silvers Show," "The Richard Boone Show," "Twilight Zone," "My Favorite Martian," "The Danny Thomas Show," "The Dick Van Dyke Show," "The Andy Griffith Show," "Breaking Point," "The Bill Dana Show," "Perry Mason," "The Joey Bishop Show," "The Fugitive," "My Three Sons," "Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," "Lassie," "Combat," "Gunsmoke," "Ben Casey," "Mr. Ed," "Rawhide," "Outer Limits," "Petticoat Junction," "The Patty Duke Show," "Beverly Hillbillies," "Espionage," "The Nurses" and "The Defenders." CBS-TV is turning out "The Great Adventure," and NBC-TV, "Bonanza."

As to the major-made series, there are "The Robert Taylor Show" and tentatively-tagged "Amos Burke," from Four Star; "Harry's Girls," "The Travels of Jamie McPheeters," "The Lieutenant," "Mr. Novak," "Dr. Kildare" and "The Eleventh Hour," from MGM-TV; "Arrest and Trial," "Alfred Hitchcock Hour," "Channing," "Wagon Train," "The Bob Hope Show," "The Virginian," "Kraft '64," "McHale's Navy," "The Jack Benny Show," all from Revue studios; "Donna Reed Show," "Grindl," "The Farmer's Daughter," "Redigo," "Route 66," "Hazel," "The Flintstones," Screen Gems; "The Lucy Show," "Careful, My Love" and "The Greatest Show on Earth," Desilu; "77 Sunset Strip," Warner Bros.; "Walt Disney's Wonderful World of Color," "Disney Productions, and "East Side, West Side," Talent Associates-Paramount.

Parke Levy Exits 4 Star

Hollywood, May 21.

Producer-creator-writer Parke Levy has exited Four Star where he has been under contract, and is developing several comedy series for the 1964-65 season.

Levy, creator of "December Bride" and "Pete and Gladys," is readying the new projects under the aegis of his El Camino Productions.

'Robt. Sarnoff Thesis' For a Sound Educ'l TV Pattern in a Comm'l World

Miami, May 21.

Sound fiscal planning for educational tv stations was called for by Robert W. Sarnoff, chairman of NBC who spoke here today (Tues.) before the National Congress of Parents & Teachers.

The NBC chairman cautioned his audience here that "the teaching aspect" of educational tv should not be ignored since its one of "its basic functions." He said that those who "discount the educational community as a source for permanent financing of educational television are unrealistic in failing to recognize its need for stability and continuity of income."

Sarnoff said it was incredible to him that programs "designed for the specific purpose of teaching should be regarded as unworthy of educational television's mission, or as doing violence to its cultural potential."

Sarnoff got into the practical similarities and differences between commercial tv and educational television. Said the NBC topper: "Commercial and educational tv are 'interacting,' and by enriching each other, can enlarge the total contribution of television to the nation."

"Commercial tv," he said, "is structured to attract vast audiences of all ages and educational levels, to bring significant aspects of our world to millions, through drama and music, through documentaries on art and science, history, geography and current affairs; and by doing so, to acquaint viewers with new cultural and intellectual experiences to which they may never have been exposed before.

"Educational television, on the other hand, has the capacity to explore areas in greater detail and to provide more intense involvement for viewers who have well developed interests or professional needs; and to carry forward interests already awakened, in some cases, by commercial television."

Sarnoff noted specifically how recently on "Today" critic Aline Saarinen discussed "various milestones in the history of art." He

It's a Small World

NBC-TV program topper Mort Werner on his recent visit to Japan with his wife spent most of his time motoring through the countryside.

At Osaka he spent some time with the local tv officials. One of the first questions put to him: "Tell me, Mr. Werner, just why did you knock off 'It's A Man's World'?"

Mort Werner On NBC-Owned Kick; Jackson Tapped

NBC is moving into filmed production of its own making and to the end of setting up a new unit, Mort Werner, programming veepee for the tv network, has tapped Felix Jackson to head up the operation as veepee. In his second promotion at the high program level in Hollywood, Werner awarded Grant Tinker the post of veepee in charge of programs on the Coast, which had berthed Jackson.

Returned from three-week tour of Japan, Werner said the new plan would augment the filmed shows from studio suppliers. Presently, the only NBC-produced show is "Bonanza." New development is an extension of production arm of California National, now defunct but which produced its own shows mostly for syndication.

"We're building our own organization for more NBC-produced shows in Hollywood," said Werner. "By taking Jackson out of administration we'll be utilizing his vast background and know-how in film production for the creation, development and the complete wrapup of shows targeted for the network. Thomas Sarnoff, of course, continues as veepee in overall charge.

Jackson will have full play in staffing his organization with writers, producers and directors. Not only will new shows be developed for filming but also live daytime programs. In his new posts, Tinker reports to Werner.

Jerry Lewis Spending $1,000,000 to Acquire El Capitan for TV Use

Hollywood, May 21.

An outlay of $1,000,000 will be spent by Jerry Lewis Enterprises on the leasing and refurbishing of the El Capitan theatre in Hollywood, as an origination site for his upcoming ABC-TV series. Lewis disclosed that the deal for the theatre, now being finalized, includes an option to buy.

House, to be renamed the Jerry Lewis Theatre, will undergo complete face-lifting. Front will be changed completely, and Lewis' plan is to model the theatre after a legit house.

The star is spending $25,000 on divan-type seats alone. There will be a house curtain and proscenium, a celebrity room for the guest stars. Films will be screened in the lobby to entertain those waiting in line; admission will be by tix only. Lewis said there will be no skimping in the refurbishing program, as he seeks to present a feeling of the legit theatre in the projection of his two-hour shows which begin next fall.

SALTZMAN TO 'REDIGO'

Hollywood, May 21.

Philip Saltzman has joined Screen Gems as a story consultant on its "Redigo" series on NBC-TV, which stars Richard Egan.

Saltzman has been a freelance writer, and prior to that was story consultant at 20th-Fox TV.

WNDT, Sarnoff: 'Here Are Facts'

Washington, May 21.

WNDT-TV denied allegations its broadcaster contributors tried to influence its educational programming format.

Samuel B. Gould, prexy of the New York teachvee station, said the "only suggestion made by any broadcaster with respect to WNDT's programming" was in a letter from NBC board chairman Robert Sarnoff. Gould said this approach "was never accepted."

Sarnoff's letter of April 11 referred to an earlier conversation with Gould and confirmed a $100,000 NBC contribution to WNDT. Sarnoff wrote he was "impressed by Gould's conviction" that the station must evolve a pattern of operations where the bulk of its services would be directed to the type of educational programs which service a specific teaching function and the rest of the programming would be directed to specialized interests not met by commercial broadcasting.

Gould's statement to FCC and Sarnoff's missive were received during days of considerable excitement and activity.

Gould said he was somewhat puzzled by Sarnoff's reference to the bulk of its (WNDT's) services being devoted to educational programming. But in the stress of events, he placed no particular importance on this statement.

Gould said he interpreted Sarnoff's reference to "specialized interests not met by commercial broadcasters," to mean minority audiences.

The WNDT prexy said he un-

Chi Red Quinlan's 11 Big Ones, But No Lip Service to a Tin God'

Chicago, May 21.

WBKB's plans board has hatched an ambitious lineup of 11 specials programed for the fall ahead, following the ABC exec's philosophy, as articulated by veepee Sterling Quinlan, "to further creative techniques rather than give lip service to a tin god called 'public service'." Quinlan says the shows will be experimental in their approach and will "range over the 'humanities'" rather than confine themselves to the usual newsy content of tv documentaries.

Program director Dan Schaffman, into whose bailiwick most of these projects will fall, clarifies further by describing them as "non-fiction theatre" wherein the creative techniques used in entertainment shows will be adapted to actual human situations. Says Schaffman, "In our specials, we want to get away from the straight actual documentary into the area of human values and ideas. These programs won't be strictly a take-off on the headlines or an effort to create new ones. We want them to create an emotional—not just an intellectual—relationship with the viewer, and hopefully they'll hold their own against pure entertainment shows."

Among the specials already in production are a film on the Chinese way of life in a U. S. metropolis, as seen through a local family; one on the impressions of a 13-year old German girl living here under the American Field Service Program on the American way of life; and another on the journey of a Negro family moving from Louisiana to Chicago. Also, there's a film on the Vice Lords, a notorious teenage gang on Chicago's west side, taken "from the inside looking out" and promising to be a sociological document with no explicit indictment of their habits.

On tap are a pair of video essays, one dealing with the things people commonly do that are really morally wrong (such as calling themselves long-distance to beat the charges) and the other with the idiosyncracies of the female sex. There are also two more chapters in the works for WBKB's "Home Again" portfolio, one with Bob Newhart and the other with Red Grange, and two more operas with the Second City group.

One of the latter will be titled "A Tale of Two Cities" and will compare impressions of Chicago by the British acting group, The Establishment, with impressions of London by the Second City troupe. The two were involved in a switch of stages about six months ago. The other is to be another chapter of "Second City Reports," piloted earlier this spring.

The 11th special is the only one that falls into the category of the conventional documentary and is being prepared by Cun O'Dea's news department. It will touch on the problems of the recently scandalized Sanitary District.

'Hey, It's Our Bldg.'

Chicago, May 21.

It might be said that WBKB-TV got in on the ground floor of a spot news story last Thursday (16) night.

Three armed burglars broke into the State-Lake Bldg. at 10:30 p.m., sent the night man up the elevator and flattened seven window displays in the lobby that have been leased by fur merchants in the building.

Happens that WBKB occupies the 10th and 11th floor. Station sent television cameras down on the elevator to survey the stripped displays and to interview the watchman and police for Norm Ross' midnight newscast.

Ex-'Dragnet' Cop Now a Contented 'Dragnet' Sponsor

One of the most contented tv sponsors in the country has got to be Ben Alexander Ford of San Francisco.

Dealership is owned by Ben Alexander, who for years was Jack Webb's sidekick in the "Dragnet" series. Alexander bankrolls himself on tv. His six dealerships (covering Los Angeles and area as well as the Frisco business) partnered with Perry Holden of LA, will gross $18,000,000 this year.

The LA dealerships have participations in the "Dragnet" rerun strip in that city. Ben Alexander Ford in San Francisco has "Dragnet" all to itself twice a week on KTVU, and Alexander can do his own blurbs. He also observes an hour amateur talent show on the station Sundays, which BA Ford also sponsors all the way.

Alexander, in New York on one of his quarterly or so swings to Detroit and Gotham, says producer Jack Webb built good tv acceptance into the character "Frank Smith," which he played for so long — that "fat, hypochondriac, family-man cop—" above all, "honest"—is the perfect image for a car dealer, he feels.

If the $18,000,000 gross on the dealership doesn't indicate, however, that old honest, fat, "Frank Smith" isn't a pretty lean and hard businessman in real life, Alexander also owns a couple of gas stations and a San Francisco mortuary, Alexander & Murphy.

Mortuary used to have the one name, says Alexander, "But we didn't get any Catholic cases. So I brought in this Irish cop (Murphy) who was retiring after 33 years on the force. He never issued a ticket in his 33 years and was dearly loved by the Irish. We're putting down a lot of Catholics now."

Alexander and Holden have been in the car business since '35, and the actor figures they're trouble shooters.

20th's 'Century' Sales

20th-Fox TV's Century 1 package of feature films is now being circulated in 40 markets as a result of recent sales. In the last couple of weeks, the 30 post-1950 films have been sold to KPTV, Portland, Ore; WBRC-TV, Birmingham; KMSP-TV, Minneapolis; WDAU-TV, Scranton; and KATV, Little Rock.

The package was telecast Saturday nights on NBC-TV last season.

Culture & Sports Sweep Chi Emmys

Chicago, May 21.

Public affairs, culture and sports made a virtual sweep of the local Emmy awards last week, under a new balloting system that this year did away with categories. The only Chi chapter winner from the field of pure entertainment was kiddie performer Ray Rayner.

Of a total of 13 program and individual statuettes handed out, WGN-TV chalked up four, WNBQ and WBBM-TV three each, educational station WTTW two, indie packager Walter Schwimmer one and WBKB none. The latter, however, claimed two special awards: Alex Drier's "Man of the Year" Emmy and Irv Kupcinet's distinguished service medallion, the former presented by the Board of Governors and the latter by the Trustees of the Chi chapter of Academy of Television Arts & Sciences.

WBBM-TV received two of the four technical awards and WGN-TV one, so the two tied in totals with five apiece. WBBM-TV's program awards were for "Repertoire Workshop" and the one-shot high school production of "The Mikado." Femme personality Lee Phillip won an individual Emmy. "Mikado" also brought technical awards to Eddie Dahlbert and Charles Meyer.

WGN-TV's awards were for the "Great Music" series and "Play-by-Play Sports," plush the individual citations to Rayner and remotes producer Jack Jacobson. Richard Hance, who filmed the documentary "TUF Guys" under slightly hazardous circumstances, won a technical award. WNBQ won for "Artists Showcase," a longhair music show, the high school quiz series "It's Academic" and commentator Len O'Connor. "Festival," a weekly showcase for local performing talent, plushed a program award for the educational station and an individual award for its producer, Jim McPhertin, who's now with WBKB.

Welper Specials' Clients

More local sponsors on the projected David Welper specials were signed up by United Artists Television, distributors for the syndicated series of six hourlong documentaries to be telecast next season.

East Ohio Gas has placed an order for the Welper series in Cleveland-Akron and Youngstown. Pittsburgh National Bank will share sponsorship on KDKA, Pittsburgh, with Liberty Mutual. Banks in Dallas, New Haven and Minneapolis will share sponsorship with Liberty Mutual in their respective markets.

Lotsa Aftermaths to KSTP-TV's Expose in Security Hosp. Scandal

St. Paul, May 21.

A string of explosive probes of Minnesota's Security Hospital, set off in Chinese firecracker fashion by KSTP-TV publicffairs director Jim McGovern, continued to make news headlines here last week.

Undoubtedly edgy because of the public clamor unleashed three months ago by McGovern's tv documentary exposing scandalous conditions at the state hospital for psychopathic prisoners, the Minnesota Civil Service Board banned KSTP-TV sound cameras from an otherwise "open" hearing last frame.

Hearing was an appeal by two Security Hospital guards who had been fired for dunking a patient's head in a toilet bowl and then flushing it. The guards were suspended and later discharged after the incident came to light. Denying any intended cruelty, they appealed to the Civil Service Board because they felt their punishment was too severe.

After board chairman Raymond Black decided KSTP Auricons could not film the proceedings and ordered the tv station's equipment out of the hearing room, another bombshell exploded. Testifying in defense of the guards, Dr. Wayne Canfield, senior staff physician at Security Hospital, called the dunking episode "beneficial" treatment because "it met the patient's need for attention." He added that it was a prank and harmless horseplay.

Canfield's defense of the so-called therapy brought a new out-

WBC's 'Call Us Group W'

Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., owners of four television and seven radio stations, is launching an industrywide campaign to sell the "Group" broadcasting concept. In conjunction with this drive, the company has adopted a new designation, "Group W" although Westinghouse remains the chain's legal name.

Donald H. McGannon, prexy of Group W, said: "It is our objective to establish the group in its rightful place as the third force in broadcasting—neither a network nor just an aggregation of individual stations, but a new and significant broadcast entity in its right." The drive to foster the "group" idea was sparked by surveys which indicated that the concept was not clearly understood even by execs of advertising agencies.

McGannon defined Group W as follows: "We are 11 stations with a common philosophy about broadcasting. We have financial, creative manpower and management resources greater than the individual station. And we have local operating flexibility no network can match. These resources represent an opportunity as well as a responsibility to serve our communities in a way neither individual stations nor networks are capable of doing."

The decision to change the name of the operation to Group W, McGannon said, was cued by the fact that the company ran into "constant confusion as to what WBC represented. Some thought it was a fourth network, and worse, others plainly didn't know."

Westinghouse commissioned the Psychological Corp. of N. Y. to survey the advertising field to determine its awareness of WBC and station groups in general as opposed to other broadcast entities. The survey report stated: "Despite the advertising experience manifested by the sample, only one-third of the executives interviewed fully understood what a broadcast group is or does. Thus, advertising executives generally do not think in terms of groups but by and large think in terms of networks or independent stations."

Another company, Lippincott & Margulies was retained to study Westinghouse's graphic appearance and made the suggestion that it develop a new "communicative name." Hence, the tag Group W, which McGannon said, "is in effect a kind of shorthand, a name which says in a few easily understood symbols what it would take many words to explain."

As examples of the type of projects which groups can undertake to augment local and network schedules and provide new programming sources, McGannon pointed to such Westinghouse efforts as "The Steve Allen Show," the children specials on tv, "America Sings," and the establishment of Westinghouse's news bureaus in Washington and Europe.

That's How Talent Was Born

Many a Major TV Personality Has Emerged From Morning 'Housewives' Shows

Hollywood, May 21.

Television's early morning "housewives" shows, long taken for granted as merely an eye-opener for the day's programming, have developed into a major source of talent discovery.

Red Rowe, for the past 11 years host-emcee of the popular KNXT "Panorama Pacific" show in the Los Angeles area, recently made a survey of figures emanating from his and other of the a.m. potpourris and came up with a surprising list of personalities who started their careers in this area but have risen to major prominence in other parts of the television firmament.

From Rowe's own show, for instance, such persons as Johnny Carson have emerged. Carson, in 1953-4, was the regular "last five minute coffee break" spot man on "Fun Fac," Rowe recalls, noting the spot drew attention for the comic-emcee from top CBS execs who pushed Carson on toward the top.

Similarly, the talents of performers like Garry Moore, Dave Garroway, Arthur Godfrey, Jack

20-Year Vet at 35

Pete Affe has accomplished what few other administrative, sales or program executives in tv accomplish. He's been with his company 20 straight years and is thought to be flourishing.

Also, he is only 36. Presently manager of WNBC-TV, NBC key in N.Y., he began with the web as a 15-year-old mailroom boy in May of 1943.

Cascade Blurbery Ousts Seawright In Policy Hassle

Hollywood, May 21.

Roy Seawright, principal stockholder in Cascade Pictures, which makes telebiurbs, is being ousted as a veepee of the company, in a management policy disagreement with Barney Carr, prexy-Board chairman of Cascade. Both execs conferred over the weekend that Carr had gained the majority support from shareholders in Cascade in the top echelon schism.

Seawright contended he had been "fired," but Carr said this was not so. He acknowledged, however, that Seawright has been informed the board is meeting to take action on termination of Seawright's services with Cascade, and that he doesn't see any possibility of resolving what he termed "grave differences." "In all probability, Seawright will be associated with a company other than Cascade," said Carr.

Seawright owns 41% of the stock in Cascade, Carr 31%. Both men formed the company in 1948. Originally, it produced training films, and when tv came into be-

'Feuster' Syndie Sales

"I'm Dickens . . . He's Feuster," which exits the ABC-TV web after the current season, has been sold in syndication to WABC-TV, N.Y.; WCPO-TV, Cincinnati; KOMO-TV, Seattle; and KABC-TV, Los Angeles.

There are 39 half-hour shows in the package being syndicated by ABC Films for a fall start.

McCarthy Hopeful On Freer TV Flow

Hope of securing an amendment in the world trade agreement providing for freer flow of tv programs in international trade was voiced by John McCarthy, prexy of Television Programs Export Assn.

McCarthy voiced the hope after returning from Europe, where he visiting Geneva and conferred with John Evans, minister representing the U.S. on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. He said the U.S. proposed amendment has won the support of the legal committee of the European Broadcasting Union and forecast that eventually the full EBU will endorse the freer flow of trade for tv programs provisions.

TPEA prexy also stopped over in London and Germany. McCarthy said that Professor Holzamer, head of the second German network, will be visiting the U.S. in September as a guest of TPEA. In London, McCarthy said he received assurances that discriminatory clauses in the new British tax law on commercial programmers would be dropped.

NBC Int'l in Hot Tokyo Sales Pace

NBC International says that everything it has to offer for sale abroad, save for a few of the current NBC-TV specials, has been sold in Japan. Joe Klein, head of the NBC distribution company, got back from Japan last week with eight more sales in his pocket.

Klein left for Japan shortly after that country relaxed the dollar restrictions on foreign film or tape imports. He made sales to the Fuji TV Network, to NET and to NTV.

Fuji bought the new hourlong "Richard Boone Show," "National Velvet," "Panic," and "87th Precinct." NET bought "Dr. Kildare," "Laramie" and another new NBC show, "Bill Dana Show." NTV latched onto "Bonanza."

Previously set for Japanese tv were three other NBC international packages: "Victory At Sea," "King Leonardo," "Funny Manns," "Bonanza," "Mike Shayne," "Dick Powell Show," "Man's World," "Shirley Temple Show," "Danger Is My Business," "Loretta Young Show," "Cameo Theatre" and "Continental Classroom."

SYNDIE SALES: MULTI-PATTERN

Shouras Envisions 5 for 20th

Minneapolis, May 21.

In broadcasting field 20th-Fox now has only a single television station, the successful local KMSP-TV, an ABC affiliate. But Spyros Shouras, the company's former president and now its board chairman, is confident "there's plenty of big broadcasting times ahead for us and it's only a matter of a short while before we'll be achieving them."

Here to discuss KMSP-TV's operations with its local executives, Shouras revealed that he's "hoping" that 20th-Fox's broadcasting activities expansion will be in line with that of its motion picture and tv producing—the latter already under way, he pointed out.

The Shouras "hope" is that "before very long" 20th-Fox will have at least four more tv stations—five in all, along with seven radio stations "just as a starter." There's no 20th-Fox radio station now.

Whether the stations will be acquisitions or ones that the company itself will create, Shouras asserted he'll not prepared to say at this time. Neither was he ready to tell if there were certain cities definitely in mind yet as the locales for the stations.

"But," he said, "I don't mind publicly expressing what my 'hopes' are for 20th-Fox in this direction. Also, I'm making no secret of the fact that I believe broadcasting's future is unlimited and that it's going to be potentially an even greater moneymaker than ever for those engaged in it. And we're determined to get 20th-Fox back in the large moneymaking class and feel confindent we'll be able to that."

Shouras said he's pleased and encouraged by the response from tv stations to the recent two-page VARIETY ad announcing that the "Dublo Cliffs" reruns will be available for the coming season. They'll start at KMSP-TV next October. 20th-Fox is part owner of the four-year old series which were produced at its Hollywood studio.

Hottest Ghoul in Town

Cleve. WJW-TV's Ernie Anderson 'Horror Hosting' Going Like Crazy, Man

By SANFORD MARKEY

Cleveland, May 21.

The old format of a gimmick, personality, smart promotion and timing has again paid off as WJW-TV's Ghoulardi has become the hottest property in town.

Ghoulardi is Ernie Anderson, WJW-TV's staff announcer, who was picked to emcee a package of late-model horror and science fiction films. Bob Huber, program manager, faced with the opposition's Steve Allen and Johnny Carson felt that a Friday night horror-science package would attract viewers and that a ghoul might be the added gimmick to help viewers watch less than "A" movies.

Anderson was picked, the station's promotion department under Sheldon Saltman went to work, and in less than three months the station received more than 10,000 pieces of mail on the basis of contests and gimmicks. So successful has the venture become that Huber scheduled a second science fiction film on Saturdays from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Not only have teenagers picked Ghoulardi as their favorite, but adults and even the kiddies have joined the crowd.

Rating-wise, the science-Ghoulardi package has also scored. ARB showed a 7 rating average prior to "Shock Theatre" at the 11 p.m. slot. The March-April book "reflects a fantastic 20 rating, and this is better than three times as many rating points and almost three times as many homes" according to Saltman. As for Nielsen, Saltman

OF Goes 'Other Way'

Official Films, the company which has weathered many a storm as syndication has gone through various phases, again is "going the other way."

For the past two years, since "Peter Gunn," it hasn't had any new off-network property. Steered by proxy Seymour Reed, Official Films now is a first-run house, with second year production of "Biography" now being sold, and the new documentary "Battle Line" slated for fall telecasting.

Reed boosts of adding two more men to Official's sales force, bringing the total salesmen up to 16.

$2,000,000 Balto Metromedia Buy

Metromedia, operators of the Metropolitan Broadcasting chain, has added Baltimore radio station WCBM-AM-FM to its station roster in a sale involving over $2,000,000. Baltimore Broadcasting Corp. sold the station to Metromedia with the actual transfer pending FCC approval.

John W. Kluge, Metromedia prexy, said the present station management, under g.m. George M. Burder, will be retained along with the present call letters. In addition, John Elmer, prexy of Baltimore Broadcasting Corp. joins Metropolitan Broadcasting as a v.p. in the radio division. Coin for the acquisition by Metromedia of WCBM is being provided by a group of banks, there being no equity financing involved.

AS YOU JUGGLE SO YOU REAP

Never stand still biz of syndication now has developed new patterns, representing altered conditions in sales organizations, in the role of smaller markets, in the market countdown of what's considered saturation selling in the U.S.

Juggling these patterns successfully in instance after instance spells the difference between profit and loss for syndication houses.

Regarding the sales organization pattern, syndicators roughly fall into two categories, those that have streamlined their sales force but still retain sufficient number of men to cover the country in a modified tradition of years past.

Feature selling approach now has gone beyond these firms selling pix to encompass the syndicators specializing in off-network properties, especially the hours. Four Star's Len Firestone, Desilu's Richard Dinsmore, Warner Bros' Jon Kotler, all speak of the efficiency of a relatively small sales force, the need to concentrate on the top 50 markets, and the uneconomic expenditure of trying to blanket the country with salesmen, in the tradition of years past.

A more modified position is taken by such houses as United Artists Television, CBS Films and MCA TV. MCA TV has a sales organization of about 20 compared to six for Four Star. Position of CBS Films, with a sales force of 13, is that the number 13 represents the minimum in which to operate nationally for its catalog. As to the importance of the smaller markets, the monies derived from them are "gravy" in the terms of an MCA TV spokesman. CBS Films domestic sales topper James Victory was even more emphatic, said Victory "From 25 to 30% of our gross can come from the markets outside the top 50 and that can represent our profit."

It isn't that the smaller markets are of no concern to the outfits such as Four Star and Warner Bros. Selling volume as they do, the concentration is on the top markets and if there's genuine interest in the smaller markets, evidenced by phone calls and letters, the smaller markets also will get a sales representative. But the big emphasis, dictated by the nature of their catalog, must be on the big markets. It takes from 20 to 30 small markets to substitute for a sale in N. Y., for example.

What it boils down to is that the nature of the catalog, as well as other factors, dictates the number of men in the sales force, and the way those markets outside the top 75 are cultivated.

What is national saturation in today's syndie market? For the off-network hours, it's about 100 markets, and even that's high in the current climate of plentitude. Sixty markets is closer to what a good series can achieve. Of course getting the top 60 markets virtually blankets the country in terms of tv coverage. Very few syndicators, when 60 markets are sold, find their sales confined to the top 60.

That successful first-run product, even in today's soft market, can still hit 100 markets is attested to by Official Films' "Biography" skein.

Of course, if and when more local time is given back to stations by the networks, the changing sales pattern would change. In general now, it's a tight ship being run by most syndie houses, with the overhead being watched in a tough, competitive situation.

Mike Douglas Daytime Spread Hits AFTRA Snag

Cleveland, May 21.

Westinghouse Broadcasting's proposed syndication of its 90-minute long Mike Douglas Cleveland variety show to its other television outlets apparently has floundered over a waiver of network fees agreement with AFTRA.

In a letter to all employees, George Mathiesen, station manager, charged AFTRA had agreed to a waiver, but then tossed other issues into the bargaining pot and that holding back of waivers "is a matter of great embarrassment to Mike, to me and the station."

Ken Bichel, AFTR president and executive secretary, said that a waiver rested on clearance with other stations in the WBC chain, and that if AFTRA were to grant concessions to WBC, the union expected KYW-TV to live up to its contractual obligations agreed upon two years ago on off-camera fees and pensions.

Bichel said that AFTRA, New York, also urged the local outlet to look "closely on any agreements being made." He said waivers exist to put the Mike Douglas show on KDKA-TV and WBZ-TV, but that approval has not been received from KPIX and WJZ. Neither of the last two stations, said Bichel, are included in the present KYW contracts as related to other Westinghouse stations.

Bichel said Westinghouse has

WTCN's Advice to Indie Stations: Bring Professional Ball Club Into Town, Then Grab Up All TV Rights

By LEE BROWN

Minneapolis, May 21.

But for the fortuitous happenstance of a professional baseball team moving into the Twin Cities at just the time WTCN-TV was losing its ABC affiliation in 1961, the Time-Life station might not have been able to survive in a four-station market that has been so thoroughly dominated by the CBS and NBC outlets.

Except in a few of the majors, the situation of non-affiliated tv stations is anything but comfy, but to be suddenly stripped of the network jewelry and left to fend for itself in the prime time hours was next to ruinous for WTCN. Indeed, in the anxious days following ABC's announced switch to KMSP, a few prospective buyers sniffed at the new independent and passed it up as a pretty hopeless property.

Enter the Minnesota Twins (formerly the Washington Senators), whose inaugural season began exactly a week after WTCN's affiliation ran out. A fast three-year deal with Hamm's Beer, which owns the video rights, gave the Time-Life station just the transition it needed into its indie operations plus 150 hours of potent programming that summer to solve one of the immediate problems. From that point on it's been an upbeat story.

With baseball as the hoist, WTCN-TV in the two years since has scrambled off the precipice onto relatively safe footing and, according to station manager Art Swift, could now probably carry on successfully without the ballcasts if it had to. While it has by no means evolved into a cushy life for the independent in such a competitive market, the hopeful sign is that the station does expect to turn a profit for the first time in 1963, and it is now laying claim to the largest relative audience share of any independent in the nation. Moreover, that claim is based on the ARB report for the non-baseball months of February-March this year.

(WTCN, according to its own investigation, gets a 19% audience share on a seven day comparison, 9 ayem to midnight; while the runner-up indie, WGN-TV, Chicago, scores 17% in the same rating period.)

If it was blind luck that the whilom Washington ballclub should have arrived just in time to rescue WTCN, it was doubly lucky that the once lackluster team turned into a snazzy outfit when it transferred to the Twin Cities. The Twins' race for second place last year brought baseball interest the effect on the station carrying to a boil throughout the state, and some 50-odd games was to increase

Indies to the Rescue

With the post-'48 of virtually all the major studios either out or soon to be committed for tv distribution, the focus of the wheeler-dealers acquiring new pix product for tv is on the independent producers.

It's estimated that from 30% to 40% of pix product in the last five years was filmed under the aegis of indie producers. The more prominent producers in that group retained the tv distribution rights to their pix. Producers in that group include such names as Kirk Douglas, Mal Wallis, Alfred Hitchcock, Marlon Brando, Billy Wilder and Jerry Lewis.

WBBM-TV in War On Slum Landlord In Chi News Tieup

Chicago, May 21.

In what is believed to be the first such collaboration between rival media not related by common ownership, WBBM-TV and the Chicago Daily News have pooled news forces for an expose of judicial leniency towards slum landlords here.

First stories broke yesterday (Mon.) with the afternoon paper playing it on page one and the tv station following its high-rated 10 p.m. newscast with a 30 minute special last night. There was substantial cross-plugging of the media.

It's understood that the full story will take more than a week to unfold, with the Daily News slating a series of six frontpage articles and WBBM-TV a 15 minute special this Friday (24) and a second half-hour special next Monday, in addition to giving the story a daily once-over on the newscasts. Both the station and the newspaper are prepared for the inevitable followup pieces with the mayor and other city officials, since the expose promises to have repercussions.

How the joint venture came about in the first place is something that will probably remain a secret for some time, but initial arrangements were made some two months ago between WBBM-TV veep-general manager Clark George and Daily News editor Larry Fanning. What is particularly unusual about it is that the two media have had no special

NBC'S SALES WRAPUP AT MONTREUX FEST

London, May 21.

While CBS snatched the prime Golden Rose Award at the Montreux fest with its "Julie and Carol" show, NBC can be excused for believing it spun itself the most coin.

Lane Blackwell, its European Sales chief, who repped the company at the festival, inked in orders for Andy Williams Show from Germany, Sweden, Switzerland, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Holland, France and Czechoslovakia. And since the end of the fest there have been indications of strong interest from Italian and UK tv webs.

The seg which so swiftly attracted the European buyers was the one which NBC aired on Jan. 24 when Sammy Davis Jr. was the guest.

4 Star Distrib's $4,250,000 Sales

About to wind up its first fiscal year, Four Star Distribution reports a sales total of $4,250,000 which veepee Len Firestone says tops the anticipated goal by more than 30%. Same time, the firm's new international wing, Four Star Television International, reports sales of $500,000 in the first quarter of operation.

For the domestic company, Firestone says the recent addition of "Rifleman" and "Dick Powell Theatre" to the syndie firm's list of off-web properties, has seen a surge of close to $2,000,000 in gross sales.

For the international wing, Manny Reiner, who joined as veepee in February this year, has logged a reported 35,000 miles in Europe, the Far East and Canada, spending only nine days in his New York hq.

THE SPREAD OF THE EAGLE
With Roland Culver, Robert Hardy, Beatrix Lehmann, Frank Pettingell, Jeremy Wilkin, Noel Johnson, Jennifer Daniel, Mary Steele, Ray Barrett, Maurice Colbourne, Roger Croucher, Peter Jeffrey, David King, Paul Hardy, Hilary Wright, John Greenwood, Charles Lamb, John Barrett, Hugh Dickson
Producer: Peter Dews
50 Mins., Fri., 9:05 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Two years ago BBC-TV scored a notable success, both here and internationally, with a series linking Shakespeare's history plays. The same producer, Peter Dews, has followed up that "Age of Kings" with a nine-part slice a portraying the Roman plays, "Coriolanus," "Antony and Cleopatra," and "Julius Caesar." The initialler recommenced the first two acts of "Coriolanus" and left the tale in a good cliffhanging condition.

But, unless drastic improvement affects later segments, the course of the opener were distinctly sticky. The play takes Coriolanus, as one of the Roman tribunes, through his battle triumph over the enemy Volsces up to his victorious return to Rome. The prose is lucid, clear, and muscular, and the characters easily identified and labbed. In fact, the material seemed ready-made for cogent tv treatment.

Among the many drawbacks of this production, chief fault was the unconvincing handling of the fight sequences. These cried out for more dash ng conviction, and, as they took up a large part of the running time, the tentative running-and-jobbing destroyed belief. Peter Dews also chose to instruct the thugs to shout as if they were hailing one another from mountain peaks, and this affected mostly Robert Hardy, an able, but shrill actor whose Coriolanus was pitched at too high a vocal key and seemed funny rather than heroic. It was also mistaken casting, as Hardy lacks the martial heel for the part.

The same over-emphasis afflicted many of the supporting cast, although Beatrix Lehmann registered as the indomitable Volumnia and Frank Pettingell clicked as the envious Junius Brutus. Outstanding performance, dry and well-spoken, came from Roland Culver as the wiseacre Menenius—an affront choice that paid off.

Quite apart from its extravagant quota of decibels, the show was also abrupt in conception and unadventurous in design. When the more subtle situations of "Antony" and "Caesar" come on, judgments may be revised. So far however, it was knickerbocker stuff, lacking in control and sense. Otis.

THE ANDY STEWART SHOW
With Andy Stewart, Vic Perry, Bill Shenton, Moira Anderson, Blake Ingram, Lenny Gordon Dancers, the Geoffrey Mitchell Singers, Harry Robinson and Producer: John MacFadyen
Writer: Jack Bradley
45 Mins., Sat., 7:05 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Booked for a world tour that will take in the U.S. and Canada, Andy Stewart has now rated his own show, having graduated from a packy, but immensely popular, sheln in which he thrust out familiar Scottish ditties. Kilted, humorly, Stewart is indeed a current phenomenon in these parts. His voice is sturdy, and he delivers his native lyrics while beating his knees in rhythm and marching gently on the spot. He's the boy-next-door who's not afraid to show his legs.

This product'on neatly displayed the star in all his cleanliness. As host, he tried a few yarns which were good but didn't suit him because they were too clever for his personality. He gave some pretty mediocre imitations of warblers like Nat "King" Cole, Adam Faith, and Perry Como—and did a dialog between James Stewart and his producer in which both sounded like a Stewart with loose dentures. He serenaded his pretty wife, Sheila, in "My Love Is Like a Red, Red Rose," while she looked shy by footwards, and he closed with a ballad about a Scottish soldier which will perch many throats wherever he goes.

Scottish heel-and-toe terping came from the lively Dixie Ingram, and a demure lassie named Moira Anderson trilled about her fondness for her "Ain Fireside." Also guesting was Reid Harris, a self-assured singer from Australia, who scored with a perky Cockney item and had the amusing idea of sketching his own backdrop with crayons before giving his aboriginal ditty, "Ram Arine."

From America, Vic Perry produced his usual pickpocket routine somewhat hampered this time by one of the guinea-pigs being reluctant about losing his shirt in public. The Larry Gordon dancers terped neatly, and the show pleased largely because of Stewart's unassuming bonhomie—despite his occasional reminiscence of Shirley Temple in long socks. He is at his most stirring when he's in sentimental mood, for his sincerity gives it conviction.

THE DO-IT-YOURSELF DEBDC-LACT
With Hal Bottering
Director-Narrator: Hal Bottering
Writer: David Hughes
BBC-TV

The Swedish-born blonde actress has long insisted that her acting is a threesome necessity which she undertakes only to subsidize her compulsions into documentary production. She has already been rewarded with accolades at international festivals for an earlier plece turned out for BBC-TV.

Overriding effect which shines out in all her work is her own tingling enthusiasm in the subject and the creative freedom she enjoys making her own films. This, on all the top profile of Ireland and its people, one of the world's oldest democracies yet only a generation away from a stone age kind of existence, was no exception.

Her repertage was thorough and her cogencies to tell all the story in pictures yielded two or three choice sequences. One in particular was a spell of three or four minutes in which the narration ceased while the camera probed over the shoulders of farmers retrieving sheep from a summer island grazing to convert them for the hard winter ahead. Left to a background of bird calls, gently lapping water and the soft voice of a farmer singing a gentle local folk song the effect was almost lyrical.

Another atmospheric touch was the inclusion of local voices helping along the story, not one of them allowed to repeat something that had already been covered. It helped keep a swing of interest to the program. But the picture did suffer here and there from what appeared patchy editing. An eagerness to get it all into 45 minutes resulted in some cuts and quick switches which temporarily confused. Pila.

HOT ICE
With David Jacobs, Tony Hatch & Jackie Trent, Alex McCowan, Thelma Perry, John Slater, Joan Benbrook, Michael and Carol, Barbara Cassidy
Producer: Philip Lewis
25 Mins., Thurs., 6:05 p.m.
BBC-TV, from Manchester

This deejay sheln aims to give some visual equivalent to disks by providing a bunch of incubators to interpret them. The idea was often enterprising, but the result was pretty strained.

David Jacobs, who hosts the best of the tv disk shows, "Juke Box Jury," was confined to a cubicle, where he introduced the warblers and peered out at the skaters. These were nimble and graceful on the whole, though their motions seemed to have only the vaguest connection with the musical backing, which took in instrumentals by Count Basie, Les Baxter, and Ted Heath, as well as vocals from Susan Maughan and Caterina Valente.

Alex McCowan, in Middle-Eastern pantaloons, scored in "In a Persian Market", and Michael & Carol proved a limber duo. But the concept proved somewhat pawnsome, and producer Philip Lewis couldn't warm up its essential frigidity. The phoney impression was also supported by sound-track applause. They even clapped a guy who slipped on his behind.

A DREAMPLAY
With Ingrid Thulin, Uno Henning, Allan Edwall, Olof Widgren, Bengt Ahlfors, Ragnar Arvedson, Elsie Andreen, Julia Bergby, Carl Billquist, Ingrid Borthen, Solveig Ervalla, Maria Grefve, Ulla Hakonson, John Melander, Signe Stenvall, Ragnar Falck, Signe Stromberger, Olle Wikberg, Per Sjoval, Margareta Krook, Jurgen Lindstrom, Birger Malmsten, Carl Reinholm, John Melin Pettersson, Georg Arling, Britta Obeng, Alf Gulliand.
Director: Ingmar Bergman
Writer: Strindberg
50 Mins., Thurs., 9:05 p.m.
Swedish TV, from Gothenburg

"The Dreamplay," a panoramic view of human life as seen through Strindberg's pessimistic nature and Bergmans own symbolism is a giant labirynt of scenic sketches. It is believed to be the best of Strindberg plays and the plans to present it on tv date from the first days of the Swedish Television, but it was Ingmar Bergman who succeeded.

Strindberg wrote the play in 1901. It is a blend of dreams and reality and is a play loaded with symbolism, irony and pessimism. It relates stories of loves that turn into hate, of a world where every second of short happiness is paid with hours of deep misery, in every happy gathering there is an unlucky being, on the bottom of the sea there is a sunken ship with a lifeboat which saved no life, silence screams in a storm, but the world is deaf and the only definite thing and result of all undertakings are old age, sickness and death.

In this complicated world of August Strindberg, the Swedish literary giant who was so radical that he was never awarded the Nobel Prize, Ingmar Bergman was a sure and infallible guide. His tv presentation was a first rate achievement. It was clear, easy to understand, dramatic and it had force. The program was a bit too long, but it had appeal even for the broad audience.

This was a show of such a quality and strength that it may well be rated as the biggest event of the year in the Nordic area. This Strindberg play which once meant inspiration to Shaw, Brecht, Barbet, Jeneaux and others was brought to life again by Ingmar Bergman for the tv audiences.

SUPPOSING
With David Jacobs, Annie Ross, Tandem Sisters, Trio Vital, Precamos Sax, Leo Beverlys, Bixley Gordon, Hippodrome Singers and Dancers, Peter Knight Orch.
Director: Bill Turner
60 Mins., Wed., 9:05 p.m.
AR-TV, from London

This is the return for another season of AR-TV's international circus-type show the only change from last year being the addition of David Jacobs — the UK's top deejay—as emcee. Seeing that all he did was a deadpan job of introducing each act it can only be presumed that the programmers thought his name might pull in some of the teenagers who are normally out of touch with the kind of act this show presents.

Without exception the acts were top quality talent with possibly the Spanish Trio Vital's musical acrobatics a short nose out in front and with jazz singer Annie Ross the only disappointment. Her vocal gymnastics were a great deal less than has come to be expected from her, or indeed, than she is capable of. But the whole, as a show, suffered from dissipated talents.

Bill Turner's cameras did all the wrong things at the wrong times so that when foot juggler Dieter Owsnoe succeeded in creating an illusion of a dancer so strongly that for a moment it seemed that the tv screen had tipped right over, Turner had his camera smash this by closing in to accent his feet robbed of background. Prasanna Rao's hand shadow act — which needed closeup technique to assist the illusion—was given the opposite so that the performer's "trade secrets" were exposed. Even the dance troupe was photographed from all the angles which created confusion patterns.

This show subscribed to the fallacy that to make a good program all that is necessary is to stand back and photograph a string of acts. Pila.

IT'S A SQUARE WORLD
With Michael Bentine, Frank Thornton, Leon Thau, Lee Lowe, Joe Gibbons, Louis Mansi, Jennifer Bennett, John Bluthal
Producer: John Street
Director: Joe McGrath
Writers: Michael Bentine, John Law
25 Mins., Fri., 9:40 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

As prompted by Vanserv in this space, this show, which was the official BBC-TV entry for the Montreux tv fest, copped an honorable mention, although the international press jury put it ahead of the field. Now it has returned for a further series of eight, and this initialler was a fair sample of its forte, which is visual enterprise based on cartoon and silent-movie techniques. It also showed up its besetting fault, which is to mistake novelty for wit.

As usual, its strongest flair was for the opposite gag—of which a first-rate example was a couple of ships-in-bottles opening fire on each other and one of them sinking. Also, cameraman Michael Bentine's deadpan newscaster, with a flood of absurd headlines, clicked as before.

But the more extended routines tended to outstay their welcome. An interview with a prompter-operator in the bowels of the BBC was packed with many technical gimmicks, but the verbal side languished. This was also the case with the disastrous voyage of a ferry-boat, which met all the hazards of fog and hurricane usually encountered in Hollywood sea epics. The bid to satirize these conventions was diluted with farce, and the mixture was uneasy, resulting in only sporadic yocks.

But it remains true that, when its ideas register, "It's a Square World" is a pioneering fun-creaser. Its regular team of gaggsters is decent, and Bentine provides a firm centrest of utter normality. Joe McGrath directed John Street's production with the requisite agility. Otis.

CORRIGAN BLAKE
With John Turner, Paul Donoman, Robert Hill, Roger Avon, E. A. Nolan, Geraldine Newman, Tutte Lemkow
Producer: Bloye Jones
Writer: Alun Owen
30 Mins., Wed., 9:05 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

It's modish to build series around characters who have clicked in single plays, and the fashion is followed in this six-part sheln of comedy adventures involving a Cockney layabout and his aristocratic pal. Author Alun Owen first created Corrigan Blake in an amusing drama a year ago, and used him again for his first stab at a situation series. Owen's justified reputation as a small-screen writer promised much. Disappointment at this opener was consequently great.

Blake (John Turner) and Wally (Paul Donoman) were sent to jail for breaking into a Middle-Eastern harem. Blake's chief trait being an unabashed hankering after the gals. Their plight was plotted in flashback, which showed them being surprised by the sheik in dalliance with his dames. Blake's attempt to win his freedom by making up to a female cop (they were caught by her fiance), and their eventual repatr...iation to Britain, arm-in-arm with a couple of air hostesses.

This was potently glib and conveyor-belt stuff, apart from the cop-and-Corrigan incident, which raised deft yocks, the humor was forced and contrived. The characters of the twosome, also, were unconvincing, and played by John Turner and Paul Donoman at an artificially farcical tempo which destroyed much of Owen's dialog, which might have had some fully-flavored moments otherwise. James MacTaggart's production, in fact, mistook speed for pep, and the result was a ride on a roller-coaster, leaving no time to savor the people or the scenery.

Foreign TV Followup

Sunday Night at the Palladium

The American comedy duo, Phil Ford & Mimi Hines, who are here for a stinry stint, were the topliners of this "Sunday Night at the Palladium" segment from Associated TeleVision, and their brand of sophistication would have registered more strongly in a less raucous locale. Although producer Albert Locke presented them in showcase, much of the more intention was lost. It was this kind of act that attracted the knowing titter rather than the with-it guffaw. The vastly extroverted antics of Mimi Hines was cagerly introduced in a monologg about an alcoholic mouse, complete with sniffing and nibbling actions, and Miss Hines, smoothly led by Ford, also had her moments as a forlorn Japanese maiden. Reminiscent of a more restrained Martha Raye, she did enough to prove that she'd be more than welcome at the liqueur stage of the evening.

Susan Maughan, a curvaceous chart-maker, made her first appearance on the show, the reason being "Bobby's Girl," which served as her greeting. She followed with her latest waning, "She's New to You," which seemed to demand a male performer to make the lyric meaningful, and closed with a hoote —"Wild About Harry." A lively girl and a looker, Miss Maughan somewhat impaired her import with a funny robe and eyes that kept rolling all round the place.

Kenny Ball's Jazzmen trotted out a brassy brad sequence, of which their scrap of "Bluebird Rumble" was the best. Unfortunately, Ball deserted his trumpet, which he wields with some authority, for vocals, and his voice, although it has brought the group disk success, is a mighty rough-and-ready instrument, a kind of mid-Atlantic version of Jack Teagarden on an off day.

The show was lumbered by a French act, the Ballwards, who purveyed slick and exciting acrobatics on skates. Norman Vaughan amused with more enthusiasm than substance, and might browse a tinge of self satisfaction that has crept into his personality. Jack Parnell's band barked with zest, and a nicely exotic dance routine was dreamed up by Pamela Davis.

Drama 63

Giles Cooper, whose "The Freewheelers" made a fairly satisfactory segment of Associated Tele-Vision's "Drama 63" sheln, has a fine flair for investing a superficially normal situation with sinister undertones. His talent for tension has been sharpened by scripting the "Maigret" tv series.

Cooper found a fruitful situation here. A group of young students had developed a game in which they purloined cars and drove in pairs to some out-of-town spot, stealing another for the return journey. It was a mere prank, justified to themselves as a means of making the squares independent of their possessions for a while.

On one of their jaunts, they picked up Sid (Peter Birrel) who learned about their capers and decided to organize it for his own criminal purposes. Instead of doing it for kicks, they did it for money. But Jeremy, the gang's leader, rebelled and started questioning the enterprise. And this is where Cooper's script, which it had been intriguing and alertly observant, was undernourished. Jeremy's motivation was slightly obscure, and his eventual betrayal of Sid, by tipping off the cops about one of his escapades brought him neither the sympathy of his pals or that of the audience. Upshot was a theme that had more promise than fulfillment.

Dennis Vance wrestled a crisp production, and the team of young thesps were able, although their submission to Sid was difficult to swallow. Vance tried an opening

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Du Pont Show Of The Week

"The Legend Of Lylah Clare," the "Du Pont Show Of The Week" offering on NBC-TV last Sunday (19), was notable for its corn, melodramatics and sheer absurdity. The brewers dramatics of Alfred Drake as a Hollywood director, and the thrashing of Tuesday Weld as a young actress possessed by an evil spirit, had so much histrionic horseplay that much of the hour was laughable.

Robert Thom's script attempted to put the legendary tale of the dybbuk into show biz terms, but his concept was a stinker from start to finish. Even the dialog name-dropping of such "real" people as Elizabeth Taylor, Kim Novak, etc., was of no help in making the tale more believable or in giving it a behind-the-scenes flavor.

Several stalwart performers, Johnny Maynor, Sorrel Brooke and Michael Tolan, tried to pull it out of its hokey rut, but even with the veteran directorial hand of Franklin Schaffner, it was a hopeless attempt. Gros.

The Bob Hope Show

Bob Hope's final show of the season for NBC-TV last Wednesday (15) was an uneven effort that lagged midway in a lengthy segment with golf pro Arnold Palmer and in general was overladen with plugs for Hope's new book, "I Owe Russia $1,200" and the film "Call Me Bwana." The strongest element was Hope's topical warmup monolog.

His targets were the waning tv season, Khrushchev's promised retirement and the Kennedys. Example: "It's spring in Washington. The cherry blossoms are in bloom and so are the Kennedys." His gags on the burgeoning Presidential family leaned a bit to the racy side, but their effectiveness was that they were never quite in bad taste. Hope's delivery was sharp despite evidence in his face of tiredness.

A skit with Fred MacMurray had the vet actor playing a robot from Mars who's mistaken by Hope for the newly hired butler of his fiancee. It led to some pleasant nonsense and yielded a few crisp lines about love among the mechanical men. Patti Page, who offered a pair of songs early, took part in a later skit on beauty in Bwanga, the basic gag of which was that spiss were hidden everywhere. Miss Page looked good and for the most part managed her role well, although she was weak with the Bwahi dialect department.

The needling session with Palmer verged on the embarrassing because the golfer was unable either to face the camera or sound spontaneous. He delivered some first-rate material in the manner of bullfighters who do the Gillette and Vitalis commercials. The routine was helped somewhat but cutting from clips of their scenes together in "Bwana," but unfortunately not enough. Les.

The Open Mind

As a topic for public discussion, drama criticism has the semblance of a natural, and it usually turns out to be a booby trap. Practically everybody has an opinion or attitude on the subject, increasing in vehemence inversely with knowledge of the matter. Most of the views about criticism are essentially unrealistic.

What was apparently intended to be a timely debate on the subject was presented last Sunday afternoon (19) on "The Open Mind" stanza on NBC, with a panel including Broadway producer David Merrick, playwright Lillian Hellman, N.Y. Herald Tribune critic Walter Kerr and N.Y. Post critic Richard Watts Jr. As usual, Eric Goldman was an effective moderator.

For a Broadway theatre buff, it may have been fascinating stuff, although hardly the angry verbal battle royal sensationalists may have anticipated and might have enjoyed. The discussion shed practically no new light on a terribly threadbare topic, however, and for the theatrically undedicated public it must have seemed an hour of ho-hum.

Kerr dominated the proceedings, as he generally does in panel palaver about the theatre. He's articulate, intelligent, penetrating, pointed, and knows what he's talking about. Merrick directed most of his statements and comments to Kerr, mostly stressing the thesis that the Trib reviewer is "too tough" and, like other reviewers, has an obligation to "help" the no-longer-fabulous invalid stage.

Miss Hellman tended to dwell on the thesis that there should be a "higher standard" of criticism, though she failed to clarify precisely what she meant by that plaint. She did say specifically that she would fever having plays covered by "reporters" rather than critics, but then indicated she considers most reviews too lenient. She also teased in the familiar suggestion that critics should have more time to write their notices. Watts entered the discussion only a few times.

In general, Merrick and Miss Hellman revealed that they share the widely held trade attitude that the function of criticism is to promote the theatre, except that Miss Hellman's special slant appeared to be that she'd like the reviews of her plays to "tell" her something, possibly what's technically wrong and how the error might have been avoided or could be corrected.

The playwright made the valid and familiar point that critics know very little about music, but review musicals, and know nothing whatever about direction or which creative craftsman is responsible for what in a show. She also indicated that she has no interest in musicals and not much more in comedies, and seemed to have a feeling of resentment at critical enthusiasm and public preference for such frivolous entertainment.

The talk went on and on for an hour, possibly increasing public interest in the theatre in general and/or criticism in particular, but it revealed little or nothing new or enlightening, nor even very interesting. Hobe.

Jackie Gleason Show

Jackie Gleason has been digging up some interesting entertainment on his CBS-TVer. On Saturday's (18) competition, Jack Pearl and his straightman of yore, Cliff Hall, revived a nostalgic era of radio entertainment when Pearl's catchline, "Vass you dere, Sharlie?" convulsed the public. Pearl is still a highly skilled comic and Hall is an excellent foil. The timing evident in their outing could serve as a lesson to many of today's performers. Most of their material held up and provided legitimate laugh sessions.

Other major guest was Phil Foster, who spoke in Brooklynese. His ramblings on a variety of subjects was a loathing matter.

Gleason balances these vets with newcomers. Bobbi Shields was given a brief time in which to make good with his impressions and fulfilled his function. Jackie Duffhannon allotted two tunes, indicated promise and need of further experience. She's a looker and, in time, seems a good bet for cabs.

Gleason's staple 'in, of course, Frank Fontaine, whose revival on this show has made him a major entity on the personal appearance circuits and he worked with his usual competence. The June Taylor Dancers and the Sammy Spear Orch were good production elements. Jose.

As Caesar Sees It

Sid Caesar's half hour opus on ABC-TV last Tuesday (14) had some choice moments, but was hardly the work of video art that an all-contemning show purports to be. It isn't 100% pants anyway when much of the communication depends on simple lip-reading or on dialog cards per the old silent films. But the pretentions aside, Caesar's was a satisfactory comedy offering that ran his customary gamut from the inspired yuck to the overworked and strained for slight gag.

It opened with a short skit of the star and Jane Connell in a violin and piano recital. Using sound effects, it involved a lot of familiar slapstick business such as Caesar stabbing himself with the string bow accidentally stepping on his fiddle, vying with his accompanist for the fore and dodging spitballs. Nevertheless, he and

INTERNATIONAL HOUR: AMERICAN JAZZ
With Willis Conover, host; Count Basie, Lurlean Hunter, Teddy Wilson, Stan Getz, Jack Teagarden, Carmen McRae, Muddy Waters, Lambert, Hendricks & Bavan, Gary McFarland, others.
Exec. Producer: Charles Hinds Jr.
Producer: Robert Lisle
Director: Allen Schwartz
60 Mins., Mon., 9 p.m.
KOLLER'S KOLLEGE
WBBM-TV, Chicago (tape)

Should traditional jazz someday enjoy another big vogue in the U.S., this season's "International Hour" entry would serve as the perfect prototype for a network series. As for its immediate use in the CBS-owned stations' foreign exchange plan, it will advertise well both for television technique in this country and for a cultural form that was forged in America by the Negro and remains one of our proudest exports.

A sampler of three jazz eras which includes such artists as Jack Teagarden, Teddy Wilson, Carmen McRae and the Count Basie orch —not to slight the others—can hardly misfire. And it's entirely to the credit of the WBBM-TV talents involved in the production that they did not lose their heads by over-producing.

The performers were taped on-stage at the Opera House to a nearly full house of jazz buffs who paid for the seats in what was to double as a fund-raising concert for the Chicago Symphony. Ken Poste fashioned sets and props that plotted visual interest without distracting. A crystal chandelier for Miss McRae's turn, for instance, was somehow just the right touch, as was a sartorially New Orleans barbaree for Teagarden's. Director Al Schwartz composed interesting shots and beat the camera angles changing without calling attention to himself. It was in all respects a tasteful job.

If there was a quarrel with any aspect, it was in the selection of Stan Getz to emcee the telecast. Being more cerebral in his musicianship than most of the others taking part, and decidedly in the "far out" category where jaz folks are concerned, he was hardly the emceeing act. It was as much a disservice to Getz, who deserved to be set off better with his artful version of the "C Jam Blues," as to the show itself. Except for that, however, the show was nicely paced and varied, with justice done to all considering the time limitations.

The Teddy Wilson Trio, dating back to the Benny Goodman swing era, issued three choice numbers featuring Wilson's smooth pianistics in the main, although the last drew attention to the showmanly drumbeatings of Jo Jones, a good jazz name in his own right. Lurlean Hunter followed with a classy airing of "I Left My Heart In San Francisco," styled in an unusually slow tempo; and blues singer Muddy Waters gave out "I Got My Mojo Working" for contrast against a harmonica-fronted r&b unit.

Teagarden offered one of his vocal classics, "Basin Street," in that effortless style of his and followed with a dixieland instrumental on "Lover." Miss McRae etched a pair of songs; the team of Lambert, Hendricks & Bavan contributed rousing vocal of "Avenue C"; and Count Basie wrapped it up with three beautifully realized selections.

Willis Conover was an amiable host who clearly knew his onions but, happily, avoided making any evolutionary educational remarks. He also did the Miller blurbs, which were uncommonly good. Les.

BIRMINGHAM REPORT
With Bud Dancey, others
Executive Producer: Patrick Trese
Producer-Director: Don Ervotta
30 Mins., Mon., 9:30 p.m.
KYW-TV, Cleveland

With the Birmingham crisis getting top news attention, KYW-tv sent a team including Bud Dancey, news editor Tom Beltz, cameraman, and Mark Landsman, senior news editor, to the Alabama capital for a first hand report.

It made a half-hour of timely, eye-opening film, with a special highlight the on-the-spot Beltz coverage of Negroes rehearsing for picket duty and luncheon and restaurant counter activity in segregated areas. Dancey's interviews with city leaders, both Negro and white, were well done and educational. Mark.

THE THEATRE OF TOMORROW
With Elia Kazan, narrator; Marlon Brando, Margaret Leighton, Jason Robards, Jr., Robert Whitehead, Jo Mielziner, Arthur Miller, S. N. Behrman
Producer: Mary V. Ahern
Director: Michael Bibble
60 Mins.; Sun., 7 p.m.
ABC-TV (film)

The merits and faults of a trailer were in evidence in the hourlong documentary dealing with the Lincoln Repertory Company, slated to begin operations at the Vivian Beaumont Theatre in N. Y.'s Lincoln Center in 1965.

Titled "The Theatre of Tomorrow," it was more of a promotion piece than an absorbing journey into the magical world of the theatre. It had the participation of big names who lent little cameos, some frustratingly short, others innocuous. Produced by Robert Saudek Associates, in association with ABC-TV, the documentary nevertheless, stimulated interest in the projected Lincoln Center theatre.

Producer-director Elia Kazan played a prominent role in the film, both before the cameras and as narrator. He was natural and effective. One of the highlights was a visit with playwrights Arthur Miller and S. N. Behrman. Talks about plays are hardly as exciting as the plays, themselves.

Marlon Brando and Margaret Leighton illustrated the need of a repertory company. Jo Mielziner, who is collaborating with Eero Saarinen Associates on the design of the new playhouse, talked the theatre's new stage and its audiences. Robert Whitehead, one of the producer-directors of the Lincoln unit, joined Kazan and others in talking about the project.

Jason Robards, Jr., did a short monologue from Miller's new play "After the Fall." There was some very interesting footage devoted to the vocal and dancing exercises of the Lincoln acting group. Some of the struggles of acting and the high cost of theatre going were explored.

To sum up, it was a case of bits and pieces that held promise of an exciting theatrical venture. Hero.

CHICAGO EMMY AWARDS BANQUET
With Norm Barry, host; Jack Brickhouse, Ray Rayner, the J's With Jamie, Terry Bennett, Jim Stewart, Joseph Gallicchio Orch, others
Producers: Barry Trigg, Dave Barnhiser
Director: Barnhiser
Writer: Trigg
Music: Robert C. Ragland
25 Mins., Mon. 9:30 p.m.
UNITED INSURANCE, UNITED BANK
WNBQ, Chicago (live, tape)

The video presentation of the local Emmy awards last week hinted that Chicago television may not completely have lost the old show biz flair. For perhaps the first time in the five year history of the event, this was a show worthy of the name—a smooth, diverting and even at times genuinely amusing offering that argued well for its own industry and showed off the resident talent colorfully.

It was WNBQ's turn to produce, and the creative team of Barry Trigg and Dave Barnhiser not only solved the problem of making the award handouts go swiftly yet with glamor, but also fashioned a number of polished entertainment sequences to interlard the presentations. While the original sketches and songs were not exactly novel in their devices, they were written with wit and were brought off smartly by the participating talent. Credit Trigg with some cunning lyrics and Barnhiser with deft comedic direction.

Performances by Ray Rayner, Jim Stewart and Terry Bennett in a skit on nail-biting at the awards banquet gave the lie to their typecasting on tv as kiddie performers. Rayner (who won one of the awards) even improved his case later with a sterling solo-song-and-dance on the good old days of tv. The vocal quartet known as The J's With Jamie whose credits include the Chevy, Schlitz and Rice Krispies jingles, among others) gave a first-rate airing to "A Lot of Livin' To Do," their presentation enhanced by artful staging and imaginative visual effects.

Filler stuff centred on all manner of on-camera harrassments, such as the prop phone ranging during a newscast or the weather apparatus going haywire. Les.

THE AMERICAN EXPERIENCE
With Richard Heffner, moderator
Producer: Arthur Barron
Director: Don Horan
120 Mins., Sun., 9 p.m.
WNEW-TV, N.Y.

On its debut last Sunday night (19), this show was a long night's journey into the early morning. Planned as a two-hour replacement for David Susskind's departed "Open End," the preem of "The American Experience" was expanded to a four-hour run-through of two versions of an exploration into the American mind and mood. A one-hour condensation of both shows would have served the subject and the viewer far more effectively.

The first two hours of this marathon telecast was a straightforward panel show moderated by Richard Heffner. This was a last-minute substitution for the originally announced 9 to 11 p.m. stanza comprising various segments, all touching upon the same theme. This version of the show was aired from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m. and if any viewers, besides the critics, stuck it through to the end, then add to the American character the qualities of patience, fortitude and morbidity.

If the topic for the evening was vast and vague, then so was the talk about it. The panelists of Part One were professors Charles Frankel and Louis M. Hacker, psychologist Allan Fromme, critic Dwight MacDonald, sociologist Ithiel De Sola Pool and Dr Leona Baumgarten. They were six authorities in search of an idea to chew over. Only at the end of their allotted couple of hours did the panelists begin to focus their viewpoints into some definable and arguable form. As moderator, Heffner tended to pitch the discussion on the most generalized level with his cautiously involuted rhetoric.

Part Two was a grab-bag with very few surprises. A discussion by Lester Markel, N.Y. Times Sunday editor; public opinion analyst Elmo Roper and de Sola Pool threshed aimlessly about the question of whether there was such an animal as the American mood and, if so, whether it was measurable. There was absolutely no common ground for any fruitful ideas to emerge. Even more aimless and inept was the so-called debate between novelist John Dos Passos and Professor Frankel, representing conservatism and liberalism respectively. Another long sequence had Sen. Eugene McCarthy (D-Minn.) trying to reconcile politics and morality in a philosophical colloquy with Heffner. There were probably some important propositions to be mined out of this verbiage.

Shortly before dawn, Archibald MacLeish wound up this four-hour cerebral workout with a recitation of his poem, "At The Lincoln Memorial." Next week another group of experts wrestle with the question of the American economy in a match limited, it is hoped, to the advertised two hours. Herm.

THE QUITTER
(A Portrait of a High School Dropout)
With John Palmer, Norman Luther Rawls, Judge William Woolfolk, Mrs. Jacqueline Van Landingham, O. L. Bonner
Producer-Narrator-Writer: John Palmer
Director: Roger Marx
Time, 30 Mins.
WSB-TV, Atlanta (film)

School dropouts in Atlanta are soaring. While others have attacked the problem—and it is a serious one—they have dealt in generalities.

WSB-TV staffer John Palmer used a different technique in this documentary. "The Quitter" dealt primarily with one individual, the story of a boy who joined 20,000 other young people in a not-so-exclusive club of teenagers who quit high school in one year.

The lad, 17-year-old Norman Luther Rawls, knew that he had made a mistake. Married and living with his parents, he agreed to participate in the program as a "lesson" to other youngsters.

Boy's father and mother also participated in the program. They told of their efforts to dissuade him from dropping out and sought to point out to him their own handicaps due to the lack of education.

After going into Norman's background, narrator Palmer took viewers on a trip to the Georgia Employment Office, where dropouts learned they were in a huge

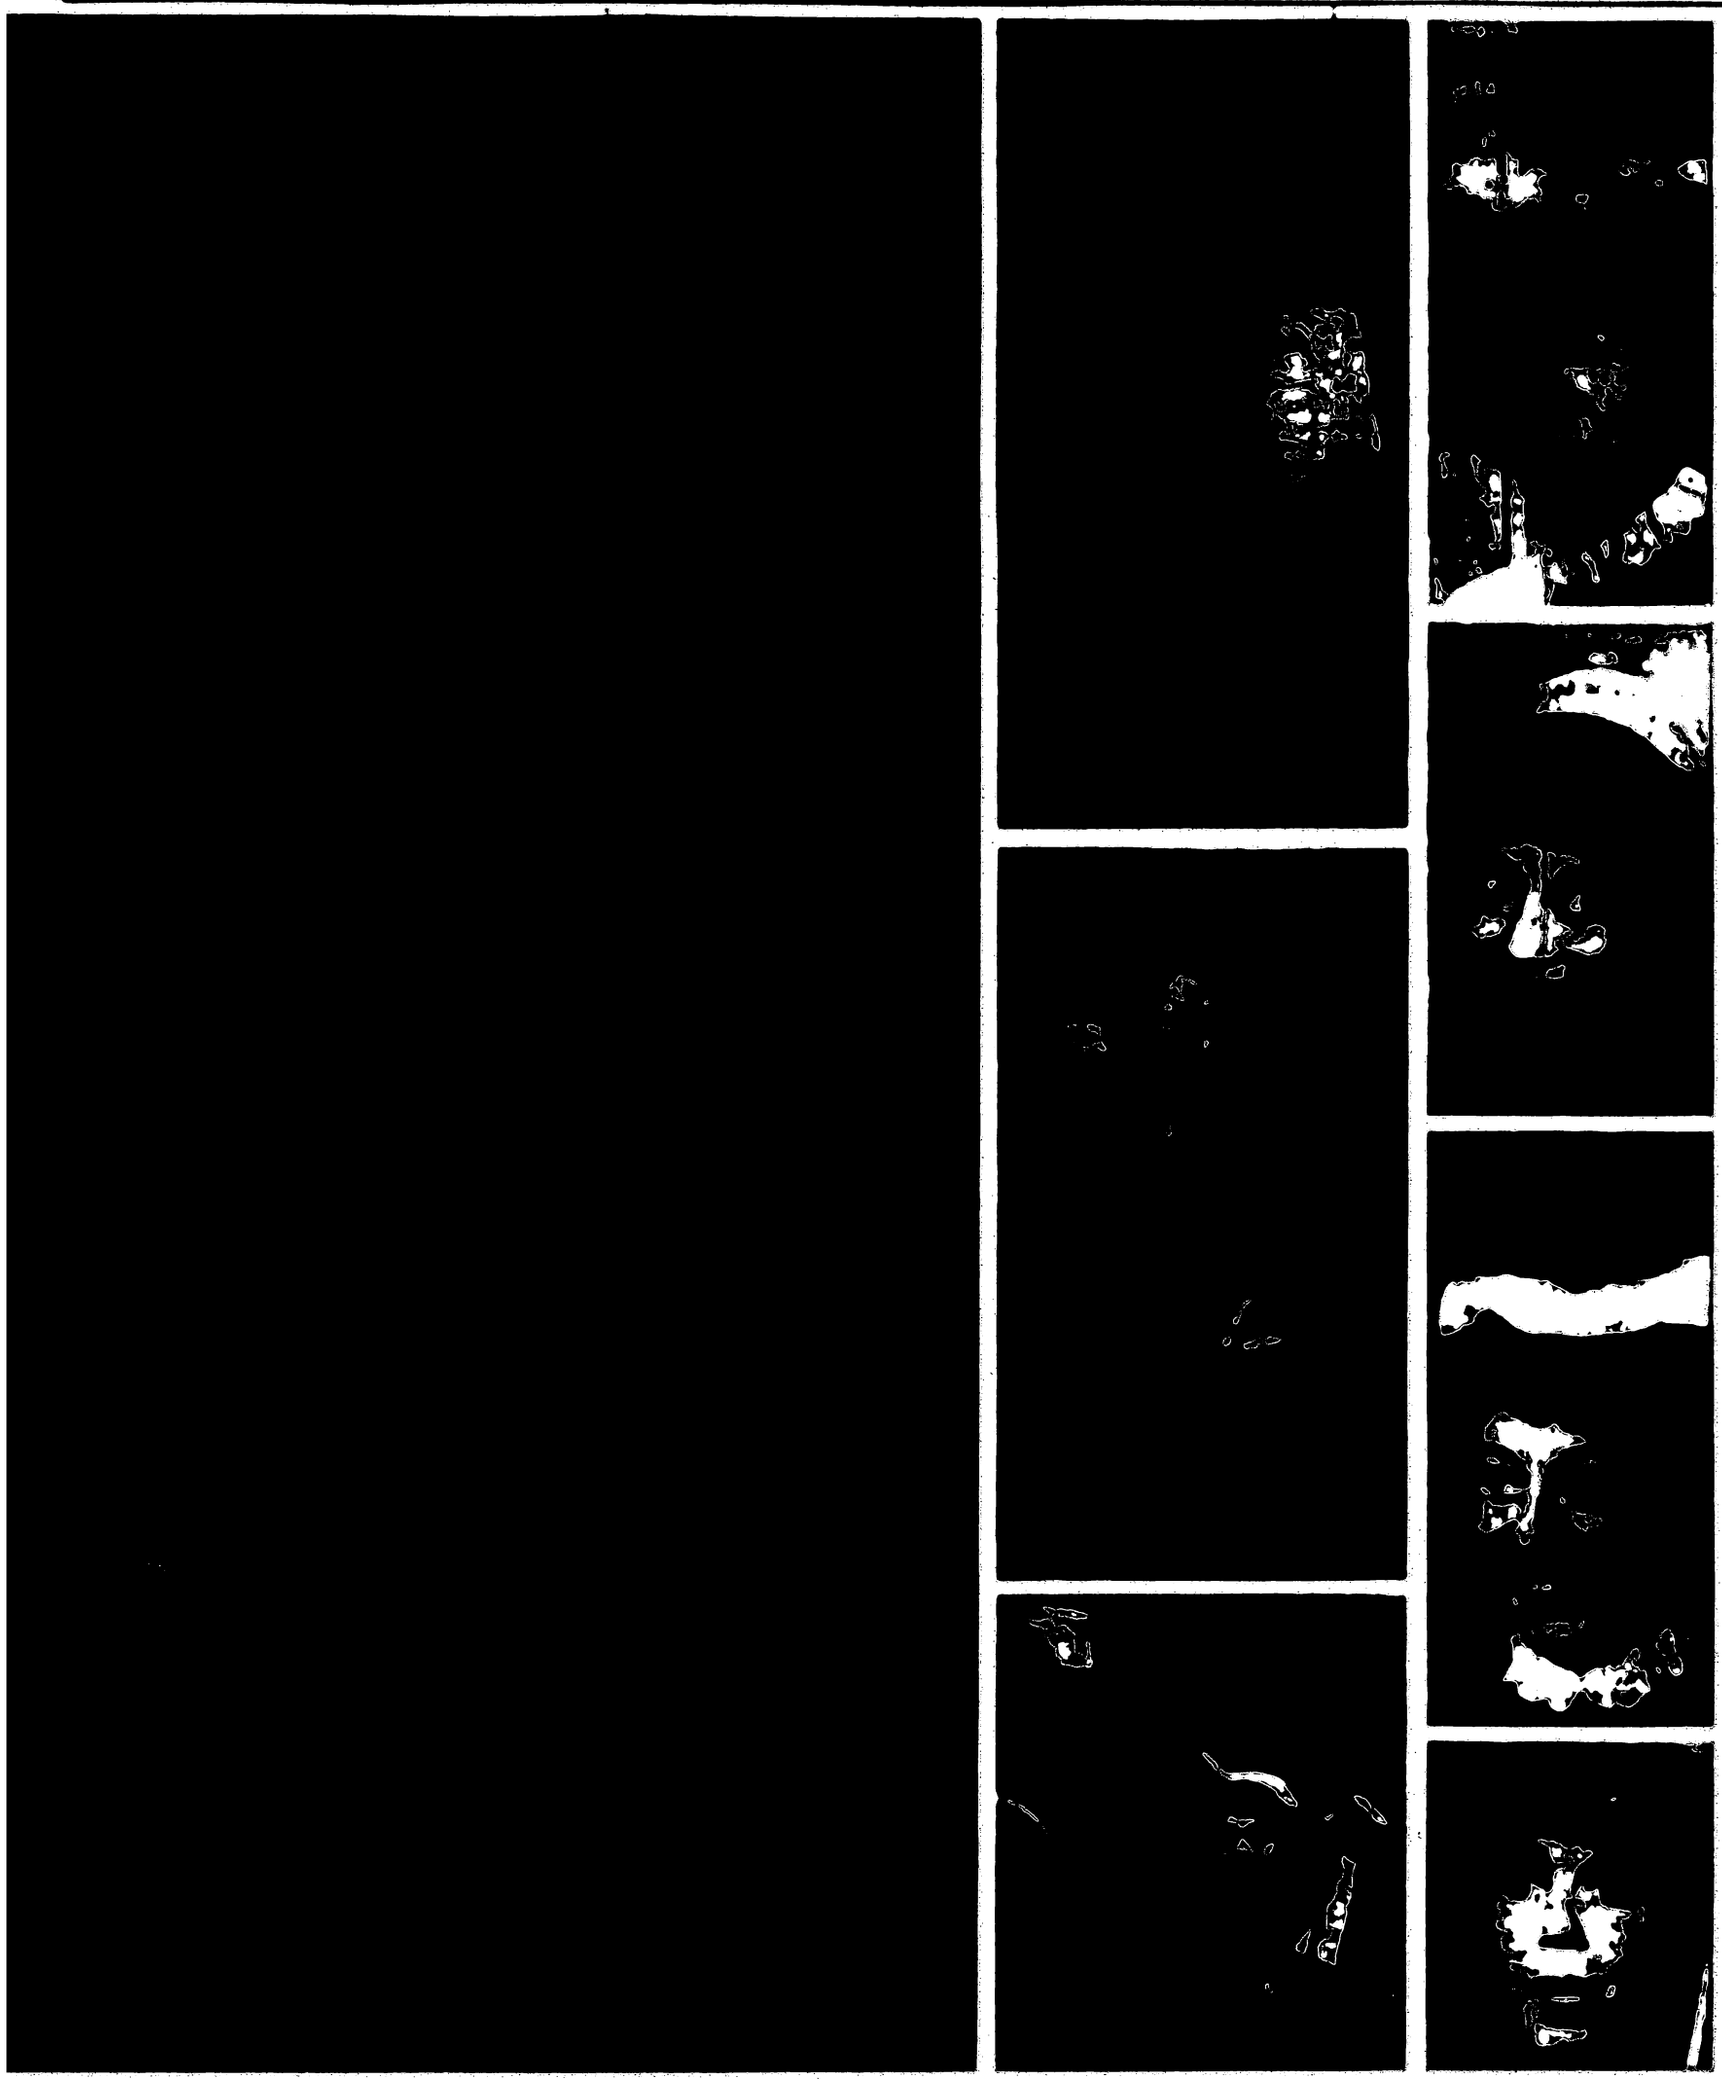
A Gal Named Grindl

The final "e" in the name "Grindl" was not lost in some mishap or dropped in the interests of numerology. Nope. The fact is that the name has always been spelled that way, and it's really just as un-fancy as the gal herself.

The gal herself, as you've probably heard by now, is actually Imogene Coca, whose "Grindl" series promises to be one of the comedy highlights of NBC-TV's versatile Fall agenda.

Even in a 1963-64 schedule boasting established favorites like "Du Pont Show of the Week" and "Bonanza," together with new entries like "Espionage" and "Mr. Novak," Miss Coca's return to the medium is a major event.

What makes it doubly welcome, though, is her choice of vehicle. For not since she and Sid Caesar were weaving their priceless comedy magic over five seasons of NBC's "Your Show of Shows" has the incomparable Imogene had so ideal a showcase for her protean talents.



Series creator David Swift (he also invented "Mr. Peepers") has cast her as a trouble-inviting girl-of-all-work who, through the undismayed efforts of a temporary-employment agency, finds herself in a different job each week.

All the positions—maid, bank-teller, baby-sitter and you-name-it—have one element in common ...complications. As a clad-in-white kitchen aide in a hospital, Grindl may find herself unintentionally whisked into the surgery room with the similarly-attired operating staff. As a newly-hired housemaid tidying up a basement, she may find her chores enlivened by the discovery of a fresh grave (with corpse to match).

Whatever the circumstances, it is always her good fortune to win out over adversity just before the final commercial. Instinctively realizing the inevitability of the happy ending, she never loses faith in her future. Indeed, as impersonated by the marvelous Miss Coca, Grindl is proof positive that life's a game well worth the candl.

Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

Looks Like Doyle, Dane, Bernbach's Gonna Steal 'Blurb Show' This Year — On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GEORLEY

Doyle, Dane, Bernbach, always a hot agency when awards for print advertising are handed out, is going to get a good share of prize natters for its tv blurbs at Friday's (24) fourth annual American TV Commercials Festival at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Along with Young & Rubicam, DDB is for the first time a top rated agency this year, and will get a number of hosts among the 36 product categories. Actually, a half-dozen or so hosts, or runners-ups, and also citation among the 15 special awards for craftsmanship, production values etc.

But, as the Madison Av. heart beats, probably the Y&R story is the reading one. Agency is due to receive the host-campaign award in the product categories, and for no other effort than Goodyear tire. That's the big account that Y&R recaptured last year after several other shops had been invited to pitch.

Young & Rubicam, in fact, snaps back in the Fest competition, having been the host shop four years ago during the first competition. Last year BBDO was the big winner. Year before it was Benton & Bowles.

Grey is also strongly rapped this year. Among advertisers, Procter & Gamble, Bristol-Myers, Mennen do well. And Grey will get special recognition for its pulsarvice anti-VD campaign.

Ted Bates, which entered the contest the first year, is in with more blurbs than ever this year, and will bring off a couple of winners.

In a switch that should really not come as too much of a surprise, Interpublic's McCann-Marschalk figures in the awards while the same Corporation's big McCann-Erickson is out of the running.

Among the production companies, recognition will go as never before to some of the smaller shops—Pelican (now strong in live action as well as animation), Tele-Vision, VPI and others. As usual, Elliot, Unger & Elliot, RFO and other big companies are strong.

This was the year of the "quick cut" in tv commercials, as the title of this year's film—again produced by Bill VanPraag for the Film Producers Assn. and Gordon Webber of Benton & Bowles, is titled, "Quick Cuts of '68."

Last year's vintage hassle, which saw the tape companies pulling out at the last minute over the way their blurbs were to be run off the Fest, has been resolved. They are back in with a workshop in the morning (demonstrating portable and other new equipment) and 16 tape blurbs made it to the finals with three winning.

This year there were a record 1,267 entries (160 more than last year; and this was the year that Fest director Wallace Ross got the industry support he needed to keep the show going. On the Festival board are such names as Lee Bernstein, Charles Brower, George Gribbin, David Mahoney, Edwin Rhei and Harry Schroeder. This year, after four years, Jack Cunningham steps down as chairman and Bart Cummings of Compton takes over.

It took eight weeks to judge the entries in five cities, New York, Chicago, Toronto, Dallas and Los Angeles. There will be followup award presentations in Chicago and Toronto handled by Ross. Dallas and LA ad clubs will handle presentations in their cities.

Like Oscar, Emmy and Grammy, the Festival's award statuette now has a handle—Clio. Not short for Cleopatra, but one of the nine muses, Clio was the winner in a Festival contest to name the award submitted by Dudley Reuve, former agency man now a professor of speech at the University of Omaha.

Curtis' Riddled Biddle

Curtis Publishing, which recently fired virtually the top half of the masthead in an editorial shakeout of the Ladies Home Journal, has now issued a publicity release boasting of a 20% upurt in ad lineage over the last few months.

LHJ editor Curtis Anderson (and several top editorial hands) were booted in the face of the boom as Clay Blair Jr., former Time-Liter was made editorial director of all Curtis books. Blair was launched in what Curtis staffers call the "old new" Saturday Evening Post, the initial revamp that was a total bust. Anderson, who came in at 39 years of age under the old LHJ regime, reportedly shaped a newsstand - sales slump with his first issue in the spring of '62, issue preceding his hiked mark to 1,200,000 sales. His scope built up to 1,700,000 newsstand copies.

Blair and Anderson are only a couple of the youngbloods involved in the current Curtis in-and-out complex, but as some close observers see it, the overall picture represents a turnabout in longstanding Curtis policy. Editors, they say, used to really control their magazines while today the shots at Curtis are being called by the business and sales side.

'Cease & Desist' On Shaving Ads

Washington, May 21.

The Federal Trade Commission has issued its revised final order nopping sandpaper shaving soap commercials on tv.

The order is directed at Colgate-Palmolive and its ad agency, Ted Bates.

A modification and clarification of the commission's Feb. 16 order, the new directive bars Colgate and Bates from:

"Unfairly and deceptively advertising any product by presenting a test, experiment or demonstration that is represented to be actual proof of a claim made for the product, and is not in fact a genuine test, experiment or demonstration being conducted as represented and does not constitute actual proof of the claim because of undisclosed use and substitution of a mock-up or prop; and falsely representing the moisturizing properties, other qualities or merits of any shaving cream as an aid to shaving."

Bates was amended its point that it didn't know a mock-up was used or that the qualities of the cream were misrepresented.

What raised FTC hackles in January, 1965, was the tv commercial in which a piece of sandpaper, covered with shaving soap, was shaved clean. The commission claimed the piece of sandpaper was actually plexiglas with lasso used on it.

The commission's proposed order last February drew exceptions and suggested alterations from the principals. These were all waved aside in the final order which declared:

"The record shows not merely a representation of fact concerning a product offered for sale, but the pursuance of an unfair and illegal form of advertising, manifested by its repetition over a substantial period of time. An effective order must also be directed at the form of advertising (i.e. the practice or method of competition) found illegal."

Nat'l Ratings Get Caggie Ad Chief's Seal of Approval

Brown & Williamson veepee and ad chieftain John W. Burgard, who is chairman of the Assn. of National Advertiser's Broadcast Committee, this week gave the national tv ratings a seal of approval at ANA's New York spring meeting.

Outlining the position of ANA's Broadcast Committee (which recently, along with the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies set up subcommittees to probe the post-Oren Harris ratings hearing, and research atmosphere), Burgard declared, "The principal national television ratings now available are suitable for our purposes of buying time, and we have confidence in their relative usefulness so long as used for the purpose designed, that is, the measurement of a national audience."

The ad gent did admit, however, said, "We have some reservations about the validity of local television ratings and feel that in this area an accuracy equivalent to national television ratings would be desirable for buying purposes . . ."

The Broadcast committee does not feel, he said, that "formation of a tripartite group representing advertisers, agencies and broadcasters to audit rating services or supervise a cooperative service is desirable or feasible . . . Ratings are primarily the responsibility of the broadcasters, since they are interested in all phases of their operation."

He said the committee was in favor of the National Assn. of Broadcasters plan to set up standards for auditing the ratings, and ANA and 4A's jointly would help setting up standards "most useful to us as buyers of broadcast time."

He said the committee feels that the "foreseeable future (will) have adequate tv ratings at the local level as well as the national level," and that he did not agree with predictions that cost would make such ratings impractical. "Is it," he asked, "unreasonable for the television industry to spend 1% of its gross billing for adequate, projectable ratings at all levels? Those few broadcasters to whom I posed this question thought 1% too low. Yet this is a $6 billion business and 1% would provide $60,000,000 annually. Professional researchers assure me that this amount would more than pay for such a service."

Otherwise, in his talk on the future of tv and its problems, Burgard cited the continued problem of "triple spotting," since the spread of the network program break where show promos are interwoven between two blurbs, the "clutter" problem from multiple blurbs, promos, credits etc. revealed in the Broadcast Committee's monitoring study of several months ago (are separate beat; and come out in favor of "guaranteed circulation," with show costs based on audience size and quality.

NBC'S 'LONG TINTED SUMMER'

Goodson-Todman's Own Nielsen

Mid-season figures show tv's giant quiz shop Goodson-Todman has accounted for 510 hours of network air for the period of Oct. '62 through April '63, putting G-T close behind NBC and CBS in actual show production and ahead of ABC by about three to one.

Via estimates supplied by NBC and CBS, an average of 138,481,000 viewers tuned in G-T shows per week, giving the packaging firm its biggest season for audience in 17 years. Company's shows are currently on network for a total of 17¼ hours a week.

In terms of audience, the most popular G-T show is "To Tell the Truth," drawing an estimated average of more than 31,000,000 viewers for one nighttime and five strip shows a week. "Password," also aired three hours a week, had an estimated weekly total of 28,000,000 for runner-up honors.

More popular on a single-show basis, however, was "I've Got a Secret," now a CBS property, with a weekly audience estimated at 22,700,000. "What's My Line," the longterm Sunday night show, pulled an estimated 20,200,000 viewers.

Newest G-T entry, "Match Game," which debuted on NBC Dec. 31, is almost up to the daytime "Password" in draw with an estimated 8,097,000 daily viewers, and, says the packager, the web will probably add a nighttime version next season.

Brit. ATV Comes Out of Kitchen Sink, Combs Its Hair in New Dramas

London, May 21.

Associated TeleVision is grinding top gear with its drama coverage this coming season, with another new chain shedded for tweed on June 3 involving the use of top sub-story writers. This one to be generically tabbed "Love Story," will embrace 14 one-hour segs written by different authors to fill the Monday night 8 p.m. slot due to be vacated next Monday (27) by ATV charter "The Plane Makers."

Star scribe obviously is Doris Lessing whom exec producer Stella Richman — ATV's senior script counsellor—has posted to adapt her own novel "The Habit of Loving." Directed by Dennis Vance and at the moment starring Eric Portman, this will go out on June 17, No. 3 in the list.

Opening hitter will be "Whitman Story" which Julian Bond has written and Anthony Kearey directed with Robin Bailey, Gwen Cherrell, Toni Gilpin and Terence Alexander starring. Only other so far published in with a transmission date is "Charlie is My Darling," written by ex-newspaper gossip scribe Tim Aspinall which Phil directs with Amanda Reiss, James Bolam, Justine Lord and Maurice Kaufmann starring.

Also among the inked authors is the husband-wife team of D'Arcy Hinsal and Ruth Park who won first prize in ATV's drama script contest in 1961 with a piece called

Bobbin Rejoining TA; Phil Barry Set

In a game of musical chairs on the DuPont-NBC special scene, Jacqueline Babbin has inked Directors Co. to rejoin Talent Assn.'s-Paramount. Replacing her at DC will be Philip Barry Jr., who returns to video drama production from a feature film project in England.

Miss Babbin, who produced several DuPont shows for Fielder Cook and Franklin Schaffner's Directors Co. last season, will work on the seven DuPont shows Sunshine's company is doing this year. She was with the latter as a producer before moving over to DC.

Barry, due to report Monday (27), has been in feature film production, having produced "Mating Game" (MGM) and "Sail a Crooked Ship" (Col.) since in the early 50's he produced such tv series as "Motorola Hour," "Center Stage," "Elgin Hour" and "Goodyear-Alcoa Playhouse."

Barry has been in London setting up independent production of "The Loved and Lost," a Fredric Raphael screenplay based on the Morley Callaghan novel. A "casting conflict" has called for postponement of the pix till May of '64, enabling Barry to take the offer from Directors Co., where he'll produce the seven DuPont's Cook and Schaffner are taking on.

CBS-TV Ups Levitt, Robinson in H'wood

Hollywood, May 21.

Paul Levitt, director of talent and daytime programs, and Peter Robinson, associate director of program development, CBS-TV, Hollywood, have been promoted to exec producers.

In another development, Devery Freeman, an exec producer in the program department, will leave his administrative post to devote full time to the development of a new, half-hour comedy series planned for the web's '64-'65 season. Levitt will take over Freeman's duties on the programming staff.

British TV 'Battle Of Lorna Doones' BBC Gets in First

London, May 21.

The production trio of British Lion, Granada TV and Television Wales and West has dropped its $1,680,000 plan to make 13 segs of a color chain based on the characters, situations and locales of the famed old novel "Lorna Doone." Reason given by execs from all three companies? The BBC got in first and has robbed them of the necessary impact.

Chiefly through producer Frank Launder, who was doing the chain for the combine, there has been quite a bit of haggling these past few weeks since it got out that BBC-TV was setting up a serialization of the novel in 11 26-minute segs for kidvee's peak slot on Sunday afternoons kicking off June 16. The corporation does not include itself in the longstanding arrangement picture producers have of announcing project plans at the earliest possible point and so avoiding this kind of overlap or direct cut 'n thrust opposition. Last time there was such a clash was over the two Oscar Wilde pictures three years ago.

Launder has forcefully pointed out to the BBC that his intentions were clearly indicated in January of 1962. It is only weeks ago that the BBC's plans came out, when its project was in the can. The BBC has replied that it is not its policy to announce its intentions until it "saw fit."

Nobody's talking actual coin but certainly scripting contracts will have to be honored as will prepping expenses. Location shooting was due to start in the western counties of Devon, Cornwall and Dorset mid June.

Said one British Lion exec: "Certainly several thousands (pounds) have gone down the drain with nothing to show for it," then adding: "Perhaps out of this might come some kind of plan for a closer liaison between the BBC and independent tv production companies. It would save a lot of people a lot of trouble."

GEARING-UP TO NON-STOP SKED

Next season, NBC-TV will run approximately as much color as it is doing this year. The amount 2,200 hours on the season in '63-'64, and, like this year, the nighttime color schedule will run for 52 weeks.

That they can show color for 52 consecutive weeks is important to NBC-TV executives. One of the big problems, until this season, was the inability to promise color during the summer months, which hurt both color promotion and program continuity.

Because programs are being produced so that they'll carry tint the year round, NBC-TV recently spent an estimated $1,000,000 over all previous color investments to modify tape machines so that color programs could be transmitted to the "B Network" without any loss of color fidelity. The "B Network," as NBC calls it, is the part of the station lineup that takes its programs delayed; the network tapes them, even the film programs, and transmits them for later airing. (The mid 30-week color season left a good deal to be desired by potential color set fans.)

Miscellaneous statistics about color are so much puffiness without the background: Fact that RCA has encouraged NBC to go round the clock, so to speak, with color programming is taken to mean that the parent manufacturing concern sees the day near at hand when the entire RCA color operation will pay off and pay off big.

It costs NBC considerably more money to tint up for 2,200 hours, and through the summer. It's no secret that NBC-TV is reimbursed only to the extent of color commercials and that it absorbs the cost of color program "incrementation."

The one mitigating, or even encouraging, economic factor in networking color is that its availability is known to have attracted to NBC-TV the heaviest automotive business. Detroit loves to colorize its cars.

Gen. David Sarnoff, with the patience of Job and the persistence of Peter, long ago took a look at color tv and decided to develop a big color line. NBC was utilized to carry color programming—simultaneously to promote color for the set manufacturing arm and as an extra dimension for tv viewers.

Two years ago, RCA is said to have turned black ink on its color set operation. But that per-annum profit came only after long, large investments in a minimal color market.

Over The Hump

Now they figure color is over the hump; other manufacturers have picked up on that, and RCA planners say that they have the jump and that the competition will only stimulate further color biz. RCA seems to have always worked on the principle of long-term losses leading to multi-million dollar gains. (Presently the principle is being applied to cyhernetics.)

Back to the tv network: NBC, it'd appear was only allowed to increase, even if slightly, the overall color programming for '63-'64 because RCA figures now is no time to let up. ABC-TV is going to carry three hours of color a week next season, which about an hour-and-a-half more than now. And while CBS has not relaxed its position too much against color programming, it is felt that there has been some relaxation; that web, which is not particularly interested in helping RCA to make a profit while losing money in the process, is nonetheless aware of a desire for color by some of its affiliates.

word for color programs around RCA was "2,000 hours a year." It would appear the manufacturer was interested primarily in the quantity of color shows. Lots of the color was live, not necessed of the stuff lending itself to proper incrementation. More is on film

FCC's Proposed Rules Imposing Com'l Time Limits for TV-Radio

Collins Appeal to Admen

Washington, May 21.

LeRoy Collins appealed to the 50 largest advertising agencies to support the NAB Radio and Television Codes.

In a letter to the agency presidents, NAB pres Collins warned that if broadcasting and advertising don't cooperate for better self-regulation, FCC will put Code limitations on commercial time into law.

NAB prexy Collins told the ad men "we are making steady progress in reshaping the Codes to reflect the broadcaster's integrity more realistically."

"Through these means," Collins went on, "we seek to decrease the pressure of government's concern with the conduct and quality of broadcast advertising."

Collins said those who claim NAB can't enforce its Codes "simply don't have the facts."

Collins Resents Industry Being Pushed Around'

Washington, May 21.

National Assn. of Broadcasters prexy LeRoy Collins said there's no excuse for the industry being exploited and pushed around by advertisers and rating services.

While disclaiming any attempt to make war on advertisers, Collins said broadcasters standing together can resist advertiser pressures and threats to take their business elsewhere.

Collins said broadcasters should not surrender to any outside group their decisions on program form and content, the public interest in advertising content, interruptions of programs for commercials and the validity of claims.

The responsibility for these decisions rests with broadcasters in the eyes of the public and the government, Collins went on, and they should exercise the authority for such decisions.

He told the South Dakota Broadcasters Assn. in Sioux Falls "the government has no proper place in this field and we demand in no uncertain terms that it stay out."

But to stem this and other government regulation, Collins warned the industry to turn promise into performance, especially in programming where there is "ample room for improvement."

The goals of NAB he went on are to make the individual broadcaster stronger and to keep him from being imposed upon from any quarter, including government.

NAB membership, Collins continued, doesn't offer insurance against federal encroachment or trading stamps which give added weight to an application for license renewal.

Chevy, Amer. Tobacco Coin Into Jimmy Dean

Jimmy Dean's show on ABC-TV has picked up commitments from Chevrolet and American Tobacco. Chevrolet has bought one full hour of the show in the fall to kick off its 1964 models, bankrolling the Dean stanza as a "special." American Tobacco has bought an alternate half-hour of the show.

Dean's stanza will be a general music-variety show with no particular country-western accent. Dean and ABC picked up the tab for several hundred agency execs and their families at Freedomland in the Bronx Saturday (18) where he was performing. It was a chance for the web to show off Dean's varied talents to potential clients.

Washington, May 21

In a 4-3 decision, FCC issued proposed rules which with few exceptions would place Code commercial time limits on radio and tv stations.

Commission noted its "great concern" with excessive commercialization and asked for comments on whether it should adopt the NAB's Code limits or an alternative set of limitations.

NAB's attempts to "accomplish a measure of self-regulation," FCC said, "obviously would be preferable . . . but have not met" with success."

FCC pointed out that "only" 30% of all radio stations and 70% of tv stations subscribe to NAB's Codes. NAB also "lacks effective sanctions to prevent abuses," FCC added.

Under proposed rules, radio stations would have to limit advertising to a maximum average of 14 minutes per hour on a weekly basis, to 18 minutes in any single hour or to five minutes in any 15-minute segment.

Radio sponsors are limited to seven minutes for an hour long program, four minutes and 15 seconds for a half-hour program and three minutes for a 15 minute program.

Television advertisers under Code limits are held to four minutes per 30 minute prime time broadcast.

In non prime time, tv commercials including station breaks can't run over six minutes per half-hour. No more than three announcements can be scheduled consecutively.

Stations, under Code rules, are allowed 70 seconds per half-hour for station breaks. Total station break time for every half hour is limited to one minute and 10 seconds.

Commission indicated it was willing to bend the Code requirements for daytimers and stations located in sparsely populated areas.

It specifically requested small market tv stations to comment on whether they need more than 70 seconds for station breaks.

Commission also asked if the limitations could be liberalized in the winter, certain days or during certain hours.

Stations requesting more liberal guidelines will have to back their claims with specific data on advertising requirements in their locale.

All stations were asked for comments on excluding time for paid political announcements.

Comments are due by July 1, 1963.

In favor of the rules were Chairman Newton Minow and Commissioners Robert E. Lee, E. William Henry and Kenneth Cox.

3-Web Parlay To Intro Emmys

In addition to the three hosts for Sunday's (26) Emmy telecast, NBC-TV has called in over 20 "presenters" from the three tv networks and Indie tv ranks.

The CBS award-givers are Irene Ryan, Buddy Ebsen, Jack Benny, Carol Burnett, E. G. Marshall, Frank Fontaine, Garry Moore, and Danny Thomas. Walter Cronkite, working out of Washington, will be one of the three hosts, he being with CBS News.

Fred MacMurray, Ephriam Zimballst Jr., Vince Edwards and Sid Caesar are the "presenters" supplied by ABC. From NBC, the list is Richard Chamberlain and Raymond Massey (presenting as a team), Lorne Greene, Hugh Downs and Chet Huntley. Richard Boone is also to do an award presentation, but since he's on CBS this year and NBC next, some of the people involved in the Emmy splash figure the better part of valor is to list him as an independent award-giver, along with Harry Belafonte, Art Carney, Peter Falk and Meredith Willson.

Morning's At Seven

Once upon a time, a gloomy sage wrote, "How can anything be good about a day that begins with getting up in the morning?"

But that was long before "Today" came along to stir up the juices of post-dawn America.

For millions and millions of viewers, mornings haven't been the same since. It'll be hard for many of them to believe—even in their fully-awake state—that this two-hour, five-day-a-week panorama of news, features and entertainment is approaching a 12th anniversary.

But it's so. Twelve years is an eternity, as television longevity is measured; but the nicest part is that the continuing "Today"—as an all-important element in NBC-TV's exciting, varied schedule for '63-'64—is as bright and as enterprising as it was a dozen years ago.

During this current season alone, it's brought viewers such assorted items as:

Down-to-earth interviews with cabinet members, Governors and Congressmen—as well as dozens of visiting statesmen from abroad;

The classical music of the Fine Arts Quartet and the Jazz of the Gramercy Five;

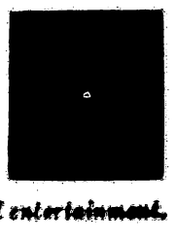
Informal meetings with show-business celebrities like Elia Kazan and Peter Ustinov;

Out-of-town originations ranging from New Orleans at Mardi Gras time to the Netherlands at tulip time;

Shoes-off chats with such authors as Erskine Caldwell, Eugene Burdick and James Jones.

With an extremely able cast that includes host Hugh Downs, Jack Lescoulie, Pat Fontaine and Frank Blair—all early-hour bloomers—"Today" is as alert to the latest in science and sports as it is to a behind-the-scenes story at the United Nations.

This sort of coverage is typical of "Today's" versatility. We need hardly add that it's also representative of our entire programming credo—a credo more evident than ever in the creativity and scope of NBC-TV's schedule for the Fall.



Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

Hottest Ghoul in Town

said prior to "Shock Theatre" the ratings were 10.9, and the "first rating book in which "Shock Theatre" appears, Jan. 27, there is an immediate increase to an average 16 rating, then a hike to 19.4 and in our latest Nielsen a 20.7; double our ratings in three rating periods."

As host for the shockers, Anderson let his imagination carry him along, applied a fake mustache and beard with a liberal use of rubber cement, put on a third eye, utilized lighting effects, echo chamber; and ad-libbed whenever and wherever he felt the time was opportune.

"Like crazy, man," the gimmick approach clicked. His third eye kept falling off, or when superimposed at the wrong time, brought howls and letters. When he casually remarked about a non-existent club called The Ghoulateers, he received more than 3,000 letters. Some fans, he says, have sent him "Ghoul Scout Cakes, a dead bat, etc." to go along with his fake bloody hand, Ghoulardi sweatshirts, cardboard skeletons and his favorite greeting "Stay Sick" to his audience. He also incorporates old film clips.

"I don't get it," said Anderson, "I can't figure it but I love it. I never imagined the show would catch on. Thanks, though, to Bob Soinski, the man who's furnished me so many wonderful old film clips, and Chuck Schodowski, whose camera work for offbeat effects are so effective, we're clicking."

To find a name for the program, Saltman invited those who attended the recent Boat Show to submit entries. Over 17,000 responded and Ghoulardo won, with Ghoulardi being the adaptation. Already, a "Ghoul-Aid" soft drink is being considered by a bottling company. Ghoulardi shirts, souvenirs, including a rubber skull that bounces, are being planned.

Recently, the Radio Television Council of Greater Cleveland in a poll of kiddies found Ghoulardi number two on their hit parade, and school officials are wondering why parents permit their youngster to stay up Friday night to watch the 11:20 p.m. horror show.

Commercially, it's SRO.

Anderson, onetime WSKI, went to Troy, then to WHK, then joined Tim Conway (Ensign Parker of McHale's Navy) at KYW and is now at WJW. He recently made a comedy album for Columbia Records with Conway with release scheduled for this fall.

ROBBINS' NEST
With Fred Robbins
4 Hrs.; Sunday, 8 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WNEW, N.Y.

Deejay Fred Robbins is back on the New York air and the new WNEW "Robbins' Nest" is much like the old WOV disk show with the addition of a number of taped talent interviews anent his syndicated "Assignment Hollywood" show.

Robbins' patter is slick and commercial, and so are the tasteful middle-range pop disks he plays, which match the station's format. Seg of the [illegible], Sunday night (19), caught included records by Lena Horne, Benny Goodman (with large playola for Basin Street East where Goodman is currently playing), Buddy Greco, George Shearing and the like.

Interviews with talent like Dick Haymes, Audrey Hepburn, Dion and Tony Curtis were done from various locations, or from a show biz locale where they are catching somebody else (as in the case of a couple of interviews from Basin Street East). Robbins, incidentally is this week off to Capri to tape interviews with Brigitte Bardot and Jack Palance on the set of the feature pic "Ghost at Noon."

Interviews were brief and for the most part interesting, and Robbins throughout the four hours smartly kept the emphasis on music.

Robt. Sarnoff

felt that Mrs. Saarinen's appearance on commercial tv "prompted . . . a real sense of curiosity among some viewers to know more about art of this significant period (a half century ago)."

Continuing, Sarnoff asked: "What more logical an area for educational television than to respond to such an awakened interest with a series dealing with the artistic explosion of the early part of this century?"

"This capacity of educational tv to probe deeply and to develop in sophisticated detail subjects of special interest does not diminish commercial tv's function of serving and stimulating mass audiences with cultural and informational programs. On the contrary, commercial broadcasting itself can benefit from these experiments which educational television has unlimited freedom to conduct."

"Another area of educational television's potential is its enormous value as a teaching resource. At a time when all education is burdened by shortages of teachers and facilities, when educational requirements are outstripping conventional methods of instruction, the use of educational television as an integrated part of the educational system is not only indicated—but is imperative."

"In order for educational stations to realize their full potential in these areas of specialized need," Sarnoff said, "they must establish a base of financial stability. No broadcasting enterprise can plan its future soundly if compelled to divert its creative resources into a search for miscellaneous and uncertain benefactions. The high enthusiasm quotient propelling educational television is not in itself enough to assure the future; it must be accompanied by sound fiscal planning on a longrange and continuing basis."

At one point in the speech before the educational convention here, Sarnoff, the commercial broadcaster, declared: "Educational television is by its very nature a specialized service, as compared with commercial broadcasting. But within its own framework and purpose, educational television can be as broad as the needs it fulfills." He warned however against even his own "generalization" because it did "not clarify the question of whether" the two tv forms "are properly competitive."

Both forms, he said, do compete, "each in its own way, in seeking to engage the viewer interest." He said that in this respect they are "interacting" and mutually "enriching."

Bevins Frowns On British Committee To Sift TV Gripes

London, May 21.

Reginald Bevins, the Postmaster General, has adamantly shrugged off insistent prods chiefly from opposition members of Parliament, to set up a sort of tv gripes committee to advise him, via viewers' opinions on the suitability of shows and the maintenance of general standards.

This, he had told proponents, is all the responsibility of the governors of the BBC and the chairman and members of Independent TV Authority.

In the House of Commons last week (16) he told one Labor member who suggested a Television Viewers' Council: "The two broadcasting authorities ascertain public reaction to their services in various ways. There is the expression of opinion through Parliament, through the press and through letters which the public write to the broadcasters and various advisory committees, and audience research which is to be expanded."

And he added that to appoint a council to advise on what was good and bad tv could not be accepted as it might lead to interference with the independence of both the BBC and the ITA.

The PMG used a question concerning the BBC's use of plays which in content were detrimental to recruiting for the armed services, as a means of pointing out that his own power to interfere with the output of either broadcasting organization was a reserve power.

Censorship in tv, he added, was a very dangerous game. He was sure the authorities concerned would use their good sense.

Brit. Comm'l TV's 60% April TAM

London, May 21.

The share of UK viewing racked up by commercial webs during April was the highest for seven months, 60%—a raise of 4% on the previous month, according to figures just released by TAM here. The figures relate to viewing in homes with a choice of channel right through each day. They are not restricted to viewing at specific times or of specific programs.

In among the regions biggest gap in figures between the indie channel and BBC-TV was in Central Scottish and Northeast regions where ITV took 66% leaving 39% to the BBC. In only two regions did the BBC take the larger share — Wales, West and North where the count was ITV 47%, BBC 52% and Southeast where ITV had 49% to the BBC's 51%. ITV also had big leads in North (62% to BBC's 38%) and the Midlands and Ulster where the figures were identical at ITV 60%, BBC 40%.

Others were as follows (ITV figure first): London — 57%-43%; South Wales and West—57%-43%; South—57%-43%; East Anglia—56%-44%; Border — 57%-43%; Northeast Scotland—59%-41%.

JOHN COURIC GETS A NEW NAB TITLE

Washington, May 20.

At first glance, it looks like National Assn. of Broadcasters is trying to stop "managing" its news.

John Couric, formerly "Manager" of Public Relations is now "Director" of Public Relations.

"His new title," NAB prexy Le Roy Collins said, "will reflect more accurately the scope of his responsibilities as head of one of the Assn's divisions."

While losing one "manager," NAB apparently gained two others.

Milton Magruder, formerly Asst. Manager of Public Relations, becomes Publications Manager. Arthur Stamler was upped from Audio-Visual assistant to Audio-Visual manager.

NAB also announced that Robert Hallahan, formerly with the Army Times Publishing Co., was signed on as a Public Relations Assistant.

Coop's Loops Get TV Whirl

By ABE WOODSTONE

Even as he was manually operating his capsule, Faith 7, on reentering the earth's atmosphere, Gordon Cooper had time to help shoot down a canard. The tv coverage of the 22 orbits through space clearly shattered the fantasy perpetuated in some quarters that NBC News is only as good as Huntley and Brinkley.

NBC carried the most, in terms of time, about the Cooper flight, and also had the benefit of straightforward, unobtrusive and therefore competent reporting by a large team on which the stardust kids were not members. Frank McGee and Merrill Mueller, who were prominent for NBC, had an enviable knack for holding attention. Not everybody on the network team was as good, but the fact is that, altogether, the show was appealing enough to grab off the largest share of the tv audience for the Cooper affair. Huntley and Brinkley, however good themselves, could have done no more.

But the outstanding accomplishment by NBC last week came as Cooper neared the end of his 34 hour 20 minute stint. The astronaut was in trouble. Everybody now it; the machinery for automatic reentry was malfunctioning, so there was real tenseness, finally, NBC News' John Rich, who was in Tokyo monitoring the Cooper radio wavelength, repeated by closed circuit for the American audience Cooper's actual words upon reentry. Rich's scoop was legitimate, even beating NASA's release of this information and was the surest sign of difference between good reporting and great reporting.

Cronkite, Bate Performances

His overall unit was not as dogged or quite as ambitious as NBC's but Walter Cronkite of CBS News has a definite appeal of his own. In the moments before blastoff from Canaveral on Wednesday (15) his words were direct and dramatic. Another outstanding tv performance during the latest U.S. manshot came from Dick Bate of ABC. ABC News' had been scratching around for a strong anchor personality for sometime. Whatever Bate's abilities as a newsman—and he is evidently able—he is a personable gentleman, quick with a funny thought. He was particularly good in narrating a special film shown on ABC-TV Thursday morning. It was about Cooper's life. Prepared in advance of the flight, and used for fill by ABC, it was a cleverly rounded job in which Bate's lively narration was the key to success.

On the whole the tv coverage was excellent, save for some minor intrusions. Take, for instance, those moments on ABC-TV before this special Cooper bio. In the 30 minutes Thursday on ABC-TV before the bio was aired, there were three times when some mention of where Cooper was in orbit or how well he was faring could have been made—but was not. In N. Y., the ABC-TV flagship station gave a promotional plug, one minute in length, about how great Murphy Martin and his local news program were. Instead of the plug it would have been easy to say how Cooper was doing at the moment. There were other opportunities to keep viewers in N. Y. up on vital statistics. The host of the local WABC-TV program twice mentioned, undoubtedly on instructions from the news operation, that a film biography of L. Gordon Cooper would be shown within a few minutes. Neither time, however, did he discuss what was happening then to the astronaut.

Yet there were enough statistics available to prove to the audience that the bio they were soon to see had not turned into an obituary. And as fine as the bio turned out to be, there were no noticeable mentions during it of the actual flight news. That left some 30 minutes in which Cooper was mentioned plenty but not seen in content.

On Friday (17), the afternoon of Cooper's splashdown in the Pacific off Midway Island, the post films of the actual event reached the West Coast and were shown on all three webs. Taken by NASA and a motion picture company photographer, they were barely serviceable. Perhaps it was the fault of editing done hurriedly in order to get the pix to the public. But even ordinary news pictures could not truly nullify the excitement of the splashdown, what was seen of it, or of Cooper's emergence from Faith 7.

As hard as he sometimes was to hear, because of poor feed from the Kearsarge, Joe Campbell's post description of the splashdown and recovery seemed sound, and was exciting.

The recovery film, as shown on NBC-TV, was accompanied by the quick-witted remarks of correspondent Bill Ryan, whose good humor and astuteness have lately made him a favorite with the web administration. Unfortunately, he, as well as some other NBC correspondents, has developed an uncanny vocal resemblance to Brinkley. It was disconcerting to hear Ryan distort the famous Brinkley inflections, with stress on relative pronouns and conjunctions, the uplift at the end of sentences. Ryan ought to stay strictly his own man; he did not always talk that way. By the way, NBC evidently could not resist bringing Huntley in for a bit. He made a brief, pleasant, if inconsequential, appearance during the film at Ryan's side.

If NBC tended to spend more time on the Cooper trip than either of its rivals, the tendency paid off, many ways, some not obvious. The network might, depending on one's journalistic point of view, be accused of overplaying the story to the point, sometime, of being unduly repetitious. Yet the extensive coverage is understood to have stimulated a few complaints from the sponsor of the rival CBS-TV coverage. Metropolitan Life, like many sponsors, seemed as interested in getting as much exposure as Gulf Oil was getting in sponsoring NBC-TV's story development. Tuesday (14) morning, a few minutes after the original Cooper flight was scrubbed, CBS News chose to go back to regular commercial programming. NBC, on the other hand, chose to stay with Cooper for many minutes more. On a purely journalistic basis, CBS News was probably able to offer as good an argument for going off as NBC News could for staying on, but the CBS cutoff seems to have annoyed Met Life. After all, the insurance company bought CBS News instant specials, the Cooper flight included, on the strength of Gulf's reported success with similar news programming on NBC-TV. And, it stands to reason, that Met Life wants all the same considerations Gulf seems to be getting, especially since Gulf and Met Life are handled through the same ad agency—Young & Rubicam.

Apart from the eccentricities of news judgment and of newsmen, this was a whale of a fine 34-hour show. It's known that many network newsmen and their executives, however, were too tired by Friday morning to stay up and listen to the plaudits. Most of them got less sleep than Cooper, who had seven-and-a-half hours.

A media joke which cropped up after Cooper landed safely was: "Seems there's been more time spent on space than space ever spent on time." Fortunately, the material used by most of broadcasting's newsmen in support of the Cooper flight was more worthy.

Signed, Joey

When Gordon Cooper was on his second orbit on Wednesday (15), NBC-TV veep David Tebet received this wire from a friend in Hollywood:

"Dear Dave, Do you honestly feel Major Cooper could get as many promos as he's getting? Such excitement over one spec. How many benefits has he done for NBC? . . . Wait until you get his bill for transportation and expenses. Signed, Joey Bishop."

Medico Show Nominated For an Emmy Blasted In London as Mumbo-Jumbo

London, May 21.

The BBC-TV medico documentary "Your Life in Their Hands" which has been nominated for an Emmy Award, has just been roundly blasted publicly as ". . . inept, badly conceived, badly scripted, badly presented and badly produced . . ." by a medical magazine.

The editorial, in The Medical World last week (10), summed up the documentary: "Each program is a piece of medical mumbo-jumbo . . . cannot be understood and can give the public only a misleading picture of the various conditions dealt with. The 'Dr. Kildare' series gives a better insight into the nature and content of medicine than 'Your Life in Their Hands'."

The magazine goes on to qualify itself by commenting that it would not "waste our time attacking television medicine" if it did not believe that important issues were involved, claiming that medicine in the community was being ignored and the hospital being turned into ". . . a kind of 20th Century shrine."

The BBC refused to be drawn into argument. "Your Life in Their Hands' was produced in close collaboration with the medical experts and hospitals concerned," said a corporation spokesman. "We have no further comment."

British TV Trust Decision in July

Belfast, May 21.

A final decision on color tv will most likely be taken in July by the British Broadcasting Corp. when engineers from West and East Europe meet in London.

Hugh Carleton-Green, director-general of the BBC, admitted this here at a press confab.

The BBC, he said, was experimenting with three color systems —American, French and German. There would be considerable advantage in adopting a system common to all countries.

In the U. K., he said, the cost of a color set would be more than $300. He felt most viewers would settle for a rented set.

But he stressed that, for the BBC to carry out its full color program, the Govt. had said it would need a license fee of $14 from 1965.

Madigan's WBBM-TV Slot

Chicago, May 21.

John Madigan, onetime city editor of the Chicago American, has been named news director of WBBM-TV, the CBS anchor here. He succeeds Bill Garry who, after more than a decade with station during which he built the news operation in to the market leader, resigned because of illness.

Madigan came to the station two years ago

31 State Governors Cook Out in WLIB Bid For Vox Pop on Negroes

When a politician turns down down free air time, that's news. And this is the story of 31 governors who can't find the time to Cleghorn their own hallwicks.

New York's Negro-oriented WLIB has been trying to put together a Sunday special, "Minorities in Perspective." Idea is to have the governors of 32 states with substantial Negro populations answer eight questions on the growth patterns—economic, social civic, educational and cultural—re the Negro communities in their states. Questions specifically asked for comparisons between consumer spendable incomes outside New York and the $2,250,000,000 New York's Negroes are estimated to spend annually.

WLIB general manager Harry Novik figured on 32 positive responses from the state houses queried. He got one. North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford, through his press aide Graham Jones, sent an acceptance letter to Novik from his Raleigh, N.C. offices. Novik intends putting the Tarheel state's chief exec on WLIB as a special.

Series, otherwise, has been scrapped for now. From the rest of the governors Novik received 16 polite "I'm busy" and 15 haven't been heard from.

Craze for Sports Cues TV Yen For Billiards, Skiing

The consistently high level of audience interest in sports coverage on television is sparking interest in new events for regular sportscasting. Coming into tv focus are such sports as skiing competitions and billiard matches.

Chris Schenkel, the veteran sports commentator, is associated with the double pitch for more tv coverage of skiing and the introduction of billiards. Schenkel is already involved in a color film series of billiard matches which the Peter Dillon company is producing for a network sale. Billiard expert Willie Mosconi is working with the Schenkel on this narration.

In skiing venture, Schenkel is associated with Andrea Mead Lawrence, two-time Olympic skiing champion for the U. S. There working up a proposal for a tv series to cover the racing and jumping competition by the group of skiing professionals who tour the key winter sports resorts throughout the year. Schenkel said the idea stemmed from the fact that the CBS-TV coverage of the 1960 Squaw Valley winter games drew one of the all-time high sports ratings. He credited that tv coverage as being one of the major factors in the ski boom of the last couple of years.

Schenkel has seen bowling grow into a potent tv item over the past decade during which he's been commentator for the Pro Bowler's Tour carried on ABC-TV. About 10 years ago, he said, winners of the tour received $500; now they get $10,000. Not only are the tv ratings climbing, but the bowling alleys are drawing sellout crowds at $5 per head. Schenkel thinks there's a good chance that both skiing and billiards can duplicate bowling's pattern on tv.

Dick Berg to Helm Hope Anthologies

Hollywood, May 21.

Dick Berg has been named a key producer of "The Bob Hope Show," being telefilmed at Revue studios. Anthology films, which will be linked with Hope's monthly specs, will be on NBC-TV next season, with Hope hosting the anthologies. Chrysler is sponsoring.

Berg is currently readying several projects, including a Rod Serling original teleplay, "A Killing at Sun Dial," which will probably be the first episode shot, in June; "The Sojourner," a short story by Carson McCuller; "The Fifth Passenger," a novel by Edward Young, for which the producer is dickering Richard Murphy to teleplay; "The Lee Wiley Story," negotiations are now for acquisition of the rights from Miss Wiley.

Alan J. Miller, Revue production chief, is exec producer of the Hope series, and negotiations are on for other producers to develop projects for the show.

BBC 2: April '64 Target Date

London, May 21.

According to the present timetable, BBC-TV's second network will start transmissions in April, 1964. The service, in the first instance, will be confined to the London area, but will spread rapidly to all principal cities and eventually span the entire country.

BBC 2, as the new network will be known, will be on UHF, using the 625 lines transmission system. The existing BBC service (which will become known as BBC 1), and the commercial tv programs are transmitted on 405 lines.

Ever since the official confirmation that the new service would use the higher standard of definition, manufacturers have been making dual standard receivers, and, according to BBC researchers, there will be a substantial audience capable of receiving its alternative program when it goes on the air.

Plans for the launching of a color service have, however, been delayed for a year and test transmissions will now not start until April 1966, at the earliest. It is confidently predicted, however, that Britain will lead Europe in color services and it will be some little time before the other major countries such as Germany, Italy and, possibly, France, follow suit.

While programming plans for the new channel are still in the embryonic stage, BBC execs have made up their minds that this should be a complementary service, and not an alternative program in the strict sense of the word. It is intended to avoid the comparison on sound radio between Light and Home programs, but to provide viewers with the widest possible choice, and give each a distinctive character, featuring a wide variety of all grades of entertainment.

"vital" to overall FCC policy, he added.

Henry predicted he wouldn't make as big an "impact" on the industry as his predecessor Newton Minow. "There is more contrast between Minow and his predecessors than there is between Minow and me," Henry averred.

Henry said he and Minow agree more than disagree "especially on major matters."

Seemingly eager to catch all the hot questions tossed him, Henry said broadcasters don't have absolute freedom to conform to majority tastes alone. This wouldn't include the public interest, he continued.

One of FCC's main tasks is to be alert to segments of the viewing public getting inadequate service, Henry said. Along this line, he pretty well repeated his remarks given two weeks ago in Nashville that "the public is not aware . . . of what they can expect from broadcasters."

FCC should also "keep broadcasters aware of where they underserve," he continued.

The 34-year-old Tennessean reiterated his suggestions that stations should carry regular announcements of their public interest responsibilities and call for public criticism and comment.

He's Tough

He said FCC should "promote broadcasters to be more responsible to public demand."

Henry said the misunderstandings of FCC's 1960 programming statement guidelines for sustaining and non-commercial time should be cleared up and resolved.

He called for more pubservice prime time programming saying it doesn't make any difference whether its sponsored or non-sponsored.

Henry noted some "green sheets in the wasteland." Among the greenery, he pointed to broadcasters' "increased awareness of increased concern with news programming and a "healthy move" towards station airing of controversial issues.

No further study of local ownership is contemplated, Henry said. Noting that more important matters are before FCC, he said the only possible problem is that 15 owners could control the 75 top markets.

He warned of possible overselling of UHF. Such stations might be licensed before a community is ripe for them, he cautioned.

He disclosed FCC doesn't want to regulate the rating services. The Commission staff is now preparing a statement for the Harris subcommittee which calls for giving the industry a chance to come up with its own answers to the imbroglio.

FCC is concerned with broadcasters' overemphasis on inaccurate ratings and their tendency to follow ratings "like lambs to the slaughter," Henry said.

He refused to disclose what programs he likes and doesn't like. He said he is a prime time and weekend viewer.

Henry said he has an open mind on web-station relationships and the option time issue, but "it is about time we get into this matter."

Asked about sponsor domination of programming, he replied "perhaps there is too much of this. I would like to see programs more independent of sponsor control."

One possible alternative might be more sources of control, he said. However, he noted he wasn't keen on the Minow backed magazine concept for advertising. Henry said broadcasting wasn't ready for that yet.

Henry backs the newspaper ownership statement which FCC presented at the recent Celler subcommittee hearings. The guidelines in that report are blander than Minow's statement which strongly favored newspaper ownership in two-paper towns. Henry, however, said his decisions on this question will depend on individual cases.

Like Minow, Henry plans to keep an eye on children's programming. He said there had been a definite improvement in kidvid since Minow's arrival. Noting trade press reports of some children's shows being cancelled, Henry warned the industry may be slipping. "This should be a major effort of all broadcasters," he added.

Henry has three children. Robert and Ethel Kennedy who have expressed interest in children's programming are expecting their eighth.

Down Mexico Way They've Also Got Rating Problems

Mexico City, May 21.

Edgar Sanchez Simonsen, president of the Mexico Association of Advertisers, pleaded for an end to radio rating disputes, and asked for a review of television rating techniques at last week's first monthly luncheon of the Mexican Section of the International Advertising Association in Mexico City.

The Advertisers group represents 115 firms who spend around 600,000 pesos ($48,000) on radio advertising alone.

"A small rating may reflect a quality market, but this does not reflect in survey results," Sanchez Simonsen pointed out. "Sometimes in Mexico a program has several hundred thousand listeners, but these are adolescents, who haven't enough money to buy anything more expensive than a soft drink," he added.

Guillermo Salias, president of the National Chamber of Broadcasters, replied that his organization is giving the matter serious study, and hopes for an early solution.

Until efforts were made to standardize procedures the situation with respect to ratings was chaotic. Last year in December,

CANADIAN SALE ON STEVE ALLEN SHOW

"Steve Allen Show," Westinghouse's 90-minute late-night entry, goes international in September when CHAN-TV, Vancouver, picks up the tape syndicated show. Three other Canadian stations are now dickering with Al Sussman, v.p. and general manager of WBC Program Sales, to carry the Allen stanza.

In addition to the Canadian sale, the Allen show has been sold in Texas to the following Triangle-Vaughn stations: KROD-TV, El Paso; KVII, Amarillo; and KOSA-TV, Odessa. That brings the total number of markets for Allen to around 40, more than double the lineup of stations which started with the show last June 25.

WPIX, N. Y., which has been carrying the Allen stanza from the outset, has renewed for another year. However, since the kickoff, three stations have dropped off: KOLO-TV, Reno; WBRC, New Haven, and last week WTVN, Columbus. Although the Allen show's ratings improved recently in Columbus, it still trailed in the three-station market. A WBC spokesman indicated that the reason for Allen's low ratings in Columbus was the station's failure to accept WBC's promotional and publicity assistance.

WNBC'S $5 REWARD

Beating of Cameraman at Chi Relief Centre Prompts Action

Chicago, May 21.

NBC News and the Chi edit, WNBC, together have put a $5,000 reward on the heads of the state relief recipients who assaulted news cameraman George Lunsow while he was shooting film at a southside food distribution centre last week. Lunsow is hospitalized with a concussion and is also suffering from lapses into amnesia.

Although there have been no eyewitnesses to testify, police believe the cameraman was beaten and his camera stolen by persons who did not want to be photographed while standing in line for a handout of federal surplus food.

Lunsow was part of a crew covering a story of national interest on the food emergency here for persons receiving state aid. Relief checks had been held up by a political wrangle in the state capital over the ceilings on payments, and the situation was made more distressing when the federal food supply arrived late.

Crosley's Murphy Cited

Columbus, May 21.

John T. Murphy, president of Crosley Broadcasting Corp., was presented with a special commendation for WLW-C by Mayor W. Ralston Westlake on the occasion of the station's completion of 14 years of telecasting.

"The mayor noted that the Crosley outlet is the first Columbus station to provide color programming and has shown unusual initiative in sending staff members to points as far away as Germany, Alaska and South America to bring back features in which Central Ohio viewers are interested."

Henry Jaffe in Swipe at Network 'Restrictions'; To Make Features

Hollywood, May 21.

Henry Jaffe has a distinct distaste for formula in tv and is expanding his sphere of operations to "get out of the straitjacket." An early pioneer of quality shows in tv, dating back to Producers Showcase of 15 years ago, he is so fed up with restrictive programming that he's branching off into theatrical pictures.

Says Jaffe, "I can no longer live with the restrictions of network television. If your show doesn't comply with the dictated formulae you're up against the wall. It's got to have a star, must deal with psychiatry, doctors or lawyers or adventure into the outdoors. The public taste for something better is severely underrated. It's like being among the eskimos; if you don't speak their language you're strapped." He has three or four properties he'd like to film theatrically and one in particular, which he is dealing for, would launch his new career. If not that one, then "Lie Down in Darkness," which he would produce on location in this country. As for financing, "I've got my own."

Jaffe will still have a stake in tv with 26 issues of "The Telephone Hour," which Barry Wood will continue to produce. "We won't be reaching far or lower our sights to any musical level," he promises. "All we want is the best, whether it's a rock 'n' roller or an operatic star." While Dinah Shore, whom he has handled for all her years on tv via his Bewanee Productions, may be lost for next season, he feels she would weaken if the right kind of special came along. Dinah's show last January with Ray Charles, the blind pianist, as guestar, achieved its highest rating, which Jaffe likes to believe reflects the public taste for something better than what now passes for quality entertainment on tv.

"I'm getting into theatrical production," says Jaffe, "because you don't have to abide by formula. You're given more latitude for expression and don't have to live with network or sponsor restrictions."

He'll film a few pilots for a projected regional network. Jaffe produced the Shirley Temple series, which along with some of the "Telephone Hours" will be sold globally. Jaffe denies that he's arty by nature because of his vast collection objets d' art. 'I just want to give the people what they want and aren't getting on tv."

Tap Norman Ober For Press Info at CBS Radio

Norman Ober has been named director of program information for CBS Radio, a title which now embraces the functions of audience promotion as well as press information.

Ober had been director of audience promotion. In selecting a successor to Sid Garfield, who had been director of press information for CBS Radio, web reorganized the division to combine the functions of press info and audience promotion. Garfield is now with CBS-TV as exploitation director.

Union-Harried 'Harry's Girls' In Shift to Riviera

MGM-TV, beset by actors' unions here and abroad for planning to shoot its "Harry's Girls" series in Europe, resolved its difficulties with the thesps over the weekend by signing a deal with the French actors union, Syndicat Francais des Acteurs. Studio moved the series from England to France following insistence from British Equity that it sign a pact giving British thesps the equivalent of Screen Actors Guild minimums and residuals. First 13 in series will be shot on the French Riviera starting May 28.

It's understood that the agreement with the French gives French actors the guild base on residuals —100%—marking the first time European actors have gotten a pact whereby they will get reruns.

SAG and European actor guilds had charged the MGM-TV series was a "runaway" production, a charge hotly refuted by the studio. Metro said the series involves adventures of a song-and-dance act touring the European continent, that it will make heavy use of "authentic" continental background and performers.

A Metro source explained the studio refused to sign a deal sought by the British on grounds the company already has a pact with the British, and they felt demands asked were, in effect, abrogating the present pact. On the other hand, they have not had a pact with the French, so view that as a different situation, the source said. MGM-TV is more than annoyed at the union ruckus, not only because it does not consider "Girls" a runaway, but because the half-hour series constitutes a minute part of its production, with five hourlong shows being filmed at the studio, where, of course, Hollywood talent is employed.

Welper's 470G For a 2-Parter

Hollywood, May 21

The two-part "Making of the President 1960" special has been allocated a budget of $470,000, according to Welper Productions.

In the opinion of prexy David Welper, the sum is believed to be the highest budget ever set for a single documentary. The two one-hour shows, based on Theodore H. White's book, is scheduled for completion Sept. 1.

White, who is scripting the special, has returned to N.Y., following confabs with Mel Stuart, who is producing and directing for Welper.

W. Germany's 2d TV Network Running $18,000,000 in Red

Mainz, May 21.

West Germany's Second Television Network, which just got into operation six weeks ago on April 1, is already pleading poverty.

Stations officials at a meeting of the giant board of directors have announced that by the end of 1963, the network will be 70 million German marks (roughly $18,000,000) in the red.

The station got into operation in 1962, with some financing from the West German government through money collected by the federal post office, which levies a monthly $1.25 fee on each of the country's 7,000,000 television set owners. In addition, since the station started broadcasting six weeks ago, it has raised a little more revenue through its 12 minutes of daily advertising at the cost of about $6,000 per minute.

However, advised the network officials, there just isn't enough income to pay the station's mounting costs.

It is figured that for the 1963 operation the cost include $10,000,000 for programming; about $16,000,000 for personnel; and $8,000,000 for technical costs. Deducted from the income, that means a minus of $18,000,000.

First of all, the station is asking the West German government through the ministers of the various lands, for a better split of the fees raised by the monthly charge for every viewer.

Second, the station authorities have asked for permission to increase the commercial time from the current 12 to 20 minutes daily —which would be a big boon to West Germany's manufacturers and distributors and ad agencies, who cannot now get as much television time as they would like for the accounts.

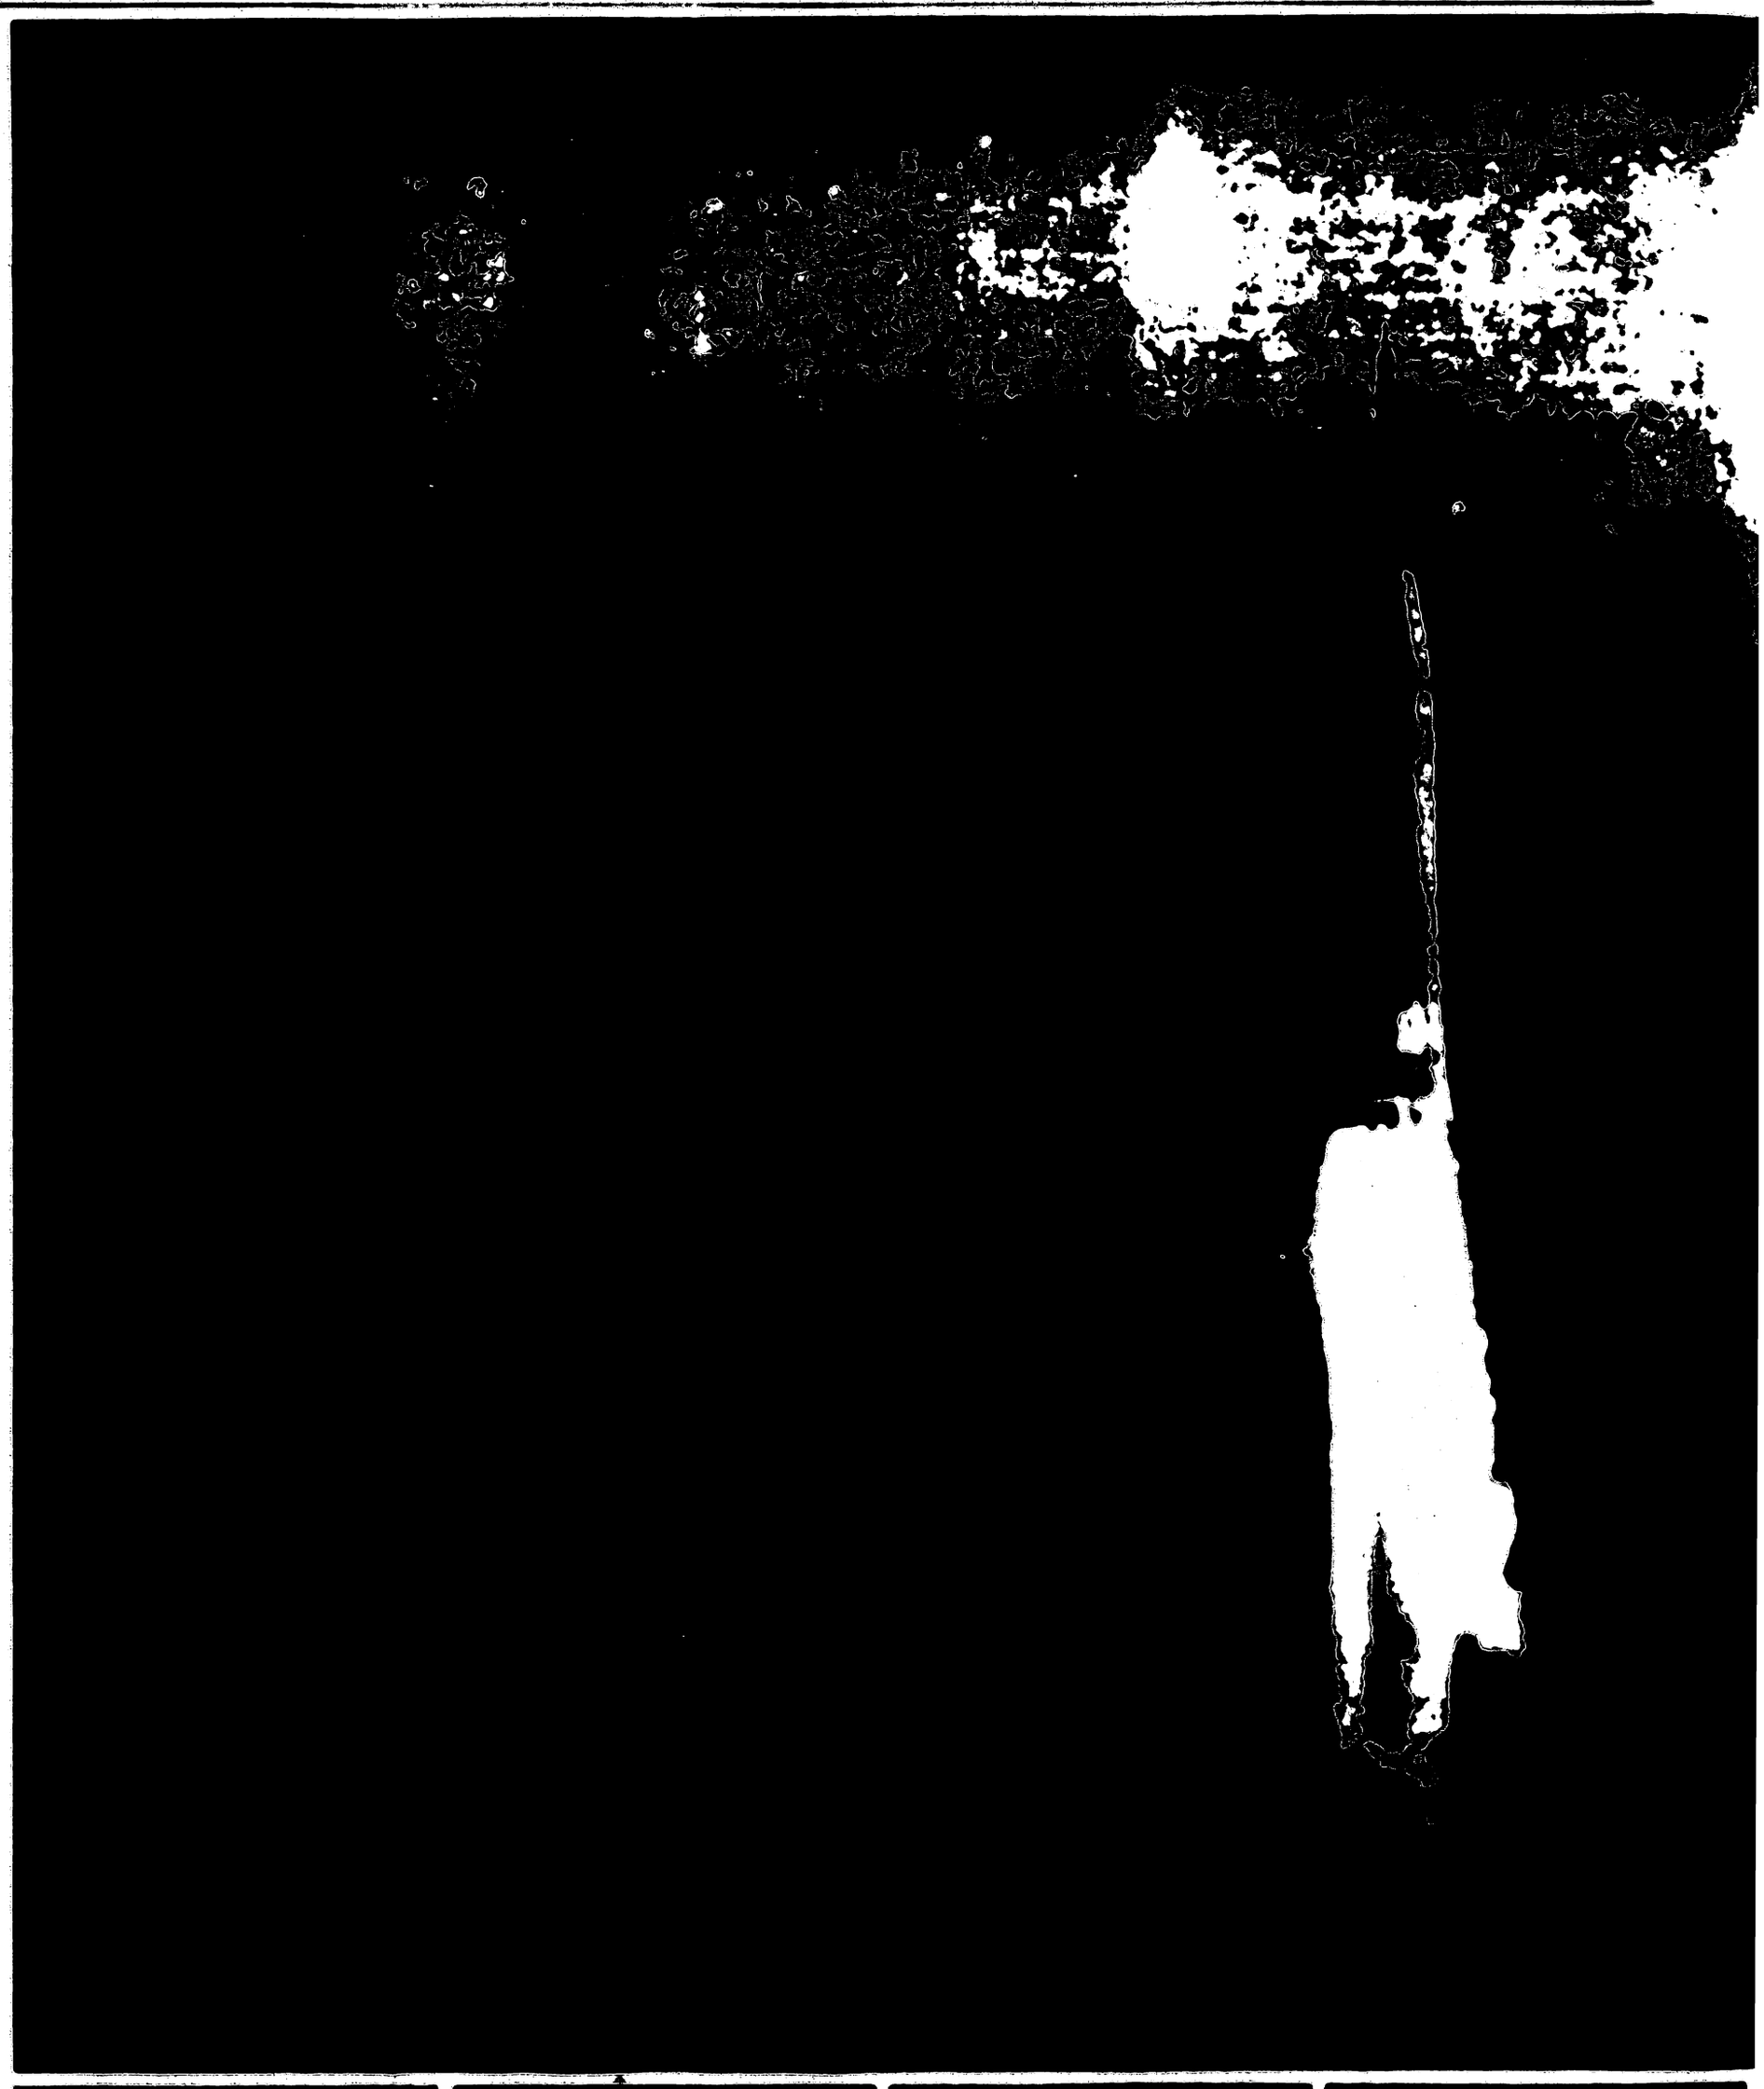
The station (which goes on the air at 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, continuing until about 10:30 and broadcasts the other five days from 6:40 p.m. until 10 p.m.) now has to support about 2,671 employees.

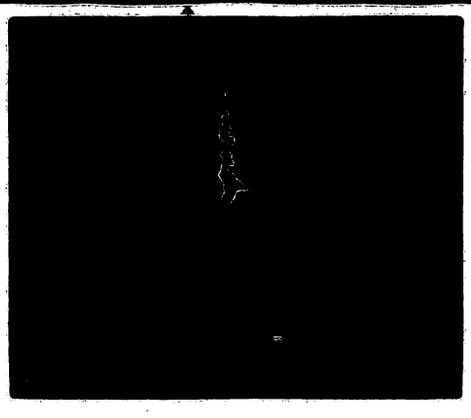
Betty Luster-Sidney Cohen Consultancy for Y&R

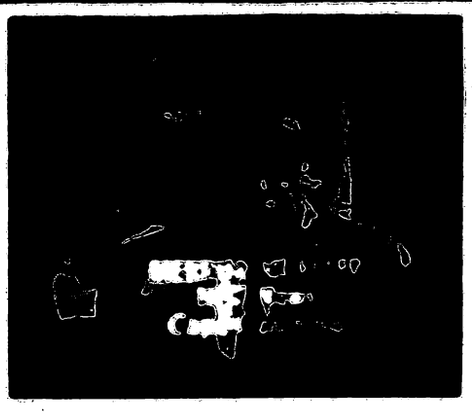
Young & Rubicam's media department has signed an exclusive pact with Film Service & Film Service International wherein the Betty Luster-Sidney Cohen firm will act as program consultants on syndication buys.

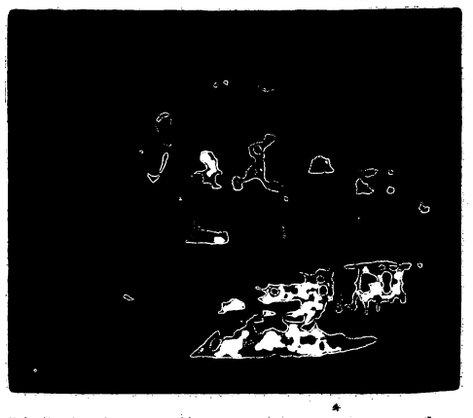
Beginning July 1, Film Service will be evaluating syndie properties and individual markets for the agency, working with Y&R execs Warren Bahr, Tom Lynch and Joe St Georges.

It's the company's first and exclusive ty agency deal. Otherwise the show buyers rep about 40 stations with Miss Luster working out of New York and Cohen from Salt Lake City, where he's an exhibitor with a string of 12 theatres.









1 10:30 pm, Monday, May 13th – NBC offered a preview report on the 22-orbit flight of the Faith 7. During the first attempt, on Tuesday, NBC alone stayed with the story until Major Cooper emerged from the capsule. 2 On Wednesday morning, NBC was the only TV network to provide continuous live coverage throughout the flight's first orbit. 3 Then, the nation saw and heard frequent orbit specials up to one hour in length, throughout the day and night. 4 During NBC's regularly scheduled shows, up-to-the-minute reports were shown on screen by our exclusive "flashcaster." 5 On Thursday the TODAY show went on the air at 1:15 am and stayed through the night, for continuous network flight coverage. ● NBC's coverage continued with full reports of the splashdown and recovery, concluding Thursday night with a full-hour special broadcast on Major Cooper's mission.

On Major Gordon Cooper's 22-orbit spin-through-space, NBC News was with him all the way...and not merely in spirit. No other network, declared the nation's newspaper critics afterward, covered the event with such thoroughness, devotion and skill. Here is a sampling of the reviews:

ON PREPARATORY PROGRAMMING "Only NBC saw fit to give us a preview last evening. Fascinating stuff it was, too..." Harriet Van Horne, New York World-Telegram and Sun.

"NBC got there first with a space flight special Monday night." Harry Harris, Philadelphia Inquirer.

ON TUESDAY'S CANCELLED FLIGHT "Alone among the TV networks, NBC demonstrated concern for the human element... the only network to see Cooper safely out of his Faith 7 capsule." Bob Williams, New York Post.

"While ABC and CBS switched to regular programming...NBC stayed right with the story..." Rick Du Brow, Denver Post.

ON THE FLIGHT ITSELF "NBC's coverage of Gordon Cooper's space-orbiting seemed by far the best." Jack O'Brian, New York Journal-American.

"NBC's 'Today' show stayed on the air all night to keep the nation informed." Arthur E. Fetridge, The Boston Herald.

"NBC gave the viewers by far the lengthiest and most comprehensive report." Ben Gross, New York Daily News.

"For the second day in a row, NBC took the ball and ran away from other networks in covering astronaut Cooper's space flight." Al Salerno, New York World-Telegram and Sun.

"Coverage...was commendable, but NBC rates special mention." John Horn, New York Herald Tribune.

AND NBC RADIO COVERAGE WAS SINGLED OUT "Much the most extended coverage of the flight came yesterday from NBC radio, and in many ways John Chancellor was the broadcasting star of the event." Jack Gould, The New York Times.

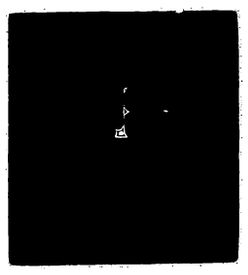
Apparently, the general public feels as strongly as the reviewers about the consistent superiority of NBC's reporting, for more people kept pace with Cooper through NBC than through any other network. And NBC has continued to follow the astronaut's activities since his return-to-earth. Through both radio and television, we've covered his Saturday arrival in Hawaii; his Sunday press conference from Cape Canaveral; and yesterday's reception by the President, Congress and the Washington public. Today NBC will be giving the nation's viewers a better-than-curbside seat at Manhattan's ticker-tape welcome for the good major. As we've been saying, we're with him all the way.



Look to NBC for the best combination of news, entertainment and information.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week six different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 207 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

GROUP W

A new name in broadcasting? Almost.

It is and it isn't. It's more suitable. The meaning is clearer. Westinghouse Broadcasting Company is a good name, but sometimes confusing. Some people think we're a network. A few even think we're the Electric Corporation. (We're actually a wholly-owned subsidiary.) We're a Group of six radio and five television stations in eight major U.S. cities.

Neither a network, nor an aggregation of individual stations, the Group is a new and significant development in the broadcasting industry. We are eleven local stations united by a common philosophy about broadcasting. We have financial, creative manpower and management resources greater than the individual station. We have the local operating flexibility no network can match. These resources represent an opportunity as well as a responsibility to serve our communities in ways neither individual stations nor networks are capable of doing.

If you've seen "The Steve Allen Show," or "The Children's Specials" on television, or heard "America Sings," or "Africa: Peace Corps Plus One" on radio, or listened to reports from our Washington and European News Bureaus, you have an idea of how Group projects augment local and network schedules and represent a new source of programming for the industry.

It was to emphasize the uniqueness of the broadcasting Group, as well as to clear up any existing confusion about who and what we are, that we decided to be known as Group W. So please call us Group W from now on. It stands for the same dynamic broadcasting that's always been associated with the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company.

Educ'l TV's Fate Doesn't Rest On WNDT: White

John White, head of National Educational Television, warned tv educators against believing that the national scope of educational video would die if Channel 13 in N. Y. died.

He also took what was interpreted as a swipe at some of tv's commercial interests in a speech last Friday (17) before a N. Y. meeting of public relations men for ETV affiliated stations.

White declared that he had not previously commented on the problems of WNDT, N. Y., simply because they were strictly local and therefore none of his business. But, he explained to the p.r. men, that he ought to say something, finally, because of the "myths and misconceptions" and lessons arising out of the WNDT situation.

"I urge you," said White, "not to fall into the trap that too many people in this country do fall into—and that is to equate effectiveness with dollars. You need more money, of course. All of us do. But all the money in the world will not in itself get us where we want to go.

"The only way I know to get there is by delivering a service developed by people with imagination, skill and determination, by people who show mediocrity . . . It takes courage to depart from the safe and sterile, to experiment, to back strong pockets of opinion. But if we don't have that courage, we don't belong in this business. Admittedly, our valor must sometimes be tempered with discretion. We live not in a vacuum but in a real world of pressures and forces potent enough to cripple or destroy us. But let us not destroy ourselves from within through timidity and fear."

White declared earlier in his speech that it is a myth to believe the failure of Channel 13 in N. Y. would lead to the ultimate failure of the rest of educational tv.

"For a number of years—long before the wheelers and dealers in N. Y. could get around to it—ETV had been going on in the hinterlands. Denver's KRMA has been considered one of the finest ETV stations—from a production standpoint—for quite a while, even though it too had had its financial problems. If WNDT folds, I know of no one who believes KRMA or any other ETV outlet will close shop.

"Some New Yorkers," continued White, "thought it highly unique when WNDT programmed not only instructional daytime courses for the school-age bracket, but also aired non-instructional, non-credit shows for adults in the evening. That format has been used a long time by other ETV outlets, but New Yorkers, so busy worrying about the problems of a wagon train's journey to the frontier, just never got around to learning what was on the other side of those monstrously tall buildings that stick out of Manhattan like dirty toothpicks on a soggy grapefruit . . . So what else is new in old New York?"

This was the thought related by observers as the one touching most directly on the WNDT money problems.

Scripps-Howard Dividend

Cincinnati, May 21.

A dividend of 25 cents a share on Scripps-Howard Broadcasting Co. stock was declared by the board of directors at a meeting here Friday (17), the first since the company's stock went on sale to the public in April.

President Jack R. Howard said the dividend, payable June 10 to share holders of record on May 24, is in the same amount paid for the first quarter.

Income for the year ended April 30 was approximately $4,446,000 or 27½ cents a share, up $186,000 from the previous year.

Stockholders elected Henry W. Slavick v.p. of the company. He is general manager of WMC, Memphis.

Charlotte—Richard Bradley, formerly with the New York Times and Times radio station WQXR, has joined [illegible] WSOC-TV here as a newscaster.

deemed Sarnoff's proposals for a "permanent financial base" of support from schools as covering just one of the bases of station's financial support. He said it never occurred to him that Sarnoff might have meant for schools to provide the station's only backing.

As of May 1, 1963, Educational Broadcasting Corp. received $962,000 from commercial broadcasters, EBC Board chairman Howard Shepard told FCC.

On Jan. 30, CBS donated $400,000, Metromedia has given $12,500 and RKO General is kicking $400,000 over two years. WPIX is under agreement to contribute $50,000 per year for four years. ABC, said Shepard, is still considering donating.

Sarnoff's Slide

NBC chairman Robert W. Sarnoff objected to a statement in letter by Howard C. Shepard to the FCC which referred to "an approach (by Sarnoff) which was never accepted by EBC." The paragraph, written by Shepard, the chairman of the Educational Broadcasting Corp., was to the FCC, which has been investigating alleged influence of educational tv by commercial broadcasters.

In a letter to Shepard, dated May 17, Sarnoff noted that he had received a copy of Shepard's FCC report and that it "clearly documents the fact as we have always known it — i.e., that NBC's contribution to EBC involved no understanding with regard to the programming of WNDT." WNDT is the N.Y. educational tv run by EBC.

"There is however," Sarnoff continued, "a particular passage in the 'Conclusion' section of the report which is so ambiguously phrased as to lead to possible misunderstanding . . . The passage to which I refer is as follows: 'The only suggestion made by any broadcaster with respect to WNDT's programming is that expressed in the third paragraph of Mr. Sarnoff's April 11 letter (but not in the oral discussion preceding it)—an approach which was never accepted by EBC.'"

Sarnoff suggested that the quoted statement in Shepard's letter might lead to "incorrect inferences." The inferences as the NBC chairman saw them were: "That in the third paragraph of my April 11 letter to Dr. Gould (proxy of EBC) I made 'suggestions' regarding WNDT's programming. That these 'suggestions' were not raised in the oral discussion with Dr. Gould preceding the letter, and that accordingly the letter did not accurately reflect the discussion. That I had urged an 'approach' to WNDT's programming which was rejected by EBC.

"The fact is that the third paragraph of my April 11 letter—characterized in your report as expressing 'suggestions' made by me with respect to WNDT's programming—expresses no such suggestions at all. It refers to the fact that I was impressed by Dr. Gould's 'outline of plans' for WNDT. The analysis of WNDT's problems and prospects made by Dr. Gould's discussion with me was made by him, and if these constituted suggestions, they were his suggestions, not mine, although I agree with the analysis he outlined to me.

"The fact also is that the third paragraph of my letter accurately reflected what Dr. Gould said to me in our discussion." Sarnoff also said that Dr. Gould, not he, had brought up a programming "approach," and that he merely had been "impressed" by it.

"I am sorry," said Sarnoff to Shepard last week, "that a general conversation I had with Dr. Gould in which he outlined a philosophy of operation for educational tv, and a polite reference in my letter to his views has caused such a [illegible]—but I felt compelled, in the interests of fairness and accuracy, to call to your attention the passage in your report that might result in clouding the facts."

Hartford—George Bowe, WTIC-TV production manager, upped to post of assistant program manager. E. Paul Albert, asst production manager, promoted to production manager. William F. Dwyer, director, upped to asst production manager.

Sheldon Leonard in Tokyo Recalls Trick Dialog, Menacing Kisser Days

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, May 21.

"There was a phase when people simplified their conversation to communicate with me," said Sheldon Leonard, explaining the difficulties he encountered in trying to get people to take him seriously when he was breaking into tv about a dozen years ago as a writer, director and then producer.

Leonard's problem stemmed from the indelible image he had left from years of playing gangsters on the screen. So strong did his characterization become that in his more recent outings as an actor, the role was kidded. Leonard's big-city face and soft, but threatening voice was given a Runyonesque comic flair.

Now Leonard rarely steps before the camera. "Only enough to keep my face prominent so I can get good tables in restaurants," he says.

He is the exec producer for T & L Productions (the "T" belongs to Danny Thomas) and the "general utility man" for the outfit. T & L has three shows among the top-rated 10: "The Danny Thomas Show" in its 11th year, "The Andy Griffith Show" in its fourth year and "The Dick Van Dyke Show" in its third year. In addition, T & L produces "The Joey Bishop Show," the new "Bill Dana Show" and an upcoming series called, "My Favorite Martians."

Here with T & L music director Earle Hagen and their wives, Leonard is on the first leg of a 33-day world trip. He has been meeting with the Sony people seeking to iron out the wrinkles in their transistor mikes, which Leonard calls a kind of "wireless broadcasting." He pioneered last year in using them for filming when "The Danny Thomas Show" was locationing in Europe. This was a departure from the standard boom mike system.

The use of these mikes saved the costs of studio recording, which would have been prohibitive, since the unit was moving too fast to transport non-starring actors. Leonard selected them because of their mobility. They can be worn unseen by the individual actors.

Better Than Ours

This is only one of the forward moves Leonard hopes to import as American tv production practices. "While shooting in Europe last year I got my nose rubbed in the facts of life," said Leonard. "I learned that the rest of the world is more technologically advanced than the U.S. in film. Except for lens changes, U.S. technological advancement stopped with sound. We have been using the same kind of sound booms, dollies, tracks and cameras.

"Recently I attended a convention of cameramen and asked why we don't use 16m for tv. They couldn't answer. It's an obvious way to reduce costs, but just from habit they are using 35m because that's what they were using 12 years ago. For tv you don't need it. Yet all of the equipment in the U.S. is for 35m. In the States, 16m is for home movies."

While traveling through the Far East for the first time, Leonard is becoming familiar with the territory for possible use as production backgrounds. He acknowledges the appearance of "European productions, and is quite willing to take American crews overseas.

"I anticipate that before too long features and tv filming would be done concurrently," he continued. "When you go to a foreign country, you could also take extra actors and shoot tv episodes at the same time. There's no reason why you couldn't pick them up. Each year a tv show needs new elements to keep it fresh. The most effective and, I think, honest way is to change the locale—not from one apartment to the suburbs, but to uproot the characters traveling. We take the characters from the studios. We have outgrown the studios. We have never even made proper use of America, the Midwest, the prairie country. Feature films found this out. Now the tv shows have to go out."

Israeli Pix Prod.

Another high spot in Leonard's global swing will be Israel, where he will discuss with government officials the possibility of establishing a motion picture industry there. "They have made a couple of cracks at it, but have not scratched the potential of the export income that can be earned from films," Leonard offered.

Should that project jell, T & L would become coproducers of feature films. This would be the company's first venture in that field. "It's inevitable," Leonard said. "You acquire a studio, overhead and you keep going. We didn't plan it that way. But being in this business is like riding a bicycle—you have to keep riding or fall off."

Leonard regards his whole career—including his transitions from Broadway actor, film gangster and tv and radio comedian and then writer, director and producer as "totally unplanned, accidental."

While he can now sit back and appreciate some of the humor of his professional bounces, the grating in his voice as he related the circumstances indicates that he did not always consider it with a smile.

"In the summer of 1929 I graduated from college," he began. "That fall I got a job as a customers man with a brokerage company." Allowing a pause for the significance of late 1929 on Wall Street to register, Leonard continued, "So I was out of work and had no experience. I had been in amateur theatricals and turned an avocation into a vocation. I got into legit in 1930, as it was starting downhill. I stayed on Broadway 10 years, making progress in a declining industry.

"In 1939 I went to Hollywood and history repeated itself. Again I was making progress in a declining business. Again I was running like mad to break even. Then I went into radio," he submitted with another meaningful pause.

"I decided that there was a thing coming up called television," Leonard added. "I decided to catch it on the rise. The industry then had a patronizing attitude toward this upstart medium and tv had a hard time getting scripts for the low prices it could pay. So I started pulling out half-hour scripts I had written for radio—mostly dramas—and selling them to tv. I had nothing to lose. I was selling everything I could and hocking myself as an actor or director."

Reflecting on his flossy climb, Leonard said, "I now recognize that one of the factors that drove me into producing and directing was to combat the concept of me as a mug. It was not on a conscious level, but submerged. I wanted to demonstrate that I could work with other equipment than a trick dialog and a menacing kisser."

TV Critics

to the NBC brass and the boys responsible for the care & feeding of the out-of-towners was the realization that the tv critic/editor on today's daily, unlike his counterpart of 10 or 15 years ago, is a man of discernment, maturity and responsibility, for the most part well versed in the fundamental basics of broadcasting and alerted to the latest fashions and trends in program content and formatting.

From this standpoint alone the round-robin of junketing proved an enlightening experience. For as one NBC executive put it: "Without a single exception, here was an illustration of man-at-work with a high degree of professionalism; some 30 men covering the tv scene with the same dedication and seriousness as a Capitol Hill correspondent."

Actually, the upgraded status of tv reporting and reviewing in the scheme of daily journalism has been for some time—a growing reflection of readership requirements and response. Survey after survey has been undertaken by publishers in bids to achieve maximum effectiveness and spiral-up circulation figures, and invariably the results come out the same: Next to Page One and the sports section, the readers dig tv the most.

And so the publishers have responded in kind. In contrast to the days when perhaps half-a-dozen from all over the country—and half of those in New York—could be singled out as critics/editors of responsibility, today most major cities boast at least one, in some cases two or three appraisers of the tv scene who bring to their job a knowledgeability, a style and a finesse worthy of their contemporaries on the Washington scene or at a political convention.

Back in the days of early tv and when bigtime radio was still flowering, the average reviewer/editor was strictly run-of-the-mill or less, doubling over from obits, ship news or clerical work, particularly gifted as a paste-up artist. Today his breed is virtually extinct. And in his stead there are the Paul Molloys (Chicago Sun-Times); the Terry Turners (Chicago Daily News); the Cecil Smiths (L.A. Times); a syndicated Hal Humphreys; an enterprising Frisco trio (Terrence O'Flaherty of the Chronicle, Fred Storm of the Call-News and Dwight Newton of the Examiner); a Larry Laurent (Washington Post); a Harry Harris (Philly Inquirer) and a Bob Williams (Philly Bulletin); the Jack Gould-Harriet Van Horne critiques & commentaries on the New York scene; a Larry Wolters (Chi Tribune); a Tony LaCamera (Boston Record American); a Frank Judge (Detroit News); a Del Carnes (Denver Post); a Donald Walwording whose stylized and restrictive Christian Science Monitor yet knows and appreciates the meaningful role of tv in a leisure time society—these and others like them who set their journalistic standards high today typify the tv critic/editor on the American scene.

The aftermath of the recent New York dailies' strike provides an interesting footnote: Since the resumption of publication there have been evidences of staff pruning and retrenchments. But in not a single instance has there been a layoff from the tv section. In some cases, in fact, the departments have been expanded and revitalized.

KSTP-TV

cry from shocked state officials, Gov. Karl Rolvaag subsequently suspended Canfield from his post for 30 days, during which another investigation will be conducted.

In announcing Canfield's suspension, Rolvaag said that the doctor's testimony "has sorely distressed many citizens throughout the state and members of the medical profession as well. At this time it is not possible to ascertain whether these statements made by Dr. Canfield properly reflect his professional competence or judgment. If it does, common sense would suggest that Dr. Canfield is incompetent in his present role and profession."

"Commission hears of 'toilet bowl' therapy" was the way KSTP-TV, Twin Cities NBC affiliate, headlined the Civil Service Board hearing. KSTP news chief Bud Meier described Canfield's testimony as "truly fantastic" and noted, during the station's newscasts, that banning of KSTP cameras was "another serious denial of the people's right to know."

Commenting on the board's refusal to permit filming of the hearing, Bill McGivern, KSTP director of news operations, said, "It's the same old story, the public's right-to-know versus the bureaucrats. But we've always managed to get the story in the past and we always will in the future."

Since 20th-Fox's KMSP-TV uncovered the festering situation at Security Hospital in February, the hospital's officials have been on the hot seat almost continually. Various investigations have been probing the institution's administration, employees and inmates. While the toilet dunking episode was the only incident of cruelty definitely uncovered, there have been fresh charges of lack of medical and psychiatric treatment. In addition, 11 inmates were given conditional paroles by the State Parole Board three weeks ago.

votes. This was far below the total required to win a board seat but it was considerably more than the 33 votes received by Gloria Parker, whose name was also proposed by the board. Miss Parker was accompanied by Barney Young, a dee with a longstanding feud against AB-PT, in which AB-PT was, at one time, a stockholder. Goldenson noted that AB-PT sold its interest in 1951 for $50,000 after Young allegedly failed to make good his offer to buy the stock for "around $1,000,000."

trick, of repeating the first shot of aforerehearsing conference and then following each pair to catch their comments, which did not come off. Alexis Kanner, Peter Birrel, and Tamara Hinchco headed the unfamiliar cast. Otta.

Man of the World

Returning to the schedules after a brief pause, Associated Television's filmed skein, "Man of the World," reinforced its professionally slick, but emotionally barren, impression. Minor changes in format have deprived the photographer hero of his feminine sidekick in the dark-room—who was comely but irrelevant—also the feeble comic relief has had his come-uppance. Otherwise, the strength is still in the wide-ranging location work, which brought Sicilian backgrounds to this one, and the performance of Craig Stevens showed signs of loosening up a little.

The opener concerned the kidnapping of a movie star, Maria (Natasha Parry) by a card-playing bandit, Nicola (Sam Wanamaker). He whipped her away to his hideaway inside a derelict temple, and, when Mike Strait (Stevens) stumbled on the truth, took him prisoner, too. Thereupon the plot was aimed at their eventual escape, which was achieved after one false start. Nicola, who couldn't resist a game of poker, lost the gal to Strait, and having learned his courtesy code from the British, accepted the result.

The script, by John Pudney and Ian Stuart Black, was custom-built for the trade, and Charles Crichton's direction was smoothly efficient. Stevens, as indicated, was sturdy rather than effervescent, and was curiously allowed some mild romantic dalliance with Natasha Parry, maybe to give him a bit of an aura for distaffers. Miss Parry was wasted, having little to do but scramble over rocks, and Sam Wanamaker was a cardboard bandit. The Sicilian atmosphere may have been authentic in place, but it was decidedly comic-opera in sound. Otta.

Tempo

The day after BBC-TV's "This Was the Week That Was" had its final satirical fling before the fall, ABC-TV's "Tempo," a cultural skein which has gained poise and impact in recent months, reshuffled its schedule to satirize the satirists. With Kenneth Griffith as its impresario, it took the form of his interviewing these Tony Tanner as an embryo satirist, and the result was more innocuous than shrewd.

With Joyce Blair coarsely aping "TW3's" resident thrush, Millicent Martin, its fault was the basic one that it was not as witty as the thing it was taking off. It made obvious points about the inexperience of the current crop of performers, about the easy yocks obtainable by merely mentioning the Queen and Harold MacMillan, and about the intellectual advantage of such literary predecessors as Dryden, Pope, and Jonathan Swift. Ross Hill, as the voice of the public, wailed that satire was not constructive—and this old chestnut seemed to be accepted as a valid criticism, when it is not.

In fact, everything said in the show has been said more cogently by one tv critic or another, and "Tempo's" ponderous imitation of "TW3's" informal presentation was not focussed sufficiently to make a sharp point. The implication was that the trend itself was a commercial gimmick that would go out of fashion, whereas the real issue would be to foster the true talents and debunk the false ones. Reginald Collin directed Lloyd Shirley's production with abrupt jumps from performer to performer, so that the flow was jerky, and "Tempo's" host, Leonard Maguire, was not allowed to show his usual gift for crisp comment. Otta.

Play of the Week

Any play that circles around a gal with glasses, allergic to passes, tends to wind up with said female doffing her bifocals in order to trap a man. It was one of the minor merits of Leo Lehman's "Girl with a Difference," which made a pleasing segment of the "Play of the Week" skein from Associated-Rediffusion, that Harriet (Virginia Maskell) kept her bespectacled liberty to the end.

This was, in fact, the difference indicated in the title, for, while marriages crumbled and wolves prowled all around her, Harriet stated a sympathetic case for the gal to whom a bed was the consummation of true love, rather than a convenience. Gauche and fearful of men, Harriet was a source of concern to her colleagues in the travel agency where she worked. Carol (Christine Finn) and Roger (William Dexter) themselves imprisoned in a dead marriage, spurred on a doubting and women-hungry guide, Gilbert (Walter Brown), to make a play for her. But Harriet rejected his amorous advances, and here Lehman provided a fine meaning for the girl, in which she haltingly stated her respect for spinsterhood and then ruefully heard Gilbert going upstairs to a more amenable chick.

The theme had other plot ramifications, rather loosely deployed. Harriet's sister was in the throes of a marital upheaval, leaving her husband for another man, and her super-platonic boy friend, Terry (Henry Davies), made his own bid for independence from his mother by moving to his own apartment.

The climax, which was too gentle and muffled to make much impact, was Harriet's reassertion of her self-confined existence, and the play's chief fault was a tendency to wander garrulously about its highly interesting topic. Virginia Maskell was first-rate as Harriet, skilfully dimming her natural looks and cleverly suggesting the pathos underlying her sincerity. Other thesps, too, were fine, with Christine Finn scoring as the frustrated Carol and Henry Davies surmounting the difficulties of the apron-tied Terry. William Dexter and Walter Brown, with less most, stayed in the picture.

David Boisseau's direction was also excellent, providing neat visual touches which established a convincingly real framework. Otta.

New Talent Was Born

Paar, Johnny Desmond, Fran Allison, Patti Page, Maguire Sisters and Julius LaRosa first were seen in the early stints, later graduating to a variety of work in entertainment fields. Don McNeill, the Daddy of them all in radio and later moving into television, like Rowe has presented numerous newcomers throughout the years who have gone into top work from his show.

When Rowe started his show, in November of 1952, he was the West Coast counterpart for Jack Paar. Paar, at that time, was also teamed with Betty Clooney. Later Will Rogers Jr. took the Paar spot, when he moved into other work. Carson went on from his five minute break to sub for Rowe on "Pan Pac" when Red went network with a daytimer. Moore, as with McNeill, first worked in Chicago on an early, early circuit called "Club Matinee," which formed the base for his New York call and future stardom.

In another area, Rowe noted the use of shows like "Pan Pac" to test new performers or product and to give known performers an opportunity to break in an act or material that may be a departure from their normal direction. For instance, Maureen O'Hara first went on the Rowe show when she turned to singing, prior to making recordings and doing a Broadway musical. Jazz organist Earl Grant and actress Miyoshi Umeki, additionally, made their first television appearances on the Rowe show, as did the individual members of the Williams Bros. when they separated their act.

Currently, Rowe is giving opportunities to other performers by booking several girls for two week stints as femcee of the show, replacing regular Gerry Johnson who last left. Barbara Franklin initiated the new schedule, followed by Ruth Warrick, Marie Chill, Gloria Lord and Lynn Castle. Rowe and producer Phil Benedetti, who also produced a similar show some time ago in Chicago, will later select one of the girls to appear as regular co-emcee with Rowe.

News Media Stirring Up Irish in Pre-JFK Background Shooting

Dublin, May 21.

President Kennedy's visit to Ireland in late June already has Irish news media all steamed up. Apart from heavy local coverage by radio and tv, requests are coming in from overseas for coverage and Telefis Eireann (Irish TV) will import additional mobile telecasting units to assist coverage in Dublin and at New Ross, hometown of JFK's grandfather.

Coverage has already brought one protest from New Ross residents. They claim that an American tv unit has been down to film background material and focussed attention on the poorer aspects of the town and on tinkers (gypsies) in the neighborhood instead of presenting a "correct" impression of the area. Unit is not named.

In official quarters everything is being done to make the President's visit an impressive one and to keep everything formal and friendly. "The First Family" and "The President Strikes Back" recordings are currently taboo on Irish radio.

Sunshind, Lee Rich

such topical reviews as "Second City," "Premise," "Establishment" and others readily available.

Agency exec Weir blamed it on the timidity of the advertiser. He said his agency was high on "Second City's review troup, and tried to sell clients on a tv series. They were afraid and backed off, he said.

Rich told of an abortion-themed tv show that a Benton & Bowles client stuck with, only to receive 600 letters of complaint—the advertiser, not the network that produced it.

Countered Sunshind, "You want all 60,000,000 (viewers) to love you? 600 wrote you; maybe 24,000,000 liked it. And—like a McCarthy witch hunt—you let those 600 letters drive you right up a tree."

Rich was called up on a couple of other contentions. Stating that the webs totally controlled programming these days (with Sunshind this time in agreement), ABC's Melnick argued that there are currently three networks with enough ad coin for two and a half, and that the buyers therefore are calling the shots in a lot of cases.

In answer to Sunshind's charge that the networks were afraid to gamble, Dunn said his web's go with Judy Garland an hour a week was a big gamble; Werner cited the Dick Boone drama anthology similarly; and Melnick said, "I have more pilots than Howard Hughes."

At the close, Sunshind and Rich were at it again, this time on ratings with the moderator charging re the numbers, "No sane man in your position could but it."

Rich countered that his agency's execs and the clients were not "idiots," that they used the ratings merely as an "indication" of a show's popularity (an indication of whether to take it off or leave it on the air, interrupted Sunshind), that the agency spent $250,000 a year in various types of research, and one client of the agency over the years has spent $10,000,000 in research.

As examples of research in support of and or besides ratings, Rich told of a two-year blackout of tv in one market by a client (in a switch to Sunday supplements) and yearlong experiments with blackouts of nighttime and daytime tv. In all cases, sales of the product, or products, involved, was the only criteria.

Brit. Court Tosses Out Libel Action Vs. A-R

London, May 21.

Associated-Rediffusion won judgment with costs in a High Court libel action brought against it by Omar Ahmed, owner of an East End club. In an A-R program, "This Week," two years ago, which dealth with vice in Stepney, East London, a photograph of Ahmed's club was screened.

Ahmed claimed that this suggested that prostitution was permitted on his premises. Jury found that the tv film and commentary were not defamatory to Ahmed and added a rider that the club owner had tried to run a decent club, but circumstances were against him.

Catholic TV Center Gets Hub Channel 38

Washington, May 21.

FCC awarded Boston's UHF channel 38 to the Boston Catholic Television Center Inc., a non-commercial educational outlet.

Station initially will present programs for in-school use on a sustaining basis but hopes for future sponsorship from business organizations.

Under FCC rules the sponsored programs can't promote products and services but can give a simple announcement of the sponsor's name, Commission said.

Foremost's 35-Market 'Fractured Flickers' Buy

Hollywood, May 21.

Foremost Dairies has signed one of the largest regional syndication deals in recent months with Desilu Sales on "Fractured Flickers."

Foremost bought one-minute in 35 markets, the roster including Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Albuquerque, Bakersfield, Chico El Paso and Topeka. Time clearance for the Jay Ward-Bill Scott first-run series are now being made for Foremost through its agency, Guild, Bascom & Monfigli.

KGLM's Simple Rate Card

Hollywood, May 21.

A simplified rate card trimmed down to 14 lines of two categories is being introduced by radio station KGLM. Rate cards now in practice contain more than 10 times this many classifications and discounts, according to Kevin Sweeney, station prez and former head of Radio Advertising Bureau. He contends that because of its low rates and small budgets, radio is expensive to administer.

"It takes as much time to buy a $30 announcement on radio as a $300 announcement on television," said Sweeney. Only categories on the new rate card are one-minute and 30-second announcements, with only even dollars specified.

Alter $50,000,000 British TV Tax Bill to Lessen Burden of Small Guy

London, May 21.

Postmaster General Reginald Bevins has been busy turning somersaults and putting teeth back into the TV Bill which he is in process of trying to get through the House of Commons. Latest amendments, which would give greater powers of program content control to the Independent Television Authority and alter the proposed tax conditions to shift the burden a little more off the shoulders of the small companies on to the four majors, go before the Commons in the report stage of the Bill's progress tomorrow (22).

It appears that the lobbies have not remained inactive despite the original shape of the new bill and that they have in fact succeeded in shifting the PAIG on a number of points. His latest alterations—which he hinted might be possible when he defended the format in the recent Committee stage in the Commons—show concessions to the admen. He now intends that the assessment of the program contractors' revenue for the purposes of the levy will not include the 15% commission deducted by the ad agents for their services. Die-hard agency toppers, while sighing with the relief due to such a possible success, still refuse to forget that such a mistake was made in the first place.

The second change is hiking the "free slice" before taxation $700,000 to $4,200,000 which is intended to alleviate the regional companies. He is not making a governmental sacrifice however, because part of that change is to tax the next $16,800,000 of profits at 25% (instead of the next $22,400,000 at 22-1-2%) and all above $21,000,000 at 45%, (instead of 40%), on all over $25,900,000). This way he conceden to criticism that the small regionals would be squeezed too hard while still reckoning on raking in the more than $50,000,000 a year revenue he originally aimed at to curb profits that critics of commercial tv have long insisted were "bloated."

Labor opposition MP's are, as expected, more and more happy with the proposals but Conservative backwoodsmen with lobbies in rep, are in fact prepping for another battle in the debating chamber on the principle of basing the exchequer tax on receipts rather than on profits. One line of argument seems to be that while the new proposals seem destined to help the smaller companies, the expense to the majors will be such its reach outside the metro area and to establish its call letters in the minds of a populace that had long ago committed KSTP and WCCO to memory.

WTCN-TV's Indie Status

Pro baseball also earned WTCN a slot on the CATV systems in such towns as Rochester, Mankato and LaCrosse, Minn., and Eau Claire, Wis., and became the foundation on which WTCN has been building a sports identity. In addition to professional wrestling (very big in the city where roasting champ Verne Gagne resides), film retrospectives of the pro football Vikings, films of the olden "Golden Gophers" (1930-40 vintage) of the U. of Minnesota, the high school hockey tournaments and several high school basketball meets, WTCN's sports image might be said to encompass also such syndie shows as "Bold Journey" and "Adventure", the latter a melding of two off-network series, John Gunther's "High Road" and Jack Douglas' "Seven League Boots." Back-to-back in a 6:30 p.m. strip they're clocking solid ratings and commercially are BBO.

The pair of studio wrestling shows packaged by Gagne have been notably successful on a year-round basis, the Saturday night open getting 70,000-80,000 homes and consistently running second in the period behind Jackie Gleason, and the Monday night entry delivering over 60,000 homes opposite "Lucy," NBC Movies and "Hillbillies."

Along with sports, the station has built an afternoon niche for itself with a kidshow block and maintains a first or second place status from 4 p.m. to 6:30. The shows include semi-live "Peppy" and "Dick Tracy" strips, "Mickey Mouse Club," "Superman" and "Whirlybirds." But probably most successful of all is the noontime kidshow, "Lunch With Casey," established before the affiliation switch, which often comes up with as high a rating as all the competition combined.

WTCN has a built feature film library of 1,500 titles and has been programming a total of 17 per week. With WCCO-TV going with "Steve Allen" and KMSP with the off-network hours against "Tonight" on KSTP, the Time-Life station has the weeknight late-movie franchise all to itself and claims third place in the 10 p.m. to midnight sweepstakes on a seven-day basis.

But it is still baseball that has made the big difference and, as Swift phrases it, "kept us from losing our whole audience at once." Last year, the baseball audience went as high as 70% on a Sunday afternoon when the Twins were playing (who else?) the Yankees. That's according to an ARB spot-incidental. In prime time, the high share was 69% and 384,000 homes for a Wednesday night game with the White Sox. Average share on 12 considerations taken during the 1968 season was 58.6%, and that's without the glory of two pre-game shows and one post-game.

The story would seem to contain a trade secret for all ailing independents. Get someone to bring professional baseball to town and, by all means, grab the rights.

20th-TV's $500,000 On Off-Web Sales

20th-Fox TV has wrapped up $500,000 in syndicated program sales over the past couple of weeks.

"Bus Stop," meantime, has been sold to KHJ-TV, Los Angeles; WHIO-TV, Dayton; WFLA-TV, Tampa; and KGGM-TV, Albuquerque. "Follow The Sun" has also been sold to WNHC-TV, New Haven; KHJ-TV, L.A.; and WHYE, Syracuse. "Adventures in Paradise" has been sold to WTVC, Chattanooga; WSB-TV, Atlanta; and WTAR-TV, Norfolk, bringing the total number of markets sold on this series to 63.

ing, flourished as a tv commercial company.

Beveridge contended that the differences stemmed from Carr's desire to head sales and manage the studio, and asserted both functions can't be handled satisfactorily by one man without one of them suffering. He declared "I put a policy into effect that he could only handle sales. I had control of the board at that time. But Carr got the necessary proxies, and at the last board meeting, I was fired. I am the largest individual shareholder in Canada."

Beveridge said his position was "completely untenable," that he is now out of the company on a "forced leave of absence." "They will say I am retiring. It's not true. I'm fired," he said.

Aug. 5 Premiere For Jamaica TV

London, May 21.

Television is coming to Jamaica on Aug. 5, the country's independence day, and already 17,000 receivers have been ordered by local dealers, according to Roy Lawrence, sales director of the Jamaican Broadcasting Corp., who arrived in London last week.

Opining that tv would change the country overnight, Lawrence said Jamaica has little in the way of evening entertainment and tv is bound to make a terrific impact. The Government only recently granted import licenses for receivers, and the order for 17,000 sets was only the beginning.

Lawrence, who is here visiting JBC's overseas sales reps, Television International Enterprises (Sales), Ltd., is also to act as one of the commentators of the West Indian cricket tour this summer.

There is also news of a television boom in Trinidad, where, according to a report from the director of statistics, 8,776 tv receivers were imported into the country up to Jan. 31 last. The Trinidad-Tobago Television Co. began transmissions last November and the programs are being received in Grenada, where receivers are also being sold. The Trinidad outfit is also repped by TIE.

Charlotte, N. C. — Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Co., owners of WBT, WBTV, and WBTW, has adopted a policy of editorializing for the first time in its history. An editorial board will determine the content. Former Charlotte Observer Associate Editor Rupert Gilbert will prepare the text. Alan Newcomb will deliver the editorials on the air.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Ben Holman, CBS News reporter beaten up by Black Muslims in Harlem last week, is back on his job.

Holman was treated for cuts and a ripped following the beating he took while covering an assignment at Harlem's Theresa Hotel. Holman, a Negro, joined the CBS News staff about three months ago. He had previously worked for the Chicago Daily News, where he did a series of articles on the Black Muslims.

Holman apparently had been recognized by some zealous Muslims who objected to his newspaper articles. He was in Harlem to cover an outdoor Muslim meeting and to interview the Rev. A. D. King, brother of Martin Luther King and himself a leader of the anti-segregation movement.

The International Radio & Television Society today (Wed.) holds its 1963 "Broadcasting Follies" at the Hotel Roosevelt. Jack Sterling of WCBS Radio, N. Y., will emcee the spoof, this time of the ad biz.

Produced by Tony Pallone and Howard Monkin, the "Follies" will feature singers Dick Williams, Nancy Radcliffe, Kevin Gavin, Betty Colby and Gene Stuck and comedy dancer Lou Wills Jr.

Luncheon in the grand ballroom of the hotel will also see installation of new IRTS officers. Sam Cook Digges, administrative veep of CBS Films, is prexy.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R.-N.Y.) has proposed a compromise in the longstanding effort of television to cover Senate sessions.

Javits introduced a resolution to allow live coverage of the Senate chamber when "great debates" on major issues are underway. The Senate Rules and Administration Committee would decide whether individual issues were sufficiently "major" to merit letting the tv cameras in.

Javits noted there are only about 300 seats for the public in the Senate gallery. "The right to witness public business should not be confined only to those whom the Senate chamber will hold.

Author-producer Allan Dowling is producing one-hour tv special based on the 28-year-old international music contest for violinists and pianists sponsored by Queen Elizabeth, Queen Mother of Belgium. Dowling obtained permission to televise the event from the Queen, who consented to appear on tv for the first time on this show.

Dowling, producer of such films as "Donovan's Brains" and coauthor of the recent CBS-TV contests, "Cabeza de Vaca," said he was negotiating for the American presentation to be shown on NBC or CBS, both of whom are interested in the show. The program will feature winners of the contest and established musical artists. Dowling is filming the show in Belgium this month. It has already been set for telecasting on German tv.

Sen. Warren Magnuson (D.-Wash.) will give the keynote luncheon address at the National Community Television Assn. convention June 11.

Also speaking during the June 10-14 NCTA meet in Seattle will be Dr. Royal L. Garff, professor of marketing and speech at the Univ. of Utah, and Loren B. Stone, manager of the Univ. of Washington's educational tv station KCTS.

NCTA has also announced three judges for its 1963 National Awards Program.

They are Henry J. Kaufman of Henry J. Kaufman & Associates ad agency in Washington, D.C.; Bryson Rash, WBC-AM-TV and NBC and Robert K. Richards, president of Richards Associates public relations firm.

International Television Show, slated for Berlin from June 24 to June 30, has drawn pledges of participation from 16 countries at this time.

Show, organized in technical cooperation with the broadcasting and television station, Sender Freies Berlin, will feature a variety of awards including a topical event award for the tv production corresponding best to the ideals of "Freedom and Justice."

Speakers at the summer meeting of Wisconsin Broadcasters Assn., June 27-29, will include FCC commissioner Frederick Ford and Radio Advertising Bureau prexy Ed Bunker. There will also be a session on WVHC, Mt. Carmel, Ill. Conclave is being held this year at the Northwoods and programs conducted by John Burbot, owner-manager of ornate Hotel, Three Lakes, Wis.

NAB has hired the handicapped to monitor stations subscribing to its Radio and Television Codes.

NAB Code Authority reached a monitoring agreement with Air Check Services which has tape monitoring facilities in over 400 cities in 50 states.

Approximately 90% of the firm's employees are disabled and 10% are visually handicapped, NAB said.

Nielsen Ratings

over 300 of Mexico's 400 radio stations asked for a suspension of all surveys and ratings pending standardization of techniques. Situation grew out of too many surveys being made, all under different formulas, and all with different results.

Suggested solutions are that the Chamber of Broadcasters take over the ratings and surveys as a specific function. Another suggestion is that they at least supervise ratings and lay down guide lines and procedures. Another point, illustrating the fruitlessness of current methods, is that International Research Associates publishes El Radiometro, but that stations listed are not identified, at owners request. It was pointed out that identification would shut off cooperation in surveys and ratings especially in Spanish speaking countries.

Television ratings and surveys are scheduled next for scrutiny by both groups.

Columbus—Jack Denton, whose "Jack Denton Show" has been aired on WLW-C tv here for 10 months, has been replaced by the "AM Show" in the 90-minute 9 a.m. Monday through Friday slot. Walter Bartlett, station manager, said the change was made so that the program can be aimed more directly to women.

FCC Takes Wraps Off Plan To Lick AM-FM Population Explosion

Washington, May 21.

FCC unwrapped its many pronged plan for solving the AM and FM population explosion.

Finalization of the proposed rule making would lift the AM freeze.

Overall effect of the AM plan, according to the commission, would be to bring service to AM-less areas and to conserve assignments for later parcelling to new communities. Existing services would also be protected from "substandard encroachment."

This is to be brought about by so-called "go-no go" prohibited overlap system applied to future daytime AM assignments. No application would be accepted unless it met contour criteria and provided service to 25% of the contour area. It would also have to come under a ceiling imposed by the commission on the number of stations in each community according to population.

Nighttime applications would have to meet the 25% area service requirement and could not raise the RSS limitation of other stations.

To solve the FM problem and begin a crackdown on AM-FM duplication the commission proposed a plan under which FM stations in cities of more than 100,000 population could not devote more than half their broadcast time to programs duplicated on AMs in the same city.

The rule would apply only to cities with no FM channel vacancies.

The commission also declared it intends at some future date to begin discouraging AM-FM owners, but doesn't now feel FM is economically viable enough for present action.

Looking again to future pronouncements, FCC said it plans additional rule making on applicants' financial qualifications; city signal requirements; dual city identification and studio location; and additional engineering data on applications.

Comments are invited on the proposed rules by July 17.

Commissioner Rosel Hyde dissented to the action; Robert T. Bartley concurred in part and dissented in part; Frederick Ford issued a separate concurring statement.

Schenectady—Mrs. H. M. Rosendaal, of suburban Niskayuna, a sister of Pennsylvania's Governor William Scranton, has been elected president of the Mohawk-Hudson Council on Educational Television, operating WMHT. She succeeds the Rev. William Gold, Unitarian minister.

NBC's Long Tinted Summer

these days. Film generally shows up better in color, and this, now, seems to please RCA. And film, not live, makes it easier to summer color reposts.

The NBC-TV schedule on nights reads big on tint: On Sundays everything is colorized, save for the half-hour "Grindl"; Monday it's the movies (at least 70% of the 52-weeks, including repeats, will be color-tied), and Mitch Miller at 10. Only the half-hour David Wolper "Hollywood Story" documentaries won't be in color.

Tuesdays is the worst color night NBC has: Only the alternating Andy Williams-Bell hours are in color. Wednesday sees tint for 90-minutes — "The Virginian."

Thursday "Hazel" and Kraft-Como are in color, and, incidentally, "Hazel" is the only tint program on the shed for '63-'64 that will not be seen in the summer; sponsor Ford replaces it with another color half-hour, possibly "Lively Ones" next year too.

Fridays the Bob Hope-Chrysler hours (save for the six variety stanzas) are in color. Saturday, Joey Bishop and the movies (over 70% here, too) will be tinted.

It's interesting to follow NBC's philosophy about the programs which will not be seen in color. Built of them come at 7:30, a tough nighttime hour under any circumstances. Most of them, also, are new shows. Web execs feel that the heavy expense of tint merely becomes an extra financial burden in the case of programs, which not only have to fight a time slot but the very characteristic of being new. If the show has to be cancelled, in mid-season, then the color investment can never be paid off.

The Hope and Como dramas, which will be new, are, on the other hand, firm 52-week deals. Under these terms, NBC feels the risk has been taken out and color becomes worthwhile, hopefully for everybody concerned.

There are also some programs, like "Espionage" and "11th Hour" that the network feels are aesthetically better in monochrome.

market place with little or nothing to sell. He learned that the dropout is the last to be hired, the first to be fired and why they represent two-thirds of this country's 4,000,000 unemployed.

Then comes the thought: "If I can't get a job I can always go into the Army."

Palmer then visits the Army Induction and Examining Center. Dropouts find the Armed Forces qualification test a high hurdle.

Palmer concluded on this note: "The dropout is the great failure of our educational system . . . the solution is slow, too slow and it's taking an unbelievable toll in a nation and state that can ill afford it." This documentary was not a glossy or flossy picture. Palmer took the camera into the key spots where the dropouts are found and talked to the people who know the seriousness of the problem.

And, most important, his subject—or rather "victim"—realized his plight and in telling his story in his own way pointed up the necessity for taking steps—at whatever cost—to combat this evil.

This program was another in a series of documentary specials produced by WSB-TV's News Department. Luce.

CRACKER BASEBALL
With Ed Thilenius, Randy Jackson
Producer: Ray Gabor
Director: Bob Doty
Mon., 7:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WAGA-TV, Atlanta

Atlanta baseball fans (the kind who stay home) will get to see their diamond heroes, the Atlanta Crackers, on 20 television outings this year, via WAGA-TV, CBS outlet and Storer chain outlets here.

Ed Thilenius, station's sports director and a topnotch sports spieler along with it, does the play-by-play and is abetted by Randy Jackson, who supplies technical aspects and what's going on on field of play, plus color and anecdotes.

Thilenius and Jackson make an excellent team and work with four cameras in Ponce de Leon Park, home of the Crackers. They occupy a booth with the Zoomars, which scans the entire field. First base line "wing" camera also is equipped with zoom lens. Third base camera has a long lens and the fourth one is the standard job behind home plate.

On the whole camera work rates a nod, but in one recent instance, there were eight players. Ninth guy, unseen, was busy camping under a fly ball. Things like this are bound to happen, of course.

While game time at Ponce Park is 7:30 p.m., Thilenius and/or Jackson go to work at 7 p.m. with 15 minutes of inside baseball, an unsponsored instructional session featuring Harry (The Hat) Walker, manager of the International League Crackers, who have a tieup with the St. Louis Cardinals. They use film clips and Walker, an oldtimer, gives tips on batting, pitching, sliding and playing different positions, using his young ballplayers to demonstrate.

This is followed by a 10-minute Warmup Time, during which prominent guests are introduced along with outstanding ballplayers, both hometowners and visitors. This segment is sponsored by Findley Automatic Transmission Co., which also picks up tab for a 10-minute post-game Scoreboard, including recap of Cracker game, other IL scores and big league game results.

Crackers have been doing quite well and are getting good turnstile support. All televised games are designated Ladies Nights, when femmes are admitted for a 50c service charge. On night caught, 3,000 fans were in the stands. Luce.

CALLAGHAN
With Morley Callaghan, Nathan Cohen
Producer: Daryl Duke
30 Mins., Sun. 10:30 p.m.
CBC, from Toronto

"In the '27-'28 period Hemingway went to Spain, Fitzgerald went to Hollywood and you went into silence," remarked Nathan Cohen to Morley Callaghan in this interesting straight interview by Toronto Star's entertainment editor with the Toronto writer U. S. critic Edmund Wilson considers "one of the living masters of the short story." He was an expatriate in Paris with Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Joyce. He's published 13 novels, three books of short stories and the current reminiscence "That Summer in Paris."

"Those were the spiritually depressed years," replied Callaghan. "Hemingway didn't do himself any good fooling around there. He was ridiculous as a political thinker. . . . I became cynical, inert and unpopular with my friends."

Asked "Is your fineness of style not a hobble to you?" Callaghan retorted, "I think my writing in 'That Summer in Paris' ripples along as freshly as if I were still 22. If you have the impulse in your heart you won't need to go in for a lot of fancy writing. . . . I never look back. My only ambition now is to write a good book. . . . I like a fight but I separate attacks into dumb, stupid but honest ones such as some written about me here in my native city, and malicious attacks. . . . like a fool I rise to that bait."

Noting that stories he wrote at 22 are now being published in England, Callaghan remarked, "I've been lucky. I've always had about four people (referring to critics) who liked my work." That ended a fairly revealing seg, well piloted by Cohen and producer Daryl Duke. Gord.

Miss Connell carried it off with such skill that it didn't seem stale.

The silent movie that occupied the rest of the show perhaps came closer to being memorable than anything Caesar has done this season, but he was unable to sustain the light touch and made it too often apparent that he'd accept a laugh on any level. The supporting cast of Miss Connell, Gordon Connell and Karen Morrow played it in the proper mock serious spirit.

Situation had Caesar evolving from the Barrymore type to the Durante through over-indulgence in champagne, and the basic failing of the skit was that he handled the first guise better than the second. His silent movie routines give Caesar the justified latitude to play his comedy broadly, and he had a peak moment drinking champagne from one slipper and slurping spaghetti from another. Les.

Danny Thomas Show

Songwriter Harry Ruby is one of the "best loved men in Hollywood", a cliche though this may be it's not often applied but in the frustrated ballplayer's case it's sincere. It's assumed that Danny Thomas, sparked by that affection for the songsmith-cum-first baseman, wanted to demonstrate his fraternal regard for Ruby and thus the latter played himself on the instant Maxwell pitchman's Monday nighter over CBS-TV. As a thesp, Ruby's a great songwriter.

His tiptop catalog was the fulcrum of the plot, such as it was, which quite obviously achieved two things—it gave Ruby a showcase and his catalog excellent ASCAP performance credits. Fact is that any show-wise viewer—and they're more hip than ever—would know that Thomas didn't have to make such a Federal case out of singing Ruby's songs. This is a tipoff on the plot weakness. A saloon star like Thomas or a 4-F lamenter from Major Bowes may perform any pop song in any properly licensed environment; Thomas of all people didn't have to cajole or plead for the "privilege" thereof. But sans that premise there'd be no Ruby showcasing. And as the man said, he's genuinely one of the best liked gents in the business—and Thomas, Sheldon Leonard et al. wanted Ruby to get a plug. What's wrong with that; it was a pleasant enough interlude, albeit not socko. Abel.

a group of refugees which claims 250,000 members, and the Former Residents of Over-Silesia, a similar group claiming over 100,000 members, both protested to the station that such personal queries were out of the business of the documentary maker, and would stir up animosities and resentments among the former Silesians, and might even make them think that it would be possible to regain their homelands shortly.

(The organizations, which generally collect dues from their members, try to keep awake memories among the people who have been expelled or have had to flee from East Germany, have get-togethers locally and usually one big annual reunion, and also exercise some political power since they try to sway their members for whichever party they feel will do most for the former refugees in getting them jobs, houses, pensions, etc.)

Neven-du Mont, backed by his Hamburg outlet for the pair of documentaries to be aired over the First Television Network, went ahead with the project.

With a crew of only four, the combination reporter-filmmaker went to Breslau and spent six weeks shooting the first part of the documentary, titled "Poles in Breslau—Portrait of a City."

This initial part was aired for 45 minutes on May 7 over the first German TV Network — and the furious protests are being heard all over Germany.

It's claimed that the show presents Breslau "as the Communists would like to see it"—the true study revealing that in 18 years since East Germany turned the city over to the Poles, over 40% of the residents are Poles who were born there, that the city has a Polish instead of a German character, even though the Poles have tried to retain the familiar landmarks of the once-renowned German center.

The same two refugee organizations have protested again that the show is "Communist propaganda" and that it implies that the 17 million Germans living behind the Iron Curtain will be swallowed up and lose their identity with the free West Germans.

Even the association "Indivisible Germany" has protested that the documentary shows a too attractive picture of Breslau as a Polish city today.

Neven du Mont has retorted that he has only shown an accurate portrayal of the city as it exists today—and that he plans to go ahead with the second part, which will show the lives of former Breslau residents now in West Germany, in spite of all the objections.

So far, he noted, 85% of the letters, 60% of the telegrams, and 90% of the press has backed him in telling the story of Breslau and its ex-inhabitants today.

Also, he concluded, most of the questionnaires he has received from the former Breslau residents have been filled in by people who say they do not belong to either of the protesting refugee organizations anyhow.

as to make possible their going into the red within a year or two. To avoid this, goes this argument, the major companies might find themselves forced to cut down on programming expenses.

Other changes the PMG is proposing will give the Independent TV Authority direct powers to ban programs which do not abide by the code governing the use of violence on tv. He also proposes disciplining companies which allow not only too much ad time, but ads in spots which "detract from the value of the programs as a medium of information, education, and entertainment . . ."

Rule 3 of the newly-enlarged code lays down certain programs which shall not, under any circumstances, be broken by ads. Religious items will most certainly be included in this category, although at time of writing the full list of such programs is still to be worked out by the PMG in concert with the ITA.

Clear Educ'l TVer In News Funneling

Hollywood, May 21.

KVIE, the Sacramento educational tv station accused of violating its status as an ETV channel by funneling news tapes to commercial stations, has received a clean bill of health from the FCC. The formal charge against KVIE had been filed with the FCC by Herbert Aller, business rep of IATSE cameramen's local 730.

KVIE had disclaimed any violation of its standing as an educational tv station, asserting it supplied tapes of certain news events such as the Governor's press conference, as a service and to defray part of the cost involved.

Ben F. Waple, acting secretary of the FCC, notified Aller an investigation had been conducted, and the commission saw no violation of regulations governing non-profit corporations, in the activities of KVIE.

BRITISH INVADE YANK MARKET

WB Label Drops 200G on 'Hot Spot,' Abandons Original B'way Cast LP

Despite its $200,000-plus investment, Warner Bros. Records' enthusiasm for the Broadway musical, "Hot Spot," has cooled off. The dishery, which came up with half of the financing for the tuner, has decided against doing the original cast album. The tuner is scheduled to end its Broadway run Saturday (25).

The show, which stars Judy Holliday, opened on Broadway April 19 to generally unfavorable notices. The score was written by Mary Rodgers (music) and Martin Charnin (lyrics).

It's not yet been determined whether WB has a clause out on the commitment. The show has already passed the 21-performance mark which usually requires a dishery to fulfill its obligation on an original cast album grooving. In this case, however, WB is a 50% partner in the show so who's going to sue who? "Hot Spot" would have been the WB label's first original Broadway cast album.

In an almost similar instance, Capitol Records, last year, recorded "Kwamina" after the show had closed on Broadway.

The "Hot Spot" issue is a reverse of "Tovarich," another current Broadway tuner, which opened in New York without an original cast album deal. The album rights were finally picked up by Capitol Records after the show was in its 16th week on Broadway. Cap recorded the album Sunday (19).
